The procedure with respect to those cases is this: The property is turned back to the owners, who within 6 months must file an application with the Interstate Commerce Commission to submit a plan for reorganization. They are allowed 12 months in which to do that. If at the end of 18 months the creditors and the debtors of the roads now in bankruptcy have not reached an adjustment of their difficulties, the whole matter goes back to the Interstate Commerce Commission which handled it in the first place. I am now largely guessing, but I wish to discuss the amount which I think is involved in the case of the important railroads. In 1939 and 1940, under the authority of the Bankruptcy Act, the Interstate Commerce Commission determined the value of the railroads involved on the basis of their earning power. In that determination the Commission considered mostly—not entirely, but mostly—the earnings during the depression period. As a result the capitalization was scaled down. Then came the war and the enormous earnings of the war period. As the chairman of the committee has repeatedly stated, while the total face value of the securities wiped out by the Interstate Commerce Commission was $2,500,000,000, that was not the real value. I think in many cases there was common stock—and in some instances preferred stock—which under no circumstances would have any value. If this bill had been the law the junior bondholders and the stockholders—preferred and common—would have received $700,000,000 more than they have been allowed under the valuation fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is my best judgment, based on the hearings, that if this bill passes $80,000,000 more will be available for the stockholders and junior bondholders of the New York, New Haven & Hartford; about $60,000,000 in the case of the Rock Island; $100,000,000 in the case of the Missouri Pacific; and probably $75,000,000 in the case of the Frisco. That is a guess. I do not want anyone to take it as anything more than my best judgment based upon the testimony in the hearings.

I hope the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] is present, because I am about to discuss the court situation.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Is it not true that securities of the face value of $850,000,000 have already been wiped out?

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. If something is not done along this line to refinance the bonds which carry a high rate of interest, and if those bonds continue to carry high rates of interest instead of being refinanced when lower rates of interest can be had, then when we go from good times into a depression, or whatever one may choose to call it, many of the railroads will go into bankruptcy. They cannot pay the high rates of interest. So long as a railroad is in court, it is not possible to refinance the bonds.

Mr. REED. The Senator from South Carolina is correct.

There is one thing on which there is no disagreement. Generally speaking, the railroads have improved their financial position out of their war earnings. In not a single case have any of the war earnings been applied toward improving the financial position of the major railroads now in the hands of the courts under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act. We are trying to get the remaining cases which have not been decided back for another look.

Let me say to the Senator from Colorado——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am listening patiently for more enlightenment on the legal question from the great authority from the State of Kansas. Both my ears are wide open.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Colorado and I are both farmers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. And good ones.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] referred to a decision of the circuit court of appeals in Denver, dealing with the Denver & Rio Grande. That case was considered by the Supreme Court within the past few days, and the decision was reversed. Let me read to the Senator from Colorado why it was reversed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator has already read it, but I shall be glad to hear him reread it, because the Senator is a good reader, and his voice is very entertaining.

Mr. REED. In its decision the Supreme Court said this:

> Our construction of the chief provisions of the section was handed down in March 1943.

That was in the Western Pacific and Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul reorganization cases.

> Although the results of reorganizations under the section, as thus construed, have been criticized as unfortunate, and changes have been suggested, no different legislation has been enacted.

That is the trouble. The Court interpreted the law as we enacted it, according to its best judgment. But the Court says that no additional legislation has been enacted, and it emphasizes that point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Does the Senator from Kansas hold it against the Senator from Colorado because no legislation has been enacted?

Mr. REED. I am trying hard to enlighten the Senator from Colorado, and I hope he will not make it any more difficult than necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I appreciate the fact that it is very difficult.

Mr. REED. On page 6 of its loose-leaf decision the Court says:

> No new enactments have changed the law since those decisions on March 15, 1943.

I regret that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] is not present. I wish to read the comment of the senior circuit judge at Chicago. I believe that is in the sixth circuit. The Rock Island trusteeship case was before that court. The attorney for the Rock Island receiver and trustee was speaking with the court. The attorney for the Rock Island said:

> If we follow that line of thought, it is impossible for me to say or understand how the Rock Island can be reorganized within less than 10 years from now.

Judge Evans, who is the senior presiding judge of the circuit court of appeals at Chicago, uttered these remarkable words:

> Maybe so; but there is also the thought that if it takes 10 years to get it right, it is pretty nearly right to do it.

Then he proceeds to discuss the two reorganizations which have caused so much criticism, and which have been almost an open scandal:

> I had quite a little part in the St. Paul Railroad, and it was always shocking to think that there should be such an absolute denial of any right for any stockholder, notwithstanding that money was just rolling into the St. Paul and the North Western Railroad, but, notwithstanding that, it was decided, "You are out." That don't set very well on your conscience. If you did it wrong, it is about time you correct it.

As nearly as I can make a guess at the value which might have been given the St. Paul stockholders and the North Western stockholders, it is my best judgment that if the courts had been operating under the proposed law instead of the bankruptcy statute there would have been $150,000,000 more available to the stockholders of the Milwaukee than they got, and $150,000,000 in the case of the Chicago & North Western.

That is what it means for us to enact new legislation, which the Supreme Court has almost suggested that we do. This situation is not the fault of the courts. I join in the criticism of the Interstate Commerce Commission uttered by the Senator from Montana.

I wish to refer to another matter very briefly. I do not find much opposition to the enactment of this bill. Time is of the essence. The next big trusteeship to come on is that of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad. It is my belief that if we enact this bill $60,000,000 more will be available for the junior bondholders and the stockholders of the Rock Island than will be given them if the bankruptcy proceeding is terminated on June 30, which is 15 days away.

It is my thought that if the Senate passes this bill today, it will not be out of line for the Senator from Montana, the chairman of the committee, to advise Judge Igoe, just for his information, of the passage of the bill by the Senate. As a matter of fact, Judge Igoe has postponed final approval two or three times so as to give us a chance to legislate. We are so close to enactment of the bill now that I do not think it would be out of the way to advise Judge Igoe, for his information, so that he could take that matter into consideration.

About 2 or 3 weeks ago a personal representative of the president of the Burlington Railroad, Mr. Ralph Budd, a very good friend of mine, talked to me about the reorganization of the Denver, Rio Grande & Western, in which the Burlington Railroad is interested. He was considerably disturbed, because the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy has a very considerable interest in the operation of the Denver, Rio Grande & Western. The State of Colorado and the city of Denver also have a definite interest, as the Senator from Colorado knows and as I know. So I told the representative of the Burlington that in working out this bill we would take into consideration the interest of the State of Colorado, as I think we can, and as I have told the Senator from Colorado.

A representative of the Burlington Railroad called me again this morning. I said to him, "When you went to Aurora, where your big shops are located, and caused your employees to send a telegram to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], urging him to oppose this legislation, you made the situation more difficult. Since you have done that, we should find out what the Missouri Pacific shopmen at Sedalia, Mo., and at Osawatomie, Kans., want. We cannot handle this legislation solely on the basis of what the Burlington shopmen at Aurora want. If you are going to proceed along that line, I think we must also consider what the shopmen of the Missouri Pacific at Sedalia, Mo., and at Osawatomie, Kans., want." I further told him, "In view of the consideration we have given this matter and the effort we have made to draft a fair and adequate bill, I think the way you have proceeded is a very cheap way for you to go about this matter. I have already told your president's personal representative that we would do the best we could. Now, for you to attempt to throw a scent across the trail is not fair to the Senators who are handling this legislation. If we are going to take into consideration the views of the Burlington shop people at Aurora, we ought also to take into consideration the views of the Missouri Pacific shop people at Sedalia, Mo., and at Osawatomie, Kans."

Mr. President, in all my service in the Senate I have never worked more earnestly or harder on a measure than I have on this particular bill. No piece of legislation which I have helped to work out has been quite so difficult to handle as has this one. I think I have never worked on a measure which has involved greater interests, many of which conflict.

Because of the need for early enactment of this bill, because of the pending completion of the Rock Island reorganization, which, if completed under the present plans by June 30, will deprive the stockholders and the junior bondholders, in my judgment, of $16,000,000 which in all fairness and equity they are entitled to have, I hope this measure will be enacted at once.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, reference has been made to the employees of the Burlington Railroad; and, as I understand, much of the testimony before the committee and much of the debate here on the floor of the Senate has been with reference to protecting the rights of the workingmen and the widows and the orphans. I have received from the workingmen on the railroads of my State two telegrams which I should like to read into the RECORD:

AURORA, ILL.

Hon. WAYLAND C. BROOKS,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

We employees of the Burlington Railroad in a mass meeting held at Aurora, Ill., today gave consideration to proposed amendment to section 77 contained in Senate bill 1253. We hold that this amendment as now written will adversely affect Burlington Railroad employees between Chicago and Denver, including those in this area, because under the provision the Missouri Pacific Railroad will again get stock control of the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad and will operate that railroad to the benefit of the Missouri Pacific Railroad by favoring business via the Pueblo route rather than the Denver Moffat tunnel gateway used by the Burlington Railroad. The result will be the eventual discontinuance of Burlington transcontinental freight and passenger trains to the detriment of Burlington employees, including industries and other businesses located along the Burlington route. We maintain that the Denver & Rio Grande Western should always be neutral segment to the central transcontinental route. We, a committee appointed by employees here represented and with their full approval, urge you to amend the bill in such a manner as will protect the Burlington Railroad's through connection at Denver to the Pacific coast, which is in the interest of your constituents and other employees. Committee with authority to sign.

E. A. Raidy, J. R. Simpkins, E. F. Presby, W. J. Moore, J. Maier, R. L. Mooney, V. D. Rierson, J. S. Lohr.

QUINCY, ILL.

Hon. C. WAYLAND BROOKS,
Washington, D. C.:

I am representing 350 men at Galesburg, and they are opposed to amendment to Senate bill 1253, House of Representatives bill 5924, as they do not want to lose transcontinental business through Denver gateway.

L. W. MAYFIELD.

The same situation applies to the workingmen on the Rock Island Railroad, which is under discussion.

I represent those workingmen, and I intend to protect their interests to the best of my ability. Not only do I intend to do so for the unknown persons who may hold some of the stock, but I intend to do so in the interest of the workingmen on the railroads who make their living from the railroads.

Mr. President, I wish to inquire whether the bill will protect the workingmen, if it is passed.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, if a sounder and more stable railroad, not dominated by Wall Street interests and operated by local interests alive to the problems of its employees will protect the workingmen, then this bill will protect the workers. It will also protect the railroads and it will do what railroad management has asked to have done.

Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] has an amendment which he wishes to offer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have. Is it in order to offer amendments to the bill at this time?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. First, Mr. President, I offer and send to the desk some procedural amendments which I ask to have considered en bloc. They do not change the effect or meaning of the bill in any way, shape, or form. There is simply a necessity to change some section numbers and to make other minor changes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendments are considered and adopted en bloc.

The amendments adopted en bloc are as follows:

On page 1:

In line 3, strike out the words "in aid of the national" and insert in lieu thereof the word "the."

In line 4, strike out the word "transportation" and the words "as set forth in the."

In line 5, strike out the words "preamble of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended."

In line 7, insert between the words "service" and "and" the words "by railroads."

In line 7, insert the word "said" between the words "in" and "section."

In lines 10, 13, and 20, delete the quotation marks.

In line 22, strike out "20b" and insert in lieu thereof "1."

On page 15:

In lines 1, 6, 7, 8, and 11, delete the quotation marks.

In line 16, delete "20b" and insert in lieu thereof "1."

On page 16:

In lines 6 and 16, delete the quotation marks.

In line 9, strike out "20b" and insert in lieu thereof "1."

On page 17:

In lines 4 and 12, strike out the quotation marks.

In line 14, strike out "20b" and insert in lieu thereof "1."

On page 18:

In lines 1, 7, 10, and 15, strike out the words "20b" and insert in lieu thereof "1."

In lines 1 and 22, strike out the quotation marks.

On page 19: In lines 8 and 25, strike out "20b" and insert in lieu thereof "1."

On page 20:

In lines 10, 13, 17, and 25, strike out the quotation marks.

In lines 7, 21, and 25, strike out "20b" and insert in lieu thereof "1."

In line 12, strike out the word "this" and insert in lieu thereof "the Interstate Commerce."

In line 25, strike out "20c" and insert in lieu thereof "2."

On page 21: Strike out all after the words "Amend the title so as to read:" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "A bill to enable debtor railroad corporations expeditiously to effectuate reorganizations of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations; and for other purposes."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer and ask to have stated.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Following line 24, on page 20, it is proposed to insert the following paragraph:

(11) The provisions of this section shall not apply if at the time of filing the petition for reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act as amended, more than 90 percent of the outstanding voting stock of the debtor railroad corporation shall have been owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by voting trust or otherwise, by another railroad corporation and/or by a corporation owning or controlling more than 90 percent of the outstanding voting stock of another railroad corporation. The term "corporation" as used in this paragraph shall be deemed to include its trustees appointed under the aforesaid section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act.

Mr. WHEELER. I have no objection to the amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I desire to have assurance from the chairman of the committee and from the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], for the record, regarding the amendment. It is not offered simply as another amendment to go to conference. I know that occasionally in the Senate an amendment is agreed to in order to avoid controversy, and the amendment is taken to conference, and then it immediately disappears out the window.

But that is not the kind of amendment I have offered. This amendment is desperately needed by the people of my State. I have offered it in all sincerity, and I certainly wish to have the assurance of the chairman of the committee that the amendment will have his wholehearted support in the conference. I also should like to have the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] give me such assurance for the record.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Colorado that, so far as I am concerned, the amendment will have my support.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator for that assurance.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Colorado has had assurance from me on a number of occasions that I sympathize with the position he occupies in Colorado and with the desires of Denver and of Colorado, and I shall do my very best to help work out the situation in a way that will accomplish all the Senator from Colorado asks.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Do I correctly understand the Senator from Kansas to mean that in the conference he is going to do everything within his power to uphold the amendment which I have offered?

Mr. REED. If we can find an equally satisfactory way or a better way to do the same thing, will the Senator from Colorado be satisfied?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If it is possible to find a better way, I am for a better way, of course, and that will have my consent. But pending the assurance——

Mr. REED. I want to be frank with the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I want the Senator to be frank. I am asking for frankness.

Mr. REED. I doubt that the method which has been proposed by the Senator from Colorado is the best way to accomplish what he seeks. If a better way cannot be found, I shall endeavor to keep in the bill the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is satisfactory.

Mr. President, paragraph 10 of section 20c of the pending measure is very unsatisfactory to the Senator from Colorado. In my opinion, it makes the bill totally bad and vicious. I am assured by the Senator from Montana that paragraph 10 of section 20c will have the attention of the conferees. With the hope that a more equitable provision can be worked out, I shall not offer at the present time an amendment which I have on my desk. The amendment would, however, cure the viciousness, as I see it, of paragraph 10 of section 20c. However, if a satisfactory provision can be worked out in conference, I shall not offer the amendment. I refrain from offering the amendment in the interest of expediting disposal of the bill and its early enactment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Committee on Interstate Commerce will be stated.

The first amendment was, on page 2, in line 4, after the word "act" to insert "to preserve the investments of security holders to the fullest possible extent, to prevent forfeitures of investments."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, in line 3, to strike out "section" and insert "sections."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, in line 8, after the word "carrier", to strike out "(other than a carrier in equity receivership or in process of reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act)" and insert "as defined in section 20a (1)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, in line 13, before the word "whether" to insert "("; after the word "secured", to strike out "or"; and in the same line after the word "unsecured" to insert "matured, or unmatured)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, in line 22, after the word "rejection", to insert:

All letters, circulars, advertisements, and other communications, and all financial and statistical statements, or summaries thereof, to be used in soliciting the assents or the opposition of such holders shall, before being so used, be submitted to the Commission for its approval as to correctness and sufficiency of the material facts stated therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, beginning in line 3, after the last committee amendment, to strike out:

If the Commission shall find that as a result of such submission the proposed alteration or modification has been assented to by the holders of at least 75 percent of the aggregate principal amount outstanding of each class of obligations affected thereby (or in any case where 75 percent thereof is held by fewer than 25 holders, such larger percentage, if any, as the Commission may determine), the Commission shall enter an order approving and authorizing the proposed alteration or modification upon the terms and conditions and with the amendments, if any, so determined to be just and reasonable.

And insert:

If the Commission shall find that as a result of such submission the proposed alteration or modification has been assented to by the holders—

(i) of at least 66⅔ percent of the aggregate principal amount outstanding of each class of obligations affected thereby; or

(ii) of less than 66⅔ percent but not less than 51 percent of any particular class or classes of securities affected, and the Commission, after hearing, finds that such reduction in percentage will be just and reasonable and in the public interest; or

(iii) in any case where 66⅔ percent thereof is held by fewer than 25 holders, of such larger percentage, if any, as the Commission, after hearing, finds will be just and reasonable and in the public interest;

the Commission shall enter an order approving and authorizing the proposed alteration or modification upon the terms and conditions and with the amendments, if any, so determined to be just and reasonable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, in line 11, to strike out:

An obligation shall not be deemed to be outstanding for the purposes of this section if in the determination of the Commission the assent of the holder thereof to any proposed alteration or modification is within the control of the carrier or of any person or persons controlling the carrier.

And insert:

For the purpose of the finding of the Commission referred to in paragraph (2) of this section as to whether the required percentage of the aggregate principal amount outstanding of each class of obligations affected by any proposed alteration or modification has assented to the making of such alteration or modification, any obligation which secures any evidence or evidences of indebtedness of the carrier or of any company controlling or controlled by the carrier shall be deemed to be outstanding unless the Commission in its discretion determines that the proposed alteration or modification does not materially affect the interests of the holder or holders of the evidence or evidences of indebtedness secured by such obligation. Whenever any such pledged obligation is, for said purposes, to be deemed outstanding, assent in respect of such obligation, as to any proposed alteration or modification, may be given only (any express or implied provision in any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, note, or other instrument to the contrary notwithstanding) as follows: (a) Where such obligation is pledged as security under a mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, pursuant to which any evidences of indebtedness are issued and outstanding, by the holders of a majority in principal amount of such evidences of indebtedness, or (b) where such obligation secures an evidence or evidences of indebtedness not issued pursuant to such a mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, by the holder or holders of such evidence or evidences of indebtedness; and in any such case the Commission, in addition to the submission referred to in paragraph (2) of this section shall cause the carrier in such manner as it shall direct to submit the proposed alteration or modification (with such terms, conditions, and amendments, if any, as the Commission shall have determined to be just and reasonable) for acceptance or rejection, to the holders of the evidences of indebtedness issued and outstanding pursuant to such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, or to the holder or holders of such evidence or evidences of indebtedness not so issued, and such proposed alteration or modification need not be submitted to the trustee of any such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, but assent in respect of any such obligation shall be determined as hereinbefore in this section provided. For the purpose of any such assent the evidences of indebtedness issued and outstanding under any such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument shall be determined by the Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 2, to insert the following:

SEC. 2. (1) All proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, whether before the Interstate Commerce Commission or United States courts, relating to the preparation or effectuation of plans of reorganization of each carrier by railroad as defined in said section 20a (1) whose properties on the effective date of this section or at any time thereafter are in the custody of the United States courts, and—

(a) whose gross railway operating revenues for any of the calendar years 1942 to 1944, inclusive, were in excess of $50,000,000; or shall be forthwith suspended and discontinued as of the effective date of this section.

(2) Carriers to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable shall institute proceedings and file application under section 1 of this act as expeditiously as possible but in no event later than 6 months after the effective date of this section, or such longer period as the Commission, on application, may approve.

(3) The properties of any carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section shall continue in the custody of the United States courts having custody of them; except that the following portions of said section 77 shall not be applicable in any such case:

(a) The first two paragraphs of subsection (b).

(b) Subdivision (1) of subsection (c).

(c) The first five sentences and the first seven words of the sixth sentence of subdivision (2) of subsection (c).

(d) Subsections (d), (e), (f), and (k).

In addition to the foregoing exceptions and for the purpose of applying to such carriers in the cases in which and during the period for which such custody is held under said section 77, and pending the consummation of proceedings under section 1 of this act, the word "debtor" shall be substituted for the words "trustee or trustees" wherever such latter words occur in subdivisions (3), (5), (9), and (10) of subsection (c), and subsections (i) and (o) of said section 77. The final determination heretofore or hereafter made in the United States courts with respect to the relative priorities as between the respective classes of security holders, the subordination of the interest of a creditor or security holder of the debtor to the interest of other creditors or security holders, or the validity, amount, and priority of any claim shall continue in full force and effect. Nothing herein is intended or shall be construed to modify or rescind any such determination or to prevent or delay the prosecution to final determination of any such issue now pending, and not yet finally determined, in the United States courts.

(4) The proceedings with respect to any such carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act shall be dismissed upon consummation of proceedings affecting such carrier under section 1 of this act, or upon payment of its matured, unpaid obligations, or the making of other arrangements with reference to such obligations satisfactory to the owners of the claims therefor; and such proceedings may be dismissed under the conditions and in the manner prescribed in subsection (g) of section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act.

(5) The appointment, term of office, powers, authority, compensation and fees of each trustee appointed by the court, and of each counsel of such trustee, shall be terminated on or before 30 days after the effective date of this section. The United States court having custody of the properties of any carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section shall have the power, in its discretion, to require the carrier to appoint the present trustee or trustees in a managerial or lesser capacity, for the performance of such duties in behalf of such carrier as the court may specify, for such period or periods during said proceeding and under such terms and conditions as the court may specify; the court shall also have the power to terminate such services and appointment.

(6) If the United States of America, or any agency thereof, or any corporation (other than the Reconstruction Finance Corporation) the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States of America, is a creditor or stockholder of any such carrier, the President of the United States or any officer or agency he may designate, is hereby authorized to act in respect of the interest or claims of the United States or of such agency or other corporation.

(7) The Commission shall designate one or more qualified members of its staff to serve as mediator or mediators in each of the proceedings under section 1 with respect to carriers specified under paragraph (1) of this section for the purpose of bringing the different classes of creditors and other security holders together, of being available to advise with them, of assisting in the effectuation of changes, compromises, arrangements, negotiations, and dealings with the various classes of creditors and other security holders and with individuals, groups, and committees representing creditors or other security holders, of assisting in expediting all stages of the proceedings and the early termination and the consummation of all transactions hereunder, including all steps requisite for the effectuation thereof.

(8) In proceedings under section 1 with respect to a carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section the Commission shall have the power, in its discretion, to submit to holders of obligations, any proposed alteration or modification affecting them which the Commission has caused the carrier to submit to such holders under the provisions of the fourth sentence of paragraph (2) of section 1 hereof; in the event that it is satisfied that such alteration or modification has been accepted by or on behalf of creditors of each class to which submission is required under section 1 holding more than two-thirds in amount of the total of the allowed claims of such class which have voted on said alteration or modification, the Commission shall enter an order approving and authorizing the proposed alteration or modification as provided in said paragraph (2) of section 1 hereof: Provided, That it shall enter such order in any case in which such alteration or modification has not been so accepted by the creditors of any class or classes if it finds, after hearing, that such rejection is not reasonably justified in the light of the respective rights and interests of those rejecting them and all the relevant facts.

(9) If after having submitted a proposed alteration or modification to holders of affected obligations as provided in paragraph (8), the Commission shall not have entered an order approving and authorizing such proposed alteration or modification within a period of 12 months following the date of the filing of an application in accordance with paragraph (2) of this section, or such extended periods as the Commission on application therefor may approve, then the Commission, after hearings, shall formulate and submit to holders of affected obligations such alteration or modification as in its opinion meets the standards set forth in section 1 above; in applying such standards of section 1 for the purpose of any such alteration or modification under this paragraph, the Commission shall give full effect to all changes, facts, and developments since 1940, including, without limitation, for such period total railway operating revenues, operating expenses and other charges, net earnings, the full effect of amortization deductions on earnings of past and future years, improvements to the property, the effect of the released collateral through past or future payment of loans, cash and net current assets, retirements and purchases of debt, including retirements and purchases at a discount that have been made or that can reasonably be made, adjustment and reduction of interest rates on outstanding debt that may be made including the adjustment and reduction of interest rates for prior years. In the event the Commission is satisfied that such alteration or modification has been accepted by the percentages required for acceptance under the provisions of section 1 or of paragraph (8) of this section (or, if not so accepted, it finds after hearing as provided in paragraph (8) that such rejection is not reasonably justified) it shall enter an order approving and authorizing such alteration or modification, unless it finds that, prior to the entry of such order, the alteration or modification submitted under paragraph (8) has been accepted by the percentages required by the provisions of that paragraph or of section 1, in which event it shall enter an order approving and authorizing such alteration or modification submitted under paragraph (8).

(10) No holding company, individual, group, partnership, association, corporation, or other entity (excluding a common carrier subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act)—

(A) which exercises direct or indirect control of one or more carriers the properties of which are not in the custody of a court in proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act; and

(B) which also owns shares of voting stock of any carrier to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable, in sufficient number to enable the owner thereof to control such carrier,

shall, during the proceedings under section 1, vote such shares for the election of more than a minority of the directors of such carrier to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable.

"SEC. 20d. If any provision of section 1 or 2, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of such sections and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That concludes the committee amendments. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 1253) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress, in order to promote the public interest in avoiding the deterioration of service by railroads and the interruption of employment which inevitably attend the threat of financial difficulties and which follow upon financial collapse and in order to promote the public interest in increased stability of values of railroad securities with resulting greater confidence therein of investors, to assure, insofar as possible, continuity of sound financial condition of said common carriers, to preserve the investments of security holders to the fullest possible extent, to prevent forfeitures of investments, and to enable said common carriers, insofar as possible, to avoid prospective financial difficulties, inability to meet debts as they mature, and insolvency. To assist in accomplishing these ends and because certain classes of the obligations of such carriers are in the usual case held by a very large number of holders, and further to enable modification and reformation of provisions of the aforesaid classes of obligations and of provisions of the instruments pursuant to which they are issued or by which they are secured in cases where such modification and reformation shall have become necessary or desirable in the public interest in order to avoid obstruction to or interference with the economical, efficient, and orderly conduct by such carriers of their affairs, it is deemed necessary to provide means, in the manner and with the safeguards herein provided, for the alteration and modification, without the assent of every holder thereof, of the provisions of such classes of obligations and of the instruments pursuant to which they are outstanding or by which they are secured.

SEC. 1. It shall be lawful (any express provision contained in any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument to the contrary notwithstanding), with the approval and authorization of the Interstate Commerce Commission (hereinafter referred to as the Commission), as provided in paragraph (2) hereof, for a carrier as defined in section 20a of part I of the Interstate Commerce Act: (1) to alter or modify (a) any provision of any class or classes of its bonds, notes, debentures, or other evidences of indebtedness, (whether secured, unsecured, matured, or unmatured) issued under any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument of like nature, such bonds, notes, debentures, or other evidences of indebtedness being hereinafter in this section sometime called "obligations"; (b) any provision of any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument pursuant to which any class of its obligations shall have been issued or by which any class of its obligations is secured: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any equipment-trust certificates in respect of which a carrier is obligated, or to any evidences of indebtedness of a carrier the payment of which is secured in any manner solely by equipment, or to any instrument, whether an agreement, lease, conditional-sale agreement, or otherwise, pursuant to which such equipment-trust certificates or such evidences of indebtedness shall have been issued or by which they are secured.

(2) Whenever an alteration or modification is proposed under paragraph (1) hereof, the carrier seeking authority therefor shall, pursuant to such rules and regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, present an application to the Commission. Upon presentation of any such application, the Commission may, in its discretion, but need not, as a condition precedent to further consideration, require the applicant to secure assurances of assent to such alteration or modification by holders of such percentage of the aggregate principal amount outstanding of the obligations affected by such alteration or modification as the Commission shall in its discretion determine. If the Commission shall not require the applicant to secure any such assurance, or when such assurances as the Commission may require shall have been secured, the Commission shall set such application for public hearing and the carrier shall give such notice of such hearing in such manner, by advertisement or otherwise, as the Commission may find practicable and may direct, to holders of such of its classes of securities and to such other persons in interest as the Commission shall determine to be appropriate and shall direct. If the Commission, after hearing, in addition to making (in any case where such alteration or modification involves an issuance of securities) the findings required by paragraph (2) of said section 20a, shall find that, subject to such terms and conditions and with such amendments as it shall determine to be just and reasonable, the proposed alteration or modification—

(a) is within the scope of paragraph (1);

(b) will be in the public interest;

(c) will be in the best interests of the carrier and of the holders of each class of its obligations affected by such modification or alteration; and

(d) will not be adverse to the interests of the holders of any other class of the carrier's securities or to the interests of any creditor of the carrier not affected by such modification or alteration.

then (unless the applicant carrier shall withdraw its application) the Commission shall cause the carrier, in such manner as it shall direct, to submit the proposed alteration or modification (with such terms, conditions, and amendments, if any) to the holders of each class of its obligations affected thereby, for acceptance or rejection. All letters, circulars, advertisements, and other communications, and all financial and statistical statements, or summaries thereof, to be used in soliciting the assents or the opposition of such holders shall, before being so used, be submitted to the Commission for its approval as to correctness and sufficiency of the material facts stated therein. If the Commission shall find that as a result of such submission the proposed alteration or modification has been assented to by the holders—

(i) of at least 66⅔ percent of the aggregate principal amount outstanding of each class of obligations affected thereby; or

(ii) of less than 66⅔ percent but not less than 51 percent of any particular class or classes of securities affected, and the Commission, after hearing, finds that such reduction in percentage will be just and reasonable and in the public interest; or

(iii) in any case where 66⅔ percent thereof is held by fewer than 25 holders, of such larger percentage, if any, as the Commission, after hearing, finds will be just and reasonable and in the public interest;

the Commission shall enter an order approving and authorizing the proposed alteration or modification upon the terms and conditions and with the amendments, if any, so determined to be just and reasonable. Such order shall make provision as to the time when such alteration or modification shall become and be binding, which may be upon publication of a declaration to that effect by the carrier, or otherwise, as the Commission may determine. Any alteration or modification which shall become and be binding pursuant to the approval and authority of the Commission hereunder shall be binding upon each holder of any obligation of the carrier of each class affected by such alteration or modification, and upon any trustee or other party to any instrument under which any such class or obligations shall have been issued or by which it is secured, and when any alteration or modification shall become and be binding the rights of each such holder and of any such trustee or other party shall be correspondingly altered or modified.

(3) For the purposes of this section a class of obligations shall be deemed to be affected by any modification or alteration proposed only (a) if a modification or alteration is proposed as to any provision of such class of obligations, or (b) if any modification or alteration is proposed as to any provision of any instrument pursuant to which such class of obligations shall have been issued or shall be secured: Provided, That in any case where more than one class of obligations shall have been issued and be outstanding or shall be secured pursuant to any instrument, any alteration or modification proposed as to any provision of such instrument, which does not relate to all of the classes of obligations issued thereunder, shall be deemed to affect only the class or classes of obligations to which such alteration or modification is related. For the purpose of the finding of the Commission referred to in paragraph (2) of this section as to whether the required percentage of the aggregate principal amount outstanding of each class of obligations affected by any proposed alteration or modification has assented to the making of such alteration or modification, any obligation which secures any evidence or evidences of indebtedness of the carrier or of any company controlling or controlled by the carrier shall be deemed to be outstanding unless the Commission in its discretion determines that the proposed alteration or modification does not materially affect the interests of the holder or holders of the evidence or evidences of indebtedness secured by such obligation. Whenever any such pledged obligation is, for said purposes, to be deemed outstanding, assent in respect of such obligation, as to any proposed alteration or modification, may be given only (any express or implied provision in any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, note, or other instrument to the contrary notwithstanding) as follows: (a) Where such obligation is pledged as security under a mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, pursuant to which any evidences of indebtedness are issued and outstanding, by the holders of a majority in principal amount of such evidences of indebtedness, or (b) where such obligation secures an evidence or evidences of indebtedness not issued pursuant to such a mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, by the holder or holders of such evidence or evidences of indebtedness; and in any such case the Commission, in addition to the submission referred to in paragraph (2) of this section, shall cause the carrier in such manner as it shall direct to submit the proposed alteration or modification (with such terms, conditions, and amendments, if any, as the Commission shall have determined to be just and reasonable) for acceptance or rejection, to the holders of the evidences of indebtedness issued and outstanding pursuant to such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, or to the holder or holders of such evidence or evidences of indebtedness not so issued, and such proposed alteration or modification need not be submitted to the trustee of any such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, but assent in respect of any such obligation shall be determined as hereinbefore in this section provided. For the purpose of any such assent the evidences of indebtedness issued and outstanding under any such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument shall be determined by the Commission.

(4) (a) Any authorization and approval hereunder of any alteration or modification of a provision of any class of obligations of a carrier or of a provision of any instrument pursuant to which a class of obligations has been issued, or by which it is secured, shall be deemed to constitute authorization and approval of a corresponding alteration or modification of the obligation of any other carrier which has assumed liability in respect of such class of obligations as guarantor, endorser, surety, or otherwise: Provided, That such other carrier consents in writing to such alteration or modification of such class of obligations in respect of which it has assumed liability or of the instrument pursuant to which such class of obligations has been issued or by which it is secured, and, such consent having been given, any such corresponding alteration or modification shall become effective, without other action, when the alteration or modification of such class of obligations or of such instrument shall become and be binding.

(b) Any person who is liable or obligated contingently or otherwise on any class or classes of obligations issued by a carrier shall, with respect to such class or classes of obligations, for the purposes of this section, be deemed a carrier.

(5) The authority conferred by this section shall be exclusive and plenary and any carrier, in respect of any alteration or modification authorized and approved by the Commission hereunder, shall have full power to make any such alteration or modification and to take any actions incidental or appropriate thereto, and may make any such alteration or modification and take any such actions, and any such alteration or modification may be made without securing the approval of the Commission under any other section of the Interstate Commerce Act or other paragraph of this section, and without securing approval of any State authority, and any carrier and its officers and employees and any other persons, participating in the making of an alteration or modification approved and authorized under the provisions of this section or the taking of any such actions, shall be, and they hereby are, relieved from the operation of all restraints, limitations, and prohibitions of law, Federal, State, or municipal, insofar as may be necessary to enable them to make and carry into effect the alteration or modification so approved and authorized, in accordance with the conditions and with the amendments, if any, imposed by the Commission. Any power granted by this section to any carrier shall be deemed to be in addition to and in modification of its powers under its corporate charter or under the laws of any State. The provisions of this section shall not affect in any way the negotiability of any obligation of any carrier or of the obligation of any carrier which has assumed liability in respect thereto.

(6) The Commission shall require periodical or special reports from each carrier which shall hereafter secure from the Commission approval and authorization of any alteration or modification under this section, which shall show, in such detail as the Commission may require, the action taken by the carrier in the making of such alteration or modification.

(7) The provisions of this section are permissive and not mandatory and shall not require any carrier to obtain authorization and approval of the Commission hereunder for the making of any alteration or modification of any provision of any of its obligations or of any class thereof or of any provision of any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, which it may be able lawfully to make in any other manner, whether by reason of provisions for the making of such alteration or modification in any such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, or otherwise: Provided, That the provisions of paragraph (2) of said section 20a, if applicable to such alteration or modification made otherwise than pursuant to the provisions of this section, shall continue to be so applicable.

(8) The provisions of paragraph (6) of said section 20a, except the provisions thereof in respect of hearings, shall apply to applications made under this section. In connection with any order entered by the Commission pursuant to paragraph (2) hereof, the Commission may from time to time, for good cause shown, make such supplemental orders in the premises as it may deem necessary or appropriate, and may by any such supplemental order modify the provisions of any such order, subject always to the requirements of said paragraph (2).

(9) The provisions of subdivision (a) of section 14 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 shall not apply to the solicitation by or on behalf of a carrier of assents (or assurances of assents) by holders of its obligations to a proposed alteration or modification pursuant to this section.

(10) The Commission shall have the power to make such rules and regulations appropriate to its administration of the provisions of this section as it shall deem necessary or desirable.

SEC. 2. (1) All proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, whether before the Interstate Commerce Commission or United States courts, relating to the preparation or effectuation of plans of reorganization of each carrier by railroad as defined in said section 20a (1) whose properties on the effective date of this section or at any time thereafter are in the custody of the United States courts, and—

(a) whose gross railway operating revenues for any of the calendar years 1942 to 1944, inclusive, were in excess of $50,000,000; or shall be forthwith suspended and discontinued as of the effective date of this section.

(2) Carriers to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable shall institute proceedings and file application under section 1 of this act as expeditiously as possible but in no event later than 6 months after the effective date of this section, or such longer period as the Commission, on application, may approve.

(3) The properties of any carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section shall continue in the custody of the United States courts having custody of them; except that the following portions of said section 77 shall not be applicable in any such case:

(a) The first two paragraphs of subsection (b).

(b) Subdivision (1) of subsection (c).

(c) The first five sentences and the first seven words of the sixth sentence of subdivision (2) of subsection (c).

(d) Subsections (d), (e), (f), and (k).

In addition to the foregoing exceptions and for the purpose of applying to such carriers in the cases in which and during the period for which such custody is held under said section 77, and pending the consummation of proceedings under section 1 of this act, the word "debtor" shall be substituted for the words "trustee or trustees" wherever such latter words occur in subdivisions (3), (5), (9), and (10) of subsection (c), and subsections (i) and (o), of said section 77. The final determination heretofore or hereafter made in the United States courts with respect to the relative priorities as between the respective classes of security holders, the subordination of the interest of a creditor or security holder of the debtor to the interest of other creditors or security holders, or the validity, amount and priority of any claim shall continue in full force and effect. Nothing herein is intended or shall be construed to modify or rescind any such determination or to prevent or delay the prosecution to final determination of any such issue now pending, and not yet finally determined, in the United States courts.

(4) The proceedings with respect to any such carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act shall be dismissed upon consummation of proceedings affecting such carrier under section 1 of this act, or upon payment of its matured, unpaid obligations, or the making of other arrangments with reference to such obligations satisfactory to the owners of the claims therefor; and such proceedings may be dismissed under the conditions and in the manner prescribed in subsection (g) of section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act.

(5) The appointment, term of office, powers, authority, compensation and fees of each trustee appointed by the court, and of each counsel of such trustee, shall be terminated on or before 30 days after the effective date of this section. The United States court having custody of the properties of any carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section shall have the power, in its discretion, to require the carrier to appoint the present trustee or trustees in a managerial or lesser capacity, for the performance of such duties in behalf of such carrier as the court may specify, for such period or periods during said proceeding and under such terms and conditions as the court may specify; the court shall also have the power to terminate such services and appointment.

(6) If the United States of America, or any agency thereof, or any corporation (other than the Reconstruction Finance Corporation) the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States of America, is a creditor or stockholder of any such carrier, the President of the United States or any officer or agency he may designate, is hereby authorized to act in respect of the interest or claims of the United States or of such agency or other corporation.

(7) The Commission shall designate one or more qualified members of its staff to serve as mediator or mediators in each of the proceedings under section 1 with respect to carriers specified under paragraph (1) of this section for the purpose of bringing the different classes of creditors and other security holders together, of being available to advise with them, of assisting in the effectuation of changes, compromises, arrangements, negotiations, and dealings with the various classes of creditors and other security holders and with individuals, groups, and committees representing creditors or other security holders, of assisting in expediting all stages of the proceedings and the early termination and the consummation of all transactions hereunder, including all steps requisite for the effectuation thereof.

(8) In proceedings under section 1 with respect to a carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section the Commission shall have the power, in its discretion, to submit to holders of obligations, any proposed alteration or modification affecting them which the Commission has caused the carrier to submit to such holders under the provisions of the fourth sentence of paragraph (2) of section 1 hereof; in the event that it is satisfied that such alteration or modification has been accepted by or on behalf of creditors of each class to which submission is required under section 1 holding more than two-thirds in amount of the total of the allowed claims of such class which have voted on said alteration or modification, the Commission shall enter an order approving and authorizing the proposed alteration or modification as provided in said paragraph (2) of section 1 hereof: Provided, That it shall enter such order in any case in which such alteration or modification has not been so accepted by the creditors of any class or classes if it finds, after hearing, that such rejection is not reasonably justified in the light of the respective rights and interests of those rejecting them and all the relevant facts.

(9) If after having submitted a proposed alteration or modification to holders of affected obligations as provided in paragraph (8), the Commission shall not have entered an order approving and authorizing such proposed alteration or modification within a period of 12 months following the date of the filing of an application in accordance with paragraph (2) of this section, or such extended periods as the Commission on application therefor may approve, then the Commission, after hearings, shall formulate and submit to holders of affected obligations such alteration or modification as in its opinion meets the standards set forth in section 1 above; in applying such standards of section 1 for the purpose of any such alteration or modification under this paragraph, the Commission shall give full effect to all changes, facts, and developments since 1940, including, without limitation, for such period total railway operating revenues, operating expenses and other charges, net earnings, the full effect of amortization deductions on earnings of past and future years, improvements to the property, the effect of the released collateral through past or future payment of loans, cash and net current assets, retirements and purchases of debt, including retirements and purchases at a discount that have been made or that can reasonably be made, adjustment and reduction of interest rates on outstanding debt that may be made, including the adjustment and reduction of interest rates for prior years. In the event the Commission is satisfied that such alteration or modification has been accepted by the percentages required for acceptance under the provisions of section 1 or of paragraph (8) of this section (or, if not so accepted, it finds after hearing as provided in paragraph (8) that such rejection is not reasonably justified) it shall enter an order approving and authorizing such alteration or modification, unless it finds that, prior to the entry of such order, the alteration or modification submitted under paragraph (8) has been accepted by the percentages required by the provisions of that paragraph or of section 1, in which event it shall enter an order approving and authorizing such alteration or modification submitted under paragraph (8).

(10) No holding company, individual, group, partnership, association, corporation, or other entity (excluding a common carrier subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act)—

(A) which exercises direct or indirect control of one or more carriers the properties of which are not in the custody of a court in proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act; and

shall, during the proceedings under section 1, vote such shares for the election of more than a minority of the directors of such carrier to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable.

(11) The provisions of this section shall not apply if at the time of filing the petition for reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act as amended, more than 90 percent of the outstanding voting stock of the debtor railroad corporation shall have been owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by voting trust or otherwise, by another railroad corporation and/or by a corporation owning or controlling more than 90 percent of the outstanding voting stock of another railroad corporation. The term "corporation" as used in this paragraph shall be deemed to include its trustees appointed under the aforesaid section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act.

SEC. 20d. If any provision of section 1 or 2, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of such sections and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, and to limit the application of an act entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States,' approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, and for other purposes."

AMENDMENT OF PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate passed Calendar No. 1378, House bill 4512, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research relating to psychiatric disorders and to aid in the development of more effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of such disorders, and for other purposes. The bill was passed in such haste that no consideration was given to the committee amendments. I move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, does the Senator intend to have the bill taken up now?

Mr. TAFT. The bill was passed yesterday, and, unfortunately, without amendments being agreed to which had been proposed by the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may say, Mr. President, that the fact that the committee amendments were not acted upon was a mere oversight, and the Senator from Ohio has moved that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. TAFT. Yes. It has been proposed to amend one of the committee amendments.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read by its title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 4512) to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research relating to psychiatric disorders and to aid in the development of more effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of such disorders and for other purposes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 5, in line 10, to strike out:

> Three of the appointed members shall be selected from a panel of six such authorities to be submitted to the Surgeon General by the deans of the approved medical colleges and schools in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, in line 14, after the word "Administrator", to strike out "Provided, That consent of a legal guardian shall be obtained before the transfer of any patient from Saint Elizabeths Hospital for such treatment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, in line 3 after the word "institutions", to insert "including grants to such institutions for the construction, acquisition, and leasing of hospital, clinic, laboratory, and related facilities, but only to the extent necessary for the purposes of such training and instruction."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, in line 21, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$4,500,000" and insert "$10,000,000."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, on page 13, in line 21, I move that "$10,000,000" be stricken out and in lieu thereof "$7,500,000" be substituted. That was the condition upon which the objections to consideration of the bill were withdrawn yesterday.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the committee amendment on page 13, in line 21.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That concludes the committee amendments.

The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 4512) was read the third time and passed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be absent from the sessions of the Senate during the next 30 days.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

Mr. STANFILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be absent from the sessions of the Senate next week.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to consider Calendar No. 1469, House bill 5990, the appropriations bill for the District of Columbia.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill, H. R. 5990, making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

FACILITATION AND SIMPLIFICATION OF ADMINISTRATION OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, yesterday afternoon Calendar No. 1341, House bill 4386, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, was considered on motion made by me because I did not believe that the bill which had been acted upon conformed with what the committee desired to have done. I was absent from the Chamber when the bill was called up during consideration of the calendar.

I wish to invite attention, particularly of the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], to the statement which was made before the Committee on Indian Affairs when the bill was under consideration there. The bill was considered several weeks ago. Because of an objection which had been raised by members of the committee, including the chairman of the committee, the distinguished Senator from Wyoming, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was requested to change the wording of the bill so that it would conform with the committee's ideas. The bill was later reported to the Senate and was passed yesterday by the Senate without containing the changes which the committee desired to have made.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I believe that the Senator is mistaken. The change which the committee requested was reported to the Senate in the form of an amendment which was agreed to by the Senate yesterday.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I realize that, Mr. President, but I say that the bill was not changed in the way in which the committee had requested the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to reword the bill. Allow me to read from the testimony which was taken before the committee when the matter was discussed. In the committee meeting, Mr. Crawford, formerly one of the superintendents of the Klamath Reservation, made the following statement:

I am seeking information. I am not here opposing the legislation, other than that I want to know that it is going to be helpful to the Indians. As I understood Mr. Brophy here a few minutes ago, he cited to the committee that superintendents would make the leases and transfer the lands of individuals, and the superintendent would have personal supervision over an Indian on his individual property. I think that is pretty wide authority to give a superintendent on an Indian reservation, when I know what goes on in an Indian reservation, and what has been going on in the past years, and is going on now.

So I should like to ask Mr. Brophy if he is going to call in the chiefs of the different divisions with his legal staff to write these regulations. Would you answer the question, please?

Mr. BROPHY. Regulations referred to in the proposed bill would be written by the staff of the Secretary of the Interior, I take it. I reiterate that no additional power on substantive matters is intended to be conferred by the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Brophy, to answer Mr. Crawford's question explicitly, I think we should refer not only to the regulations mentioned in lines 6 and 7 of page 1, which I take it are the regulations under which the delegation shall be made?

Mr. BROPHY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. But we should refer also to the regulations which are authorized by law to be drawn by the Secretary to carry out laws affecting Indian affairs. Now, is it not a fact that it is not your intention to ask authority to delegate that power to write regulations under existing law?

Mr. BROPHY. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. But, of course, you know from the reading of the bill that it is drawn in such broad language that it would constitute that delegation?

Mr. BROPHY. I did not so understand the bill. I thought that the delegation of authority——

The CHAIRMAN. Well, it grants a broad power to delegate, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, "his powers and duties under said laws," those laws being the laws governing Indian affairs. Now, if there is any law governing Indian affairs which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to make rules and regulations—and, of course, there are many such—this bill would authorize a delegation of the regulation-making power, and I am sure you do not want to ask that.

Mr. BROPHY. That is not the purpose or intent of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. And you do not want language broad enough to convey that authority?

Mr. BROPHY. I do not. It would be fruitless for the Commissioner to try to make a regulation governing the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. Therefore, you do not want to ask Congress to pass a law which in terms grants that power?

Mr. BROPHY. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. It is obvious that this is a bill that has to be rewritten.

That is the end of the testimony.

Mr. President, this bill is H. R. 4386. I wish to read the first paragraph of the bill. It is the bill which was supposed to be changed by officials in the Indian Office. It reads:

For the purpose of facilitating and simplifying the administration of the laws governing Indian affairs, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to delegate, from time to time, and to the extent and under such regulations as he deems proper, his powers and duties under said laws, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, insofar as such powers and duties relate to action in individual cases arising under general regulations promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to law.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The language the Senator has just read, beginning with the word "insofar" and ending with the word "law" is one of the three amendments which were adopted by the Committee on Indian Affairs to meet the objections which I, as chairman of the committee, raised, and to adjust the bill to the understanding of the committee.

The fear which I expressed at the time the bill was under consideration by the committee was that it would result in the delegation to subordinate officials of the power to write regulations, and I expressed clearly my conviction—and in this opinion the committee agreed with me—that Congress should not adopt any law which by any manner of interpretation could lead to such a conclusion.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. That is the very point I have raised in this matter. I read further from the bill itself:

Subject to the supervision and direction of the Secretary, the Commissioner is hereby authorized to delegate, in like manner, any powers and duties so delegated to him by the Secretary, or vested in him by law, to the assistant commissioners or the officer in charge of any branch, division, office, or agency of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Such delegated powers——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. This is an amendment, if I may interrupt the Senator.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. That is correct.

Such delegated powers shall be exercised subject to appeal to the Secretary, under regulations to be prescribed by him, or, as from time to time determined by him, to the Under Secretary or to an Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior, or to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. President, the bill was prepared and written by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior, and I maintain that the language written into the bill now delegates power to any superintendent of any Indian reservation or any employee on any of these reservations to issue orders and regulations.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will read the last amendment he will see that that possibility clearly has been eliminated. The last amendment consists of the last three lines of the bill before the Senate yesterday, and provides, "nor shall anything in this act be deemed to convey authority to delegate any power to issue regulations."

I suggest to the Senator that the committee very adequately covered the criticism which the Senator from South Dakota and I raised to the bill as it originally came before the committee. I feel confident that the Senator's interpretation and my interpretation of the authority which should be conveyed is fully safeguarded by the measure as passed yesterday.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I am sure that the chairman and the committee itself were concerned about the delegation of power to write regulations, and it seems to me that under any interpretation of this language, including the amendment, it may be termed a delegation of authority to anybody connected with the Office of Indian Affairs.

In that connection, Mr. President, in order to clarify the language, and to put it in such form that there can be no question about it, I move that the bill be recommitted to the committee for further consideration.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not insist upon that motion, because I think the language in these amendments clearly protects the legislation from the danger which he and I apprehended. If the Senator desires to make it any more clear, I suggest that instead of attempting to send the bill back to the committee, he offer an additional clarifying amendment. That would be the more expeditious way to handle it. It is a matter of tremendous importance to the Indians that their business shall be carried on. Under the law as it now stands, unless the power is granted to delegate certain ministerial duties, those duties will accumulate upon the desks of the Secretary and the Assistant Secretaries and of the Commissioner, without being transacted, and great suffering and inconvenience will necessarily be occasioned by the delay.

This measure is intended to facilitate the disposal of Indian affairs, and I submit to the Senator it does that, and the amendments which the committee unanimously approved and which the Senate adopted yesterday close the door to the only possibility of abuse which the committee had in mind.

I should be very glad to cooperate with the Senator in drafting any clarifying amendment. I rose for the purpose of moving that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill; and if the Senator will be good enough to postpone this matter until we have disposed of the appropriation bill, I shall be very happy to confer with him further.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I shall be glad to postpone it, but I believe that the distinguished Senator from Wyoming has not understood my position. I am very much opposed to the head of the Department, the Secretary of the Interior, preparing the regulations and rules through the local superintendents.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. This bill absolutely prevents that, as we have now drafted it. I shall be very happy to confer with the Senator, and I am sure we can agree on an additional clarifying amendment which will eliminate all doubt in his mind.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I withhold the motion until the Senate has concluded action on the appropriation bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5990, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5990) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will proceed to state the amendments of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 19, to insert:

Capital outlay: For structural improvements at the jail, including outside walls and fences, guard towers, and control gates, $116,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Mental rehabilitation service," on page 38, line 4, after the word "grounds", to strike out "$542,580" and insert "$587,120."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 5, to insert:

Capital outlay, District Training School: For the construction and equipment of laundry building and employees' housing, $420,000; and for the improvement of roads, $50,000; in all, $470,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Public works," on page 40, line 11, after the word "equipment", to insert

"uniforms and caps for guards"; and in line 12, after the word "binding", to strike out "$545,700" and insert "$548,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 4, after the word "binding", to strike out "$408,500" and insert "$415,800."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in lieu of the amendment which appears in line 4, on page 41, by the authority of the committee, I desire to offer as a substitute two amendments. On page 41, line 2, after the word "buildings", I move to insert the following: "three members of board of special appeal and two members of the electrical examining board at $300 per annum each."

Then, in lieu of the committee amendment in line 4, page 41, I move to strike out "$408,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$421,100."

These two amendments, Mr. President, will have the effect of increasing the appropriation by $5,300 over the amount recommended by the committee in its report, in order to implement certain new regulations issued by the Commissioners to reduce the fire hazard in the buildings in the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments offered by the Senator from Wyoming on behalf of the committee are agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 12, after the word "services", to strike out "(except a director)"; and in line 13, after the word "binding", to strike out "$547,600" and insert "$603,852."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 7, after the word "taxes", to strike out "$1,420,000" and insert "$1,476,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 6, to insert:

Water fund, investment, District of Columbia: The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to sell United States securities now held for and on account of the water fund of the District of Columbia in such amounts as may be certified by the Commissioners as necessary and credit the proceeds of such sale to said water fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Washington Aqueduct," on page 55, line 7, after the word "Dalecarlia", to insert a semicolon and "new mixing and sedimentation basins for the Dalecarlia filter plant (first half); 30,000,000-gallon clear water basin at Dalecarlia (first third); and the United States Engineer Office, District Engineer, is authorized to enter into contract or contracts for the completion of the two last above-named projects at a total cost of not to exceed, respectively, $967,000 and $1,250,000"; and in line 19, after the word "laws", to strike out "$989,000" and insert "$1,980,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "National Capital Parks," on page 58, line 9, before the word "Provided", to strike out "$1,200,000" and insert "$1,223,846."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "National Zoological Park," in section 11, page 62, line 15, after the word "Administration", to strike out "and in no event more than $1,050."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee and in accordance with the notice heretofore given, I send forward an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 1, it is proposed to strike out "$6,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the amendment is agreed to.

If there be no further amendments to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 5990) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Acting President pro tempore appointed Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. HOEY, Mr. BALL, Mr. WILLIS, and Mr. FERGUSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I regret to say that while the bill was being passed the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] was endeavoring to engage my attention with the desire to offer an additional amendment. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the vote, by which the bill was passed, may be reconsidered so that this additional amendment may be offered.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I move that section 3, on page 60, beginning in line 4 and ending in line 22, be stricken out, and that similar language carried in the Navy appropriation bill be inserted in lieu thereof.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 60, it is proposed to strike out section 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 3. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The question now is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 5990) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY subsequently said: Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Did the fact that the vote by which the District of Columbia bill was originally passed was vacated in order to consider an additional amendment vacate the subsequent appointment of conferees?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. No. The Chair announced that they had been previously appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, Acting Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 6393. An act to amend the act entitled "An act for the creation of an American Battle Monuments Commission to erect suitable memorials commemorating the services of the American soldier in Europe, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1923, as amended, in order to extend the Commission's authority to all areas in which our armed forces have operated during World War II, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6572. An act to provide military assistance to the Republic of the Philippines in establishing and maintaining national security and to form a basis for participation by that Government in such defensive military operations as the future may require; and

H. R. 6627. An act for the acquisition of buildings and grounds in foreign countries for the use of the Government of the United States of America.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 6627) for the acquisition of buildings and grounds in foreign countries for the use of the Government of the United States of America, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REFEREES' SALARY BILL

Mr. HUFFMAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4160, Calendar No. 968.

Mr. WHITE. Reserving the right to object, I understand this is the bill which was objected to by the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] on the call of the calendar yesterday.

Mr. HUFFMAN. No; it was not, Mr. President.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator assure me that the Senator from Oregon has withdrawn his objection?

Mr. HUFFMAN. I should like to correct the Senator from Maine. The Senator from Oregon did not object to this bill on the call yesterday. Objection was made to it some months ago.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Oregon is not now pressing any objection?

Mr. HUFFMAN. That is my understanding.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4160) to amend an act entitled "Ar act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 2, line 10, to strike out "(8) 'Council' shall mean the council of circuit judges for the circuit, as defined in section 306 of the United States Judicial Code." and insert "(8a) 'Council' shall mean the judicial council of the circuit provided for by section 306 of the United States Judicial Code."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 18, after the word "fund", to strike out the comma and "which funds are hereby permanently appropriated for the purposes of the respective funds."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, line 21, after the words "out of", to insert "annual appropriations from."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, line 23, after the words "out of" to insert "annual appropriations from."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments.

The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. HUFFMAN. There are a number of other amendments which have been agreed to by the committee, and on behalf of the committee I offer the amendments and ask that they be now considered.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The first amendment offered by Mr. HUFFMAN on behalf of the committee was, on page 3, line 8, to strike out the word "council" and insert in lieu thereof the words "senior judge."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, to strike out lines 11 to 16, inclusive, as follows:

b. Reappointment: A referee shall be reappointed upon the expiration of the term of his office, unless there is cause for not reappointing him by reason of incompetency, misconduct, or neglect of duty: Provided, however, That, in the case of a part-time referee, an additional cause for not reappointing him shall be that his services are not needed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, to strike out lines 7 to 10, inclusive, as follows:

If the Director shall report to such judge or judges any of the above-mentioned causes for removal of a referee and the judge or judges shall fail to remove such referee, the council may remove him from office for any one or more of such causes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 16, beginning with the word "and", to strike out "and shall further, on petition, be entitled to review of such order by the council, and opportunity to be heard on such review."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, to insert a period after the word "charges" in line 16.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 3, to strike out "less than $3,000 nor."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 5, to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 4160) was read the third time and passed.

ADMINISTRATION OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, before we took up the District of Columbia bill the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] made a motion to recommit House bill 4386, Calendar 1341, which was passed yesterday. I have consulted the Senator from South Dakota, and I now ask unanimous consent that the bill may remain on the calendar for consideration when the Senate next assembles, in order that the Senator from South Dakota and the chairman of the committee may have an opportunity to offer a perfecting and clarifying amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6335, making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes. I make this motion with the understanding that the bill will not be taken up today, but will be the unfinished business of the Senate when it convenes next week.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6335) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

CLAIMS OF PATUXENT DEVELOPMENT CO., INC.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. In his capacity as a Senator, the present occupant of the chair takes the liberty of asking unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 884, Calendar No. 901. When the bill was reached on a previous call of the calendar, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] objected because he thought there ought to be an amendment. The Senator has prepared an amendment which is acceptable.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 884) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina to hear, determine, and render judgment upon certain claims of the Patuxent Development Co., Inc., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina to hear, determine, and render judgment upon any claims of the Patuxent Development Co., Inc., of Southern Pines, N. C., against the United States arising out of the use and occupancy of the Pine Needles Hotel property, at Southern Pines, N. C., by the Army Air Forces Technical Training Command under contract No. W2203 eng-16862, dated March 3, 1942. In the determination of such claims the said company shall, notwithstanding any provision of any contract, release, or other agreement, be deemed to be entitled to receive fair and just compensation from the United States for the use and occupancy of such property, including fair and just compensation for expenses incurred by the said company, and for damage done to such property by reason of its use and occupancy by the United States.

SEC. 2. Suit upon such claims may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceedings for the determination of such claims, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment thereon shall be in the same manner as in the cases over which such court has jurisdiction under the provisions of paragraph twentieth of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] on February 21, 1946, will be stated.

THE LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 9, after the name "United States", it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "all between and including August 17, 1943, and August 31, 1943."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Paul A. Walker to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Navy nominations are routine promotions, and so forth. I ask that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the President be immediately notified of all nominations confirmed this day.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

RECESS TO TUESDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Tuesday, June 18, 1946, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JUNE 17, 1946

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord God of mercy and length of days, without whom nothing is pure, nothing is good, and nothing can abide, blessed be Thine excellent name. Morning, noon, and evening Thou art pouring forth Thy blessings; at Thy touch the better feelings of our natures are moved and the spheres of our usefulness are enlarged. O God, arouse our souls to greater zeal, greater understanding and devotion, that throughout our land evil may be diminished and that peace with justice may prevail. O bring all peoples to a high plane of self-control; hover over them until all laws and institutions shall feel Thy presence and be directed by Thy wisdom, that the ultimate aim of all councils shall be one of accord and of good will to the whole world. Direct the Congress today and shadow our Republic with Thine infinite presence. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6601. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. BROOKS, Mr. BRIDGES, and Mr. GURNEY, to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION TO ATTEND PHILIPPINES CELEBRATION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Law 414, Seventy-ninth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Commission to represent the United States at the ceremonies to be held at Manila on July 4, 1946, the celebration of the independence of the Philippines, and to make and carry out appropriate plans for United States participation in such ceremonies, the following Members of the House: Mr. BELL, of Missouri; Mr. ROBINSON, of Utah; Mr. FERNANDEZ, of New Mexico; Mr. DOMENGEAUX, of Louisiana; Mr. CRAWFORD, of Michigan; and Mr. LECOMPTE, of Iowa.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TRAYNOR asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a newspaper editorial.

Mr. BUNKER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

Mr. HOLIFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter to the President.

Mr. BLAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein an article on the Mariners' Museum.

THE LATE HONORABLE WILLIAM F. ALLEN

Mr. TRAYNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Delaware?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRAYNOR. Mr. Speaker, William F. Allen, former member of the House in the Seventy-fifth Congress from the State of Delaware, affectionately known as "Bill" to his many friends in Delaware, passed to his eternal rest on Friday, June 14, 1946.

Mr. Allen who was long active in Democratic politics served with honor and distinction in the State Senate of Delaware for two terms in 1925 and 1927 and was president pro tempore, during his second term. In 1920 he was a delegate to the Democratic convention in San Francisco.

Mr. Allen as a young man was a railroad worker, later a wholesale produce broker and founder of the Allen Oil Co., wholesale distributors of gasoline and oil. At the time of his death he served as chairman of the Pure Oil Products Corp. of Seaford, Del.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STARKEY], may be excused until next Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SHOWING OF FILM OF ATOMIC BOMB STRIKE ON NAGASAKI

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon at 3 o'clock the War Department will show the official films displaying the atomic-bomb strike at Nagasaki and Hiroshima in the Military Affairs Committee room of the New House Office Building, Room 1310. Every Member of Congress is cordially invited to come and see this.

Within the next few days we are going to be faced with consideration of Senate bill 1717 or a similar House bill. It would be wonderful information for every Member to have to see the official films of what these two bombs did in Japan. The films will be shown at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

STRATEGIC STOCK-PILE BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT RECOMMITTED

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conference report on the bill S. 752, an act to amend the act of June 7, 1939, as amended, relating to the acquisition of stocks of strategic and critical materials for national defense purposes, be recommitted to the conferees.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BIEMILLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a radio speech delivered by himself.

Mr. ELLIS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. SPRINGER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include in each an editorial.

Mr. GILLIE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Frank M. Smith, appearing in the Times-Herald of today, the article pointing out one of the important issues confronting the farmers at this time.

Mr. BUFFETT (at the request of Mr. MILLER of Nebraska) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CLEVENGER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

Mr. WOODRUFF asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include a newspaper editorial and a newspaper article.

Mr. PITTENGER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include an editorial and newspaper item, and in the other to include correspondence and other material.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 40 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

[Mr. STEFAN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

[Mr. LANDIS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

FARMERS COMPELLED TO SELL WHEAT ARE ENTITLED TO HAVE THE PRICE PROTECTED

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the Department of Agriculture has recently issued an order whereby farmers who store their wheat in commercial elevators, are required to sell 50 percent of it. One-half of the amount sold is purchased by the Commodity Credit Corporation and the remainder goes for commercial uses. The Government pays ceiling price for its share of the wheat.

The proposition works out so that a farmer who does not have wheat storage on the farm, is required to sell half of his wheat whether he wants to or not and he must take the price fixed by the Government. In other words, he must sell and must take the Government price. Of course, if he has storage of his own, he can sell his wheat when he chooses to do so.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the demand that farmers sell their wheat to take care of immediate allocations abroad and requirements in this country, it is only fair that the farmer who sells his wheat under these conditions shall be protected in the event of a change in price during the next year.

I have today requested the Secretary of Agriculture to make provision for the issuance of certificates of purchase to farmers who sell their wheat under these conditions and the farmer be allowed to cash such certificates at any time he chooses to do so during the period of a year and whereby they may receive the market price of the wheat at the time such certificates are cashed. The certificates, of course, can be handled through the local banks.

Mr. Speaker, my proposal is fair and equitable and I hope the Department of Agriculture and other agencies of Government dealing with this problem will see fit to accept it immediately.

STOCK PILE OF STRATEGIC RAW MATERIALS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky asked to have a bill re-referred to the committee a few moments ago which is of great importance to everybody. He has just assured me the bill is being referred back to the committee for a correction and not for substantial change. This bill has to do with the stock piling or the accumulation of war materials.

In that connection, Mr. Speaker, my section of the country has to do with the mining of iron ore. Most of the iron ore that went into the production of war materials during World War II came from the little district that I have the honor to represent in northern Minnesota.

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, relates to the stock piling of strategic materials that would be necessary in wartime.

During the last two wars the rich deposits of iron ore in my district have been heavily depleted. In the interest of national defense the citizens of northern Minnesota feel that the present supply of high-grade iron ore should be considered as strategic war material. They believe that a sufficient amount ought to be mined now and stock piled or stored in reserve in the event that our Nation should ever be threatened in another war.

A delegation of the mayors of different towns and villages in northern Minnesota are in Washington for the purpose of conferring with Government officials regarding the problem of stock piling the iron ore for emergency purposes. They have asked me to arrange for them to meet Members of Congress who are interested in the strategic war-material legislation, and I have arranged a conference with them and with my colleagues for Wednesday morning at 10 a. m. in the committee room of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives. We shall be glad to have those of you who are interested meet us at that time and get acquainted with the visiting mayors who have a message dealing with this problem which will appeal to all of you.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

[Mr. JENKINS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

[Mr. VOORHIS of California addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

HEARINGS OF THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, a year ago I introduced House Resolution 197 to open the hearings of the Committee on Appropriations to Members of Congress, which resolution I have not pressed. Incidentally, the opening of these hearings is recommended by the congressional reorganization plan.

This morning I learned that the Committee on Appropriations was holding a hearing on a three-quarters of a billion dollar appropriation for the War Assets Administration, and as chairman of the special committee investigating that agency, I asked permission to attend and was refused. My reason in asking permission to attend was that I wanted to hear that evidence from an agency that last month sold $40,000,000 worth of material and spent $35,000,000 doing it.

I serve notice here and now that at the next meeting of the Committee on Rules I shall press my resolution to open the hearings of the Committee on Appropriations to the Members of Congress.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENKINS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. RICH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by Henry J. Taylor over the radio entitled "Courage Versus Opportunism."

Mr. KEFAUVER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, to include in one two editorials, and in the other an address which he delivered.

Mr. ANDERSON of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement from Gov. Earl Warren, of California.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the request of several of my constituents I may extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered in Chicago by Robert R. Watson. I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $150, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. WEICHEL (at the request of Mr. MICHENER) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. DONDERO (at the request of Mr. MICHENER) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in four instances and to include excerpts in each.

Mr. SABATH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial appearing in yesterday's Post.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a table of veterans' benefits.

PRICES OF FARM PRODUCTS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I heard the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENNINGS] inform the House a few minutes ago that he had been instructed by the Republican National Committee to obtain certain information. Invariably, the Republican National Committee seems to obtain official information before we hear it in the House. I wonder what information they possibly can be seeking? Surely it cannot be in regard to anything which the Republicans, as a national party, have ever done to help the farmer, because that is one thing the Republican Party has never been successfully accused of. The only national party which has ever done anything for farmers is the Democratic Party.

But some of the representatives of farm organizations are not satisfied with what has been done in the past, nor with the high prices farm products are getting now. They forget the days when cotton was 6 cents a pound and corn was burned as fuel because the price would not return the cost of production; and these representatives continue to urge and demand still higher prices notwithstanding that the cost of living has gone up in the last few years nearly 60 percent. I was amazed when I learned that they have forced the Food Administration to boost the price of butter another 11 cents; to boost the price of milk; to boost the price of imitation cheeses.

HOW WILL PEOPLE LIVE?

I want to know, Mr. Speaker, how far this sort of thing can and will go, especially if OPA is mangled, emasculated, stripped of its powers to control runaway prices? I actually believe, Mr. Speaker, that without a strong price-control policy to act as a brake on rising food costs, and other essential costs of living, prices will shoot up with startling rapidity 15 percent, 20 percent, 25 percent, perhaps more.

How can people live then who have small fixed salaries—white-collar workers, wage earners, annuitants, pensioners? How will they exist?

PROSPEROUS FARMS ARE FACTORIES

I know there will be some to say that the poor farmer works from dawn to dark and gets no return. I have been a farmer. I know that farmers do work hard. But skyrocketing consumers' prices will not help the poor tenant farmer who needs help; it will benefit only temporarily the prosperous farmer who is really a businessman, an industrialist, with modern machinery and implements, balanced fertilizers, power from REA cooperatives in his barnyard, motorized plows and harrows and discs and harvesters.

Once more I repeat—I want farmers to receive an adequate return on the products of their toil and investment. I want no man to slave for nothing. I want good prices on farm products. But I do not want to see prices so high people cannot pay them. I admit that some Representatives from strong agricultural districts have voted against extension of the Price Control Act; I realize that for a little time farmers will get a still better return for their products, even after the middlemen have taken their cut; but if this dizzy spiral of price increases continues there is bound to be another crash as in 1930 under Hoover.

REPUBLICANS WILL BE RESPONSIBLE

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that that is what the Republican National Committee and the Republicans generally are going to be responsible for. They do not realize that if the cost of living goes up and up and up, wage earners and salary earners will be obliged to demand higher and higher and higher wages in order to live. Reports from Government departments show that great corporations have salted away millions upon millions of dollars in cash; they can ride out a depression and they will refuse to raise wages, so there will be more strikes.

You are trying to make the farmer believe you are helping him, but you may be digging a pitfall for him. Personally, I am willing that you have all the information you desire; I only hope it will be made public without distortion.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

PRICES OF FARM PRODUCTS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, whenever the farmers of this country have to depend on the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] for their prosperity, God save the country. The cotton farmer gets 1 cent an hour for every cent a pound he gets for his lint cotton. Today he is toiling in the hot sun, fighting the boll weevil and the vicissitudes of nature, for 29 cents an hour, while men are striking all over the country who are drawing as much as two or three dollars an hour or more.

I am not in favor of letting the OPA get back onto the neck of the American farmers. Let farm commodities rise to their normal level and stop trying to penalize the people who till the soil. Let cotton, wheat, corn, and other farm products rise to the normal levels justified by existing conditions, and let the farmers of the Nation enjoy some real prosperity.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. SABATH from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 668, Rept. No. 2292), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6597) authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Flood Control, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the annual report of the Alien Property Custodian on proceedings had under the Trading With the Enemy Act, as amended, for the fiscal year ending June 1945.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 15, 1946.

JOHN G. JOHNSON—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 2579, an act for the relief of John G. Johnson.

The purpose of the bill is to pay the sum of $509.15 in satisfaction of all claims against the United States incident to the packing, storage, and removal of household effects in connection with his change of official station from Washington, D. C., to Chicago, Ill.

The change of station in this case was effected because of the removal of the headquarters office of the Railroad Retirement Board from Washington to Chicago pursuant to the decentralization plan of the President. In order to defray the expenses of the individual employees so transferred, allotments were made from the emergency fund of the President. The letters of allotment in all cases of decentralization limited the weight of household effects which an employee might transport at Government expense to 7,000 pounds. The shipment in Mr. Johnson's case weighed 14,710 pounds—which involved an excess weight of 7,710 pounds—and he was required to refund the proportionate cost of shipping the excess weight, which amounted to $509.15.

All other employees similarly involved who shipped household effects in excess of the authorized weight likewise were required to pay the excess cost, and no reason is apparent for singling out this individual for special consideration.

In view of the above, I am constrained to withhold my approval from the bill.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 15, 1946.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Without objection, the bill and message will be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—CHARLES B. BORELL

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

There is returned herewith, without my approval, H. R. 4716, Seventy-ninth Congress, entitled "An act for the relief of Charles B. Borell."

The purpose of the bill is to propose payment to Charles B. Borell, of Champlain, N. Y., of the sum of $163.20 as reimbursement of the cost of shipping his household effects from Belfast, Ireland, to New York, N. Y., December 27, 1930, in connection with his transfer from Belfast to Washington, D. C. The shipment was accomplished on a vessel not registered under the laws of the United States, in contravention of the requirements of section 601 of the act of May 22, 1928 (45 Stat. 697), that any officer or employee of the United States traveling overseas should travel and transport his personal effects on vessels registered under the laws of the United States. The only reason advanced for the failure to make use of an American vessel is the unsatisfactory statement in a report submitted by the Attorney General that Mr. Borell attempted to secure a copy of the Standardized Government Travel Regulations from his supervisor but that he was unable to furnish him a copy.

The act of May 22, 1928, is a public law, and all citizens of the United States are chargeable with notice of its provisions. Furthermore, the travel orders issued to Mr. Borell directed specifically his return to the United States "via a vessel of American registry." The act of May 22, 1928, also provides the conditions under which failure to comply with its provisions may be excused by directing that "the Comptroller General of the United States shall not credit any allowance for travel or shipping expenses incurred on a foreign ship in the absence of satisfactory proof of the necessity therefor." I am informed that the records of the General Accounting Office do not reflect that any action was taken by Mr. Borell to submit to the Comptroller General of the United States "satisfactory proof of the necessity," for the use of a foreign vessel in the transportation of his household effects; that nothing is indicated otherwise as to any such necessity; that the liability of the United States for the freight charges in this case amounting to $130 was denied by the Comptroller General when the matter was presented to his office for preaudit in January 1931; and that the additional amount claimed, $33.20, as reimbursement for storage, brokerage, and cartage, also was denied for the reason that such charges would not have been necessary had the shipment been made on an American vessel.

The claim for the amount stated in this enactment again was presented to the General Accounting Office in December 1944, nearly 14 years later, but was returned to the claimant with the information that consideration thereof was barred by the 10-year statute of limitations. To single out this individual for relief over others similarly involved who have not been so relieved would not only be an unfair discrimination against them but would furnish, also, a precedent for relief in all other similar cases, thus nullifying, in effect, the provisions of section 601 of the act of May 22, 1928.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

JUNE 15, 1946.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Without objection, the message and accompanying bill are referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RABAUT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include an article from the able pen of Blair Moody, Washington correspondent of the Detroit News, under date of June 16, entitled "Labor Warned To Clean House."

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT NATIONAL PARK

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar (H. R. 4435) to establish the Theodore Roosevelt National Park; to erect a monument in memory of Theodore Roosevelt in the village of Medora, N. Dak.; and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RAILROAD REORGANIZATIONS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5924) to enable debtor railroad corporations, whose properties during a period of 7 years have provided sufficient earnings to pay fixed charges, to effect a readjustment of their financial structure without further proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

ENLISTMENTS FOR DUTY AT LIFEBOAT STATIONS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6219) to authorize the Commandant of the United States Coast Guard to accept enlistments of certain individuals for duty at lifeboat stations during the year 1946.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

AMENDING SECTION 8 (A) OF THE SOIL CONSERVATION AND DOMESTIC ALLOTMENT ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6459) to extend the period within which the Secretary of Agriculture may carry out the purposes of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act by making payments to agricultural producers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when this bill was called 2 weeks ago I asked some questions and the committee did not give me any answer. Is there anyone present who can answer those questions now?

Mr. PACE. I will be glad to try to do so.

Mr. KEAN. This bill provides that reasonable opportunity be given to the States to change the law. I note that the bill was originally passed in 1936. Ten years have passed. I just wonder how long a reasonable opportunity should be.

Mr. PACE. When the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act was originally enacted, it was contemplated it might ultimately become administered by the States. It has proven to be impracticable for each individual State to have a separate program. The act should, in my judgment, be rewritten and the State feature taken out. It has been the policy of the committee and the Congress simply to continue the provision of temporary Federal administration of the program for the time being. This bill simply further extends the over-all program by Federal administration rather than directing it to be done by the States, which I am sure is impractical and which the States have not agreed to assume. In my judgment, this is the finest program for the farmer—soil conservation and soil rebuilding—but I do agree with the gentleman that we should meet the issue and either give it to the States or take the States out of the picture, which the committee will try to do.

Mr. KEAN. I thank the gentleman for the information, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 (a), as amended, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act (U. S. C., 1940 ed., Supp. IV, title 16, sec. 590h (a)) is amended (a) by striking out "January 1, 1947" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1949", and (b) striking out "December 31, 1946" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1948."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN PROPERTY IN WARD COUNTY, N. DAK., TO THE STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1336) to transfer certain real and personal property in Ward County, N. Dak., to the State of North Dakota acting by and through the Industrial Commission of North Dakota.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, upon the written consent of the majority of directors of North Dakota Rural Rehabilitation Corp., the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to transfer and to cause to be transferred forthwith to the State of North Dakota, acting by and through the Industrial Commission of North Dakota, all right, title, claim, and estate in and to all real and personal property in Ward County, N. Dak., known as the Burlington farmstead and coal-mine project, and which said properties were transferred by North Dakota Rural Rehabilitation Corporation, in trust to the United States of America acting by and through the Secretary of Agriculture, by transfer agreement dated June 25, 1937, and which said properties have been subject to administration by the Secretary as trustee under such agreement. Such transfer by the Secretary of Agriculture shall be subject to any legal rights existing by virtue of any lease or other agreement by the Secretary, his successors or representatives as such trustee, to use such properties or any proceed received therefrom wholly for rural rehabilitation.

SEC. 2. The transfer of the real and personal property under this Act is hereby found to be in the general interest of rural rehabilitation and particularly in the rehabilitation of disabled veterans of the United States, and dependent members of their families, resident in North Dakota, and shall not be deemed to impose any liability upon the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to his obligations under such agreement of transfer of June 25, 1937.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF DAMS FOR HIGHWAY BRIDGES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6324) to amend and supplement the Federal-Aid Road Act of July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, to provide for the design and construction of dams so that they will serve as foundations for highway bridges, to provide for the design and construction of highway bridges upon and across such dams, to authorize the granting of easements and rights-of-way in connection therewith, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter each executive department, independent establishment, office, board, bureau, commission, authority, administration, corporation wholly owned or controlled by the United States, or other agency of the Government of the United States, hereinafter collectively and individually referred to as "agency", now or hereafter having jurisdiction over and custody of any dam constructed or to be constructed and owned by or for the United States, shall be, and is hereby, authorized, with any funds available to it, to design and construct any such dam in such manner that it will constitute and serve as a suitable and adequate foundation to support a public highway bridge upon and across such dam, and to design and construct upon the foundation thus provided a public highway bridge upon and across such dam: Provided, That the highway department of the State in which such dam shall be located jointly with the United States Commissioner of Public Roads shall first determine and certify to such agency that such bridge is economically desirable and needed as a link in the State, or Federal-aid highway systems, and shall request such agency to design and construct such dam so that it will serve as a suitable and adequate foundation for a public highway bridge and to design and construct such public highway bridge upon and across such dam, and shall agree to reimburse such agency pursuant to section 4 hereof for any additional costs which it may be required to incur because of the design and construction of such dam so that it will serve as a foundation for a public highway bridge and for any expenditures which it may find necessary to make in designing and constructing such public highway bridge upon and across such dam: Provided further, That in no case shall the design and construction of a bridge upon and across any such dam be undertaken hereunder except by the agency having jurisdiction over and custody of the dam, acting directly or through contractors employed by it, and after such agency shall determine that it will be structurally feasible and will not interfere with the proper functioning and operation of the dam.

SEC. 2. Construction of any bridge upon and across any dam pursuant to this act shall not be commenced unless and until the State in which such bridge is to be located, or the appropriate subdivision of such State, shall enter into an agreement with such agency and with the Commissioner of Public Roads to construct, or cause to be constructed, with or without the aid of Federal funds, the approach roads necessary to connect such bridge with existing public highways and to maintain, or cause to be maintained, such approach roads from and after their completion. Such agreement may also provide for the design and construction of such bridge upon and across the dam by such agency of the United States and for reimbursing such agency the costs incurred by it in the design and construction of the bridge as provided in section 4 hereof. Any such agency is hereby authorized to convey to the State, or to the appropriate subdivision thereof, without cost, such easements and rights-of-way in its custody or over lands of the United States in its custody and control as may be necessary, convenient, or proper for the location, construction, and maintenance of the approach roads referred to in this section, including such roadside parks or recreational areas of limited size as may be deemed necessary for the accommodation of the traveling public. Any bridge constructed pursuant to this act upon and across a dam in the custody and jurisdiction of any agency of the United States, including such portion thereof, if any, as may extend beyond the physical limits of the dam, shall constitute and remain a part of said dam and be maintained by the agency: Provided, however, That any such agency may enter into any such contracts and agreements with the State or its subdivisions respecting public use of any bridge so located and constructed as may be deemed appropriate, but no such bridge shall be closed to public use by the agency except in cases of emergency or when deemed necessary in the interest of national security.

SEC. 3. All costs and expenses incurred and expenditures made by any agency in the exercise of the powers and authority conferred by this act (but not including any costs, expenses, or expenditures which would have been required in any event to satisfy a legal road or bridge relocation obligation or to meet operating or other agency needs) shall be recorded and kept separate and apart from the other costs, expenses, and expenditures of such agency, and no portion thereof shall be charged or allocated to flood control, navigation, irrigation, fertilizer production, the national defense, the development of power, or other program, purpose, or function of such agency.

SEC. 4. Not to exceed $10,000,000 of any money heretofore or hereafter appropriated for expenditure in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Highway Act (42 Stat. 212), as amended and supplemented, shall be available for expenditure by the Commissioner of Public Roads in accordance with the provisions of this act, as an emergency fund, to reimburse any agency for any additional costs or expenditures which it may be required to incur because of the design and construction of any such dam so that it will constitute and serve as a foundation for a public highway bridge upon and across such dam and to reimburse any such agency for any costs, expenses, or expenditures which it may be required to make in designing and constructing any such bridge upon and across a dam in accordance with the provisions of this act, except such costs, expenses, or expenditures as would have been required of such agency in any event to satisfy a legal obligation to relocate a highway or bridge or to meet operating or other agency needs, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated any sum or sums necessary to reimburse the funds so expended by the Commissioner of Public Roads from time to time under the authority of this section. Of each bridge constructed upon and across a dam under the provisions of this act, there may be financed wholly with Federal funds that portion thereof which is located within the physical limits of the masonry structure, or structures, of the dam, and the Commissioner of Public Roads shall in his sole discretion determine what additional portion of the bridge, if any, may be so financed, such determination to be final and conclusive. The remainder of the bridge, and any necessary related approach roads, shall be financed by the State or its appropriate subdivision, with or without the aid of Federal funds; but said portion of the bridge so financed by the State or its subdivisions, including such portion thereof, if any, as may extend beyond the physical limits of the dam shall, nevertheless, be designed and constructed solely by the agency having custody and jurisdiction of the dam as provided in section 1 hereof.

SEC. 5. In making, reviewing, or approving the design of any bridge or approach structure to be constructed under this act the agency shall, in matters relating to roadway design, loadings, clearances and widths, and traffic safeguards, give full consideration to and be guided by the standards and advice of the Public Roads Administration.

SEC. 6. The authority conferred by this act shall be in addition to and not in limitation of authority conferred upon any agency by any other law, and nothing in this act contained shall affect or be deemed to relate to any bridge, approach structure, or highway constructed or to be constructed by any such agency in furtherance of its lawful purposes and requirements or to satisfy a legal obligation incurred independently of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 16, strike out the word "local."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I hope that no objection will be made to the passage of this bill. It is definitely in the public interest. The proposals have been considered for many, many months by representatives of the various agencies and by the Roads Committee of the House. After many conferences all of the agencies are in agreement on the provisions of this measure and they join in asking that Congress enact it into law.

The bill has been fully considered by the Roads Committee and the report of that committee is unanimous in recommending its passage. The proposal of the bill is to establish a national policy so as to have the Public Roads Administration, the State highway commissioner in the State involved, and the agency which may build a dam, cooperate in planning before a dam is built—whether it might be advisable and in the public interest to construct the dam so as to permit a road to be built over it. Dams have been and will be built by the Corps of Engineers, the Interior Department through its Reclamation Division, and the Tennessee Valley Authority. In the future, of course, other dams may be built by other governmental agencies. If a dam is to be built, it would certainly be logical to consider whether the system of roads around the dam would require a road to be built over it. If a road over the dam would fit into the highway scheme of the Federal Government, the State, or the county, the road should be built if it is feasible. This, of course, would save money as it is cheaper to build a road on a dam than to build a separate bridge.

This bill has nothing to do, whatsoever, with the existing requirement placed upon governmental agencies such as the TVA, Corps of Engineers, and the Interior Department to maintain existing highway connections. That is a constitutional requirement. In the case of TVA, for instance, they would be required to build a road over a dam or to maintain a ferry if their work interfered with an existing highway system, or if in the operation of the dam a road over it was necessary. But the TVA—and the same applies to the Corps of Engineers and Interior Department—is not required to consider the future needs of the situation; that is, they do not have to look into the question of whether a road might, in a year or two, be highly desirable over a dam from the highway viewpoint.

Under the provisions of this bill, a corps of engineers would be authorized to build a bridge or road across an existing dam where it was found by the Public Roads Administrator and the highway commissioner of the State that the bridge or road is desirable and essential in the Federal or State road system. The bill also provides that the agency which operates the dam must certify that the building of the bridge or road is economically feasible. No one, of course, would want to have the road or bridge built if it would damage or interfere with the operation of the dam in a material way.

The bill provides that the Federal Government will bear the cost of the bridge or road immediately above the dam. The State or local community will share in the payment of the balance of the structure and will also provide rights-of-way.

In my district there are two dams—Chickamauga near Chattanooga and Watts Bar, which is between Spring City and Decatur—which should have had bridges constructed on them at the time the dams were built. Had this measure been the law it would have required the TVA, Public Roads Administration, and the State highway commissioner to have a conference and determine whether bridges over these dams would fit into and be necessary parts of a State or Federal highway system. In both cases they would have found bridges were necessary.

Mr. Thomas H. McDonald, Commissioner of Public Roads Administration, has stated to me that he felt that bridges should have been built over these dams and that they would be under this bill. Now that the dams have been built, upon passage of this measure it will be the duty of the TVA, Public Roads Administration, and State highway commissioner to consider whether bridges over these dams would be a desirable link in a State or Federal highway system. Mr. McDonald has stated to me that, insofar as he is concerned, he thinks they do constitute necessary links.

The same consideration, of course, will be given to bridges throughout the country. This is not a local measure in any sense of the word, but establishes a national policy which is in the public interest and which will save money for the Government.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to emphasize the remarks made on this bill by my good friend, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER].

He and I, as well as a great many other Members of Congress in both Houses the Nation over, are interested in the passage of this bill, H. R. 6324, which has finally been worked out with the counsel of many of the experts who have dealt respectively with Government dams and Federal aid highways. It is thought that the bill is fair, sound, wise, and in the public interest.

We all join in urging the enactment into law of this excellent bill and its approval by the President.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS ARISING FROM PERSONAL INJURY OR DEATH CAUSED BY MILITARY PERSONNEL OR CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6454) amending the act of July 3, 1943 (57 Stat. 372; 31 U. S. C. 223B), entitled "An act to provide for settlement of claims for damage to or loss or destruction of property or personal injury or death caused by military personnel or civilian employees, or otherwise incident to activities of the War Department or of the Army."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, this legislation continues during peacetime the amendment to the law that we passed during wartime authorizing the War Department to settle claims up to $1,000.

If we do not pass this bill we shall have hundreds and hundreds of small private claims coming in here. This is a departmental bill. It is an amendment to a law which was requested by the War Department and which was reported out of the Claims Committee 2 or 3 years ago and passed. It is a permanent extension of the time so they can settle claims while the war is technically going on and while the Army is still busy getting those claims. That briefly is the effect of the bill. It is a bill in the interest of expediting the handling of public business.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. As I understand the gentleman's statement, it does not permit the settlement of claims in excess of $1,000?

Mr. PITTENGER. That is correct.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. In other words, if a claim is in excess of $1,000 it must come to the Claims Committee.

Mr. PITTENGER. It would still have to come to the Claims Committee and to Congress.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does this permit the War Department to settle personal injury claims as well as property damage?

Mr. PITTENGER. That is my understanding; I am sure that is correct.

As I have indicated, this bill came from the Departments. The War Department asked for it, the Navy Department also favored it, and the Bureau of the Budget has no objections to these amendments.

This legislation makes permanent in peacetime temporary legislation which was intended to help out the War Department while the war was in progress. There can be no real objections to the passage of this bill, because it will help in the payment of claims against the Government, and at the same time decrease the volume of work by the Claims Committee and by Congress in the passage of legislation involving small claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of July 3, 1943 (57 Stat. 372; 31 U. S. C. 223b), as amended by the act of May 29, 1945 (Public Law 67, 79th Cong.), be, and it is hereby, further amended by striking out the figures and words "$500, or in time of war not in excess of" as they appear in the first sentence thereof, and by striking out the figures and words "$500, or in time of war $1,000," as they appear in the last sentence of said section and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,000."

SEC. 2. The provisions of section 1 of this act shall be applicable to section 1 of the act of December 28, 1945 (Public Law 277, 79th Cong.).

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

METHOD OF PAYMENT OF OVERTIME, LEAVE, AND HOLIDAY COMPENSATION IN CERTAIN DEPARTMENTS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6532) to provide a method for payment in certain Government establishments of overtime, leave, and holiday compensation on the basis of night rates pursuant to certain decisions of the Comptroller General, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims by employees or former employees of the United States for overtime, leave, and holiday compensation based upon the difference between amounts heretofore received by such employees for overtime, leave, and holiday compensation computed at day rates and such compensation computed at night rates pursuant to decisions of the Comptroller General of the United States (23 Comp. Gen. 962; 24 Comp. Gen. 39, 155, 189, 550, 867), shall be paid by the appropriate disbursing officers for the department or agency under which such compensation was earned: Provided, That claims for amounts due deceased persons or persons determined to be mentally incompetent shall be settled in the General Accounting Office.

SEC. 2. The heads of the departments and agencies concerned, or such subordinates as they may designate, are hereby authorized and directed to certify to the proper disbursing officer or to the General Accounting Office, as may be appropriate, the amount found to be due under any claim authorized to be paid by section 1 of this act. Payments made pursuant to certifications hereby authorized shall, in the absence of fraud, be final and conclusive.

SEC. 3. (a) No amount shall be certified for payment under section 2 of this act on account of any compensation earned prior to March 28, 1934, and this act shall not apply with respect to any claim for compensation earned subsequent to the date of approval thereof.

(b) No amount shall be certified for payment under section 2 of this act unless application shall have been submitted in writing, prior to the expiration of 2 years after the date of approval of this act, over the signature of the person performing the service: Provided, That claims of deceased persons or persons determined to be mentally incompetent may be submitted by their heirs or personal representatives.

(c) Except as otherwise provided in this section, no claim submitted in accordance with the terms of this act for compensation earned between the dates specified in subsection (a) of this section shall be barred by any statute of limitations.

SEC. 4. Any amount certified for payment under section 2 of this act shall be paid without deduction for retirement or withholding of any amount for taxes.

SEC. 5. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for payment of amounts certified under this act.

SEC. 6. The heads of the departments and agencies concerned, including the Comptroller General of the United States, are hereby authorized to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act in their respective agencies.

With the following committee amendment:

: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INSTRUCTION AT UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY OF 20 PERSONS FROM THE AMERICAN REPUBLICS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1288) to authorize the course of instruction at the United States Military Academy to be given to not exceeding 20 persons at a time from the American Republics, other than the United States.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to permit, upon designation of the President of the United States, not exceeding 20 persons at a time from the American Republics (other than the United States) to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y. Not more than three persons from any one of such republics shall receive instruction under authority of this act at the same time. The persons receiving instruction under authority of this act shall receive the same pay, allowances, and emoluments, to be paid from the same appropriations, as cadets at the United States Military Academy appointed from the United States, except that the mileage allowance payable to such persons for travel performed in proceeding to the United States Military Academy for initial admission shall not be limited to mileage for travel within the continental limits of the United States. Such persons shall, except as may be determined by the Secretary of War, be subject to the same rules and regulations governing admission, attendance, discipline, resignation, discharge, dismissal, and graduation, as cadets at the United States Military Academy appointed from the United States, but they shall not be entitled to appointment to any office or position in the United States Army by reason of their graduation from the United States Military Academy: Provided, That any persons permitted to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy under authority of this act shall not be subject to the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 2. After the date of enactment of this act, no person shall have authority to permit citizens of the American Republics to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to permit citizens of the American Republics to receive instruction at professional educational institutions and schools maintained and administered by the Government of the United States or by departments or agencies thereof," approved June 24, 1938 (52

Stat. 1034). Any person who is receiving instruction at the United States Military Academy on such date of enactment under authority of such act of June 24, 1938, may, in the discretion of the President, be permitted to continue to receive such instruction and, if so permitted, shall thereafter be deemed to be receiving instruction under the provisions of section 1 of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO GOVERN THE DISTRIBUTION OF WAR TROPHIES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5915) to govern the distribution of war trophies.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

DECORATION FOR ACTS PERFORMED DURING THE PRESENT WAR

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1523) to modify the time limitations governing the award of certain military and naval decorations for acts performed during the present war.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limitations prescribed by the act of July 9, 1918 (40 Stat. 845, 871), and the act of August 7, 1942 (56 Stat. 743, 744), with respect to the time within which the Medal of Honor, Distinguished Service Cross, Navy Cross, Distinguished Service Medal, Silver Star Medal, Navy and Marine Corps Medal, and devices in lieu thereof, may be issued and the time within which statements or reports suggesting or recommending such awards may be made shall not apply to any case in which (1) the act or service justifying the award was performed during the period commencing December 7, 1941, and ending with the date of the termination of hostilities in the present war and (2) the recommendation for official recognition of such act or service was initiated not later than 6 months after the latter date. The term "date of the termination of hostilities in the present war" means the date proclaimed by the President as the date of such termination or the date specified in a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress as the date of such termination, whichever is earlier.

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1273) to provide for the acquisition by exchange of non-Federal property within the Glacier National Park.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept title to any non-Federal lands, interests in lands, buildings, or other property, real or personal, within the authorized boundaries of the Glacier National Park, as now or hereafter established, when the acquisition by exchange of such property would, in his judgment, be in the best interests of the United States. In exchange for the non-Federal property so to be acquired, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to convey to the grantors of such property, or to their nominees, any federally owned lands, interests in lands, buildings, or other property, real or personal, within the authorized boundaries of the Glacier National Park, located in the State of Montana and administered by the National Park Service, which are of approximately equal value, as determined by the Secretary, to the property being acquired. In order to facilitate the making of such exchanges, the Secretary of the Interior may enter into agreements for the reservation in conveyances to the United States, or for the grant in conveyances from the United States, of such estates for years, life estates, or other interests as may be consistent, in his judgment, with the accomplishment of the purposes of this act, but all such limitations shall be considered in determining the equality of the interests to be exchanged.

SEC. 2. The title to all lands, interests in lands, buildings, or other property to be acquired pursuant to this act shall be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior. Any property acquired pursuant to this act shall, upon acceptance of title thereto, become a part of the Glacier National Park, and shall be subject to all laws applicable to such area. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue such regulations as he deems necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AVAILABILITY OF CERTAIN DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR APPROPRIATIONS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1857) to authorize the availability for certain necessary administrative expenses of appropriations for the Department of the Interior.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That appropriations for field work of the Department of the Interior shall be available for the hire, with or without personal services, of boats, work animals, and animal-drawn and motor-propelled vehicles and equipment.

SEC. 2. Appropriations for contingent expenses of the Department of the Interior shall be available, to the extent specified therein, for the payment of damages to private property (not to exceed $500 in any one case) caused by the negligent operation of motor vehicles under such appropriations.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior, in carrying out the act of February 22, 1935, as amended (15 U. S. C., ch. 15A), is authorized to cooperate with Federal and State authorities.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING AN EXCHANGE OF LAND IN EAGLE COUNTY, COLO.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5840) to authorize an exchange of land in Eagle County, Colo.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, upon recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, is hereby authorized to accept on behalf of the United States title to the hereinafter-described lands, to wit: Beginning at corner numbered 3 of tract 45, which is also corner numbered 4 of tract 46 D of section 5, township 5 south, range 84 west, sixth principal meridian; thence north eighty-seven degrees forty-one minutes east a distance of two and one one-hundredths chains; thence north one degree forty-eight minutes east a distance of four and sixty-one one-hundredths chains; thence east a distance of one and sixty-six one-hundredths chains; thence south one degree forty-eight minutes west a distance of twenty-four and thirty-six one-hundredths chains; thence south eighty-seven degrees fifty-one minutes west a distance of three and sixty-seven one-hundredths chains to corner numbered 7 of tract 47 and corner numbered 2 of tract 48, said section 5; thence north one degree forty-eight minutes east nineteen and seventy-five one-hundredths chains to point of beginning, situate in Eagle County, Colo., and containing approximately 8 acres, and to issue to the persons conveying said lands a patent to lands of the United States described as follows: Lots 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24 of section 31, township 3 south, range 84 west, sixth principal meridian, being in Eagle County, Colo., and containing approximately one hundred and forty-four and forty-two one-hundredths acres.

SEC. 2. That title may be accepted or patent issued subject to reservations or exceptions of minerals, timber, or easements and that the survey of the tract to be conveyed to the United States shall be by and at the expense of the United States.

SEC. 3. That upon acceptance of title thereto the lands conveyed to the United States shall be used and administered by the Secretary of Agriculture in connection with the protection and management of the White River National Forest and shall be subject to the rules and regulations applicable to said national forest.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING FURTHER THE CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3492) to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 17 of the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended, is further amended by changing the final period to a semicolon and adding thereto the following: "nor shall there be any withholding or recovery of any moneys mentioned in this act on account of any certification or payment made by any former officer or employee of the United States in the discharge of his official duties unless the head of the department or agency on behalf of which the certification or payment was made certifies to the Civil Service Commission that such certification or payment involved a fraud on the part of such officer or employee."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTION 6 OF CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT OF MAY 29, 1930, AS AMENDED

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4651) to amend section 6 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the third paragraph of section 6 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"If a recovered disability annuitant whose annuity is discontinued subsequent to June 30, 1945, shall fail to obtain reemployment through no fault of his own in any position included in the provisions of this act, he shall be considered as having been involuntarily separated from the service within the meaning of section 7 of this act as of the date he was retired for disability and shall, after the discontinuance of the disability annuity, be entitled to an annuity in accordance with the provisions of such section, computed at the attained age at the date of discontinuance of the disability annuity."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "through no fault of his own."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SETTING ASIDE CERTAIN LANDS FOR THE KIOWA, COMANCHE, AND APACHE INDIAN RESERVATION, OKLA.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1043) to set aside certain lands in Oklahoma in trust for the Indians of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian Reservation.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described lands are hereby eliminated from the Rainy Mountain School Reserve in Oklahoma and title is hereby vested in the United States in trust for the Indians of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian Reservation: South half and northwest quarters of section 13; all of section 14; south half and northeast quarter of section 23; and west half of section 24; township 6 north, range 16 west, of the Indian meridian, Oklahoma, containing 1,920 acres.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADJUSTMENTS—CROW IRRIGATION PROJECT, MONTANA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4983) to provide for adjustments in connection with the Crow irrigation project, Crow Indian Reservation, Mont.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (1) notwithstanding any other provisions of law, the aggregate charge for all expenditures which have been made for construction of the Crow irrigation project, Crow Indian Reservation, Mont., exclusive of the Willow Creek storage works, against all non-Indian-owned lands under the Crow irrigation project is hereby fixed at $45,000, which charge shall be the sole charge against these lands. The charge thus fixed shall cover all such expenditures, whatever their source, chargeable against such lands and includes expenditures from reimbursable and gratuity appropriations from the Treasury of the United States, and from moneys of the Crow Tribe whether or not the expenditures of such tribal moneys were specifically approved by the Indians in council.

(2) All non-Indian-owned lands under this project shall bear their pro rata share, computed on a per-acre basis, of the total charge fixed by this section, except that against the pro rata share chargeable to any particular tract there first shall be credited payments which have been already made on that tract to meet charges for reimbursable expenditures arising from the construction of such irrigation project. No credit in excess of such pro rata share, computed on a per-acre basis, shall be allowed. No refunds shall be made of amounts paid on any tract in excess of such pro rata share, computed on a per-acre basis. The first lien of the United States shall continue on each non-Indian-owned tract for repayment of the pro rata share, computed on a per-acre basis, against such tract less any credit allowable under this subsection. The word "tract" as used in this act shall mean a 40-acre legal subdivision or fraction thereof.

(3) Where the Secretary of the Interior finds that certain non-Indian-owned lands subject to the pro rata share of the costs dealt with in section 1, as well as Indian-owned lands within the irrigation project, cannot be put to immediate productive use due to a need of proper drainage facilities; need of clearing and leveling; need of additional project construction work; present unfavorable soil conditions which can be corrected at an economic cost, he shall declare such lands temporarily nonirrigable until such time as he shall determine such lands can be put to productive use, and no irrigation project charges shall be assessed against such lands during such periods. Upon application of the landowners the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to eliminate from the project 504⅘ acres of land located in sections 21, 27, and 28 of township 5 south, range 26 east, and in section 10 of township 1 north, range 33 east, described in the district engineer's report of November 29, 1945, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on the conditions of the Crow Indian irrigation project.

(4) The cost of the necessary survey to determine the irrigable acreage of the project, made by the land designation committee, whose report was approved by the Secretary of the Interior in 1944, shall be reimbursed in a sum not to exceed $5,000 by the owners of project lands in Indian and non-Indian ownership. Such costs shall be reimbursed by the project landowners over a period not to exceed 3 years. During this period each year the per-acre annual operation and maintenance charge shall be increased in amount sufficient to insure the per-acre repayment of this cost.

(5) All obligations arising out of contracts heretofore entered into with the United States for the payment to the United States of construction charges in connection with this project are hereby canceled, and all lands heretofore covered by such contracts shall be subject to the provisions of subsections (1), (2), (3), and (4) of this section.

(6) The provisions of this section shall become operative only when the Secretary of the Interior shall determine that the contracts contemplated by section 3 have been entered into, and that the releases required by section 2 have been obtained.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior shall obtain releases of claims which non-Indians owning lands under the Crow irrigation project may have against the United States on account of the construction of the Crow irrigation project or the assessment or collection of construction or operation and maintenance charges in connection with the project.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior may enter into contracts with irrigation districts acting on behalf of all non-Indians owning land under the Crow irrigation project in which the irrigation districts shall agree to pay the charge of $45,000 fixed by subsection (1) of section 1. Such contracts shall provide for the payment of the aforesaid sum on a per-acre basis without interest over a 20-year period in equal annual installments, credits to be given in the amounts allowable under subsection (2) of said section 1; for the payment by the districts of the proportionate share chargeable to the lands within the districts of the annual cost of operation and maintenance of the project; and for a first lien on the lands within the districts in favor of the United States for the repayment of such construction and operation and maintenance charges.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Interior may enter into contracts with irrigation districts acting on behalf of all non-Indians owning lands under the Crow irrigation project on the Little Big Horn River watershed in which the irrigation districts shall agree to repay to the United States the proportionate share chargeable to the non-Indian lands within the districts of the reimbursable cost of construction of the Willow Creek storage works not to exceed $210,726. The contracts with the districts shall provide for delivery by the Secretary or his duly authorized representative to lands within the irrigation districts of the proper share of the waters stored by the Willow Creek storage works, for the repayment of such construction charges on a per-acre basis in equal annual installments over a 40-year period without interest, and for the payment on a per-acre basis of the proportionate share chargeable to the lands within the district of the cost of the annual operation and maintenance of the Willow Creek storage works. The contract shall provide that the United States shall have no lien on the lands included within the irrigation districts for the repayment of the share of the construction cost of the Willow Creek storage works to be paid by the irrigation districts under the contracts. In the event of the failure of the districts to fulfill their obligations of contracts with the United States before entire repayment of the construction charges shall have been completed under the contract, all unpaid portions of such construction charges shall again become charges against the lands within the districts and the United States shall again have a first lien on the lands for the repayment of such charges remaining unpaid. The contracts may provide that if during any year the operation of the Willow Creek storage works is so affected in any way, except by lack of adequate precipitation, that no delivery of storage waters can be made to lands within the irrigation districts, the payments by the districts of construction charges shall be suspended, and that upon resumption of operation the payment of annual construction charges shall also be resumed until the total charges fixed by the contracts shall have been paid. If the irrigation districts at any time shall fail to pay the construction or operation and maintenance charges as provided in the contracts, the Secretary of the Interior shall not deliver any stored waters from the Willow Creek storage works to lands within the districts until the districts shall have complied with the provisions of the contracts.

Until such time as the irrigation district or districts shall execute a contract as herein provided for, the lands within said district or districts shall not be liable for either the construction or operation and maintenance charges of the Willow Creek storage works, nor shall such lands be entitled to any benefits from said storage works, either by the direct use of the stored water or by substituted water, except as authorized by section 8 of this act.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Interior may enter into contracts with non-Indians owning lands on the Little Big Horn River watershed under private ditches which have been constructed prior to the date of approval of this act, in which, on the same terms and conditions as are contained in the contracts entered into pursuant to section 4, such owners shall agree to the repayment of their proper proportionate share of the reimbursable cost of construction and the cost of operation and maintenance of the Willow Creek storage works, and the Secretary shall agree to deliver water to their ditches. The covenants of each such contract shall run with the land, and the contract shall provide for a first lien in favor of the United States for the repayment of such construction and operation and maintenance charges. Each owner shall be privileged to pay in full at any time his pro rata share of the construction cost. The Secretary shall not enter into any contract pursuant to this section after 5 years have elapsed from the date of approval of this act. The Secretary shall also designate the Indian lands under private ditches to receive benefits provided for herein. The Indian lands thus designated shall be subject to provisions and conditions of the act of July 1, 1932 (47 Stat. 564–565).

SEC. 6. The contracts entered into between the Secretary of the Interior and an irrigation district or districts, or with non-Indians owning lands under private ditches, in pursuance to sections 4 and 5, shall provide that the owners of the lands included in such contracts shall agree to pay annually to the United States for a period of 5 years beginning November 15 next following the date of approval of this act, $1 per acre for each irrigable acre covered by such contract or contracts, and shall further agree at the end of such 5-year period to pay thereafter their proportionate share of the total reimbursable cost of the construction of the Willow Creek storage works in the sum of $210,726. The Secretary of the Interior shall allow full credit to each landowner for all construction cost repayments applicable to the Willow Creek storage works, made to the United States during such 5-year period, and on behalf of all payments made pursuant to the temporary public notice of the Secretary of the Interior issued March 1, 1944.

SEC. 7. Water stored in the Willow Creek storage works shall be made available by the Secretary of the Interior only to the following lands on the Little Big Horn River watershed irrigable under irrigation works which have been constructed prior to the date of approval of this act; Indian-owned lands; non-Indian-owned lands within the irrigation districts referred to in section 4; those non-Indian-owned lands covered by contracts entered into pursuant to section 5, subject, however, to the authority of the Secretary to dispose of the water as provided for in section 8 hereof.

SEC. 8. Pending the execution of contracts with a district or districts, and thereafter, the Secretary of the Interior may, in lieu of disposing of the stored water as prescribed in sections 4, 5, and 6 of this act, dispose of any uncontracted part of the stored water during any year on an acre-foot basis upon such terms and conditions as he shall determine. The Secretary is authorized to fix annual charges to cover the costs of operating and maintaining the storage works and the distribution of the stored water.

SEC. 9. No further construction work on the Crow Indian Reservation shall be undertaken by the United States without the prior consent of (1) the Crow Tribe, (2) the irrigation district or districts affected, and (3) the Congress of the United States, and without the prior execution of repayment contracts by the non-Indian water users or irrigation district or districts, obligating the non-Indian lands for the payment of their share of such construction costs. The consent of the Crow Tribe shall be obtained by a majority vote of the general council of the tribe expressed at a duly convened meeting: Provided, however, That such consents shall not be necessary to construct laterals necessary to irrigate the lands within the Crow Indian irrigation project as now determined and classified as irrigable by the land designation committee report, as approved by the Secretary of the Interior in 1944.

SEC. 10. Pursuant to the findings of the report referred to in section 1 (3) the sum of $676,291.83 of operation and maintenance assessments against Indian- and non-Indian-owned lands of the project on the water users' ledger is hereby canceled, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed (1) to credit not to exceed $28,000 on future operation and maintenance assessments against certain lands described in the report; (2) to make refunds not to exceed $3,000 from Crow project operation and maintenance collections on deposit in the Treasury to cover overpayments made to the project by landowners as provided for in the report; (3) to make refunds not to exceed $40,000 from Crow project operation and maintenance collections to heirs of certain Crow allottees on account of moneys withheld from their estates by the United States and used for the payment of delinquent operation and maintenance assessments.

SEC. 11. All claims of every description, all costs, charges, and unpaid assessments against lands in Indian ownership under the Crow irrigation project system, arising out of the expenditure of Treasury and tribal moneys for the construction, operation, and maintenance of the Crow irrigation project system, including the Willow Creek storage works, to and including expenditures for the fiscal year 1945, except the proportionate share of the amount authorized in section 1 (4) of this act, are hereby canceled, and the obligations of the Indians and their lands to repay any part or all of said claims or sums are hereby dissolved: Provided, That the Crow Tribe of Indians, by appropriate action of their tribal council, releases the United States and all lands of the irrigation project from any and all claims said tribe may have arising out of the expenditure of tribal moneys by the United States for the construction, operation, and maintenance of said project.

SEC. 12. All costs and charges against lands in non-Indian ownership under the Crow Indian irrigation project system arising out of the expenditure of Treasury and tribal moneys for the construction, operation, and maintenance of the said project systems except (1) $210,726, which is the proportionate part of the cost of the Willow Creek storage works chargeable to non-Indian lands; (2) $45,000 as provided for in section 1 (1) of this act; (3) the proportionate share of the non-Indian landowners in the $5,000 expenditure provided for in section 1 (4) hereof; and (4) all unpaid operation and maintenance assessments remaining on the water users' ledgers of the Crow project after the adjustments have been made, as herein provided, which assessments when collected shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States for the operation and maintenance of the project are hereby canceled and the obligations of non-Indians and their lands to repay to the United States or the Crow Tribe any part or all of said sums so canceled are hereby dissolved: Provided, however, That this cancellation of reimbursable costs and charges shall not serve to change the present lien status except as provided in section 4 hereof.

SEC. 13. The cancellation of the reimbursable status of all project construction, operation, and maintenance costs and expenditures as herein provided shall be reported in the reimbursable accounts rendered to the Comptroller General of the United States, pursuant to the provisions of the act of April 4, 1910 (36 Stat. 270), as deductions from the total indebtedness of the project without regard to fiscal years or appropriations from which expenditures were made.

SEC. 14. This act, so far as non-Indian lands are involved, shall cease to be effective when 2 years have elapsed from the date of its approval unless prior to that time the contracts contemplated in section 3 have been executed and the releases required by section 2 have been obtained: Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to the cancellations, adjustments, and application of credits to be entered on the operation and maintenance water users' ledgers not exceeding $60,300 pursuant to the findings of the report of conditions on the Crow Indian irrigation project herein referred to, which entries shall be made upon approval of this act.

SEC. 15. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe regulations and to perform all acts required for the effectuation of the purposes of this act.

SEC. 16. All provisions of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby superseded to the extent of such inconsistency.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 11, line 5, after the word "assessment" insert a semicolon and the following: "to reform in accordance with the adjustments made by the provisions of this act any deferment contracts executed in accordance with the provisions of section 1 of the act of June 22, 1936 (49 Stat. 1803)."

Page 12, line 10, strike out the words "as herein provided" and insert the following: "as recommended in the district engineer's report of November 29, 1945, referred to in section 1 (3) of this act."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FARM LANDS ON BIG HORN UNIT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6195) to amend section 1 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 751), entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands of the Crow Tribe, for the distribution of tribal funds, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of May 26, 1926 (44 Stat. 658).

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 751), as amended by section 1 of the act of May 26, 1926 (44 Stat. 658), be further amended by striking out the next to the last sentence of section 1, reading "No lease shall be made for a period longer than 5 years," and by substituting therefor the following: "No lease of any allotment shall be made for a period longer than 5 years except that irrigable lands in Indian ownership under the Big Horn unit of the Crow Indian irrigation project may be leased for farming purposes for a period not exceeding 10 years. All other provisions of these acts with respect to the leasing of Crow Indian lands shall continue in effect."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RECORDS OF EDUCATION AND TRAINING IN ARMY TRANSPORTATION CORPS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6263) to amend the act of June 23, 1943, so as to authorize inclusion of periods of education and training in an Army Transportation Corps civilian marine school as service in the merchant marine.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first sentence of the act entitled "An act to provide reemployment rights for persons who leave their positions to serve in the merchant marine, and for other purposes, approved June 23, 1943 (U. S. C., 1940 ed., Supp. IV, title 50 App., sec. 1471), is amended to read as follows: "That when used in this act the term 'service in the merchant marine' means service as an officer or member of the crew on or in connection with a vessel documented under the laws of the United States or a vessel owned by, chartered to, or operated by or for the account or use of the Administrator, as an enrollee in the United States Maritime Service on active duty, and, to such extent as the Administrator shall prescribe, any period awaiting assignment to such service and any period of education or training for such service in any school or institution under the jurisdiction of the Administrator or any civilian marine school under the jurisdiction of the Army Transportation Corps."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ISSUANCE OF DEVICES IN RECOGNITION OF THE SERVICES OF MERCHANT SAILORS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6488) to amend the act to provide for the issuance of devices in recognition of the services of merchant sailors.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the act of May 10, 1943 (57 Stat. 81), as amended by the act of July 31, 1945 (59 Stat. 511; 50 U. S. C., App. 753f), be, and it is hereby, amended by inserting, after the comma following the citation "(9 F. R. 10613)" the words "as amended by Executive Order 9692 of February 5, 1946 (11 F. R. 1421)."

AMENDMENT OF SECURITIES EXCHANGE ACT OF 1934

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3129) to amend the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 so as to limit the power of the Securities and Exchange Commission to regulate transactions in exempted securities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938, AS AMENDED

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5958) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the bill why this bill is necessary if we pass the next bill? It seems to me we might eliminate this bill and pass the other one.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, it is not at all necessary immediately in view of the next bill. But I think we should proceed and pass this one, as it has the unanimous approval of all the peanut growers. The gentleman understands that the peanut acreage has now almost trebled what it used to be. When the acreage was 1,600,000 acres the act provided that no State should be allotted less than 95 percent of what was allotted to it in 1941. The peanut production has been greatly expanded in some areas and not in others. Frankly, this bill is for the particular benefit of the Virginia and North Carolina producing areas, which were the original peanut-producing sections of the United States and which have not been able to expand acreage. It simply strikes the words "not less than 95 percent" and says that when we do return to acreage control each State will receive at least as much acreage as it was allotted in 1941.

Mr. KEAN. The next bill, of course, recommends a study of the whole question and the formulation of permanent legislation.

Mr. PACE. The next bill will suspend the quotas for 1 year.

Mr. KEAN. The gentleman feels that in spite of the next bill we should pass this one?

Mr. PACE. This bill is unanimously agreed to by everyone, the Agricultural Department and everywhere else.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 358 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., Supp. IV, title 7, sec. 1358), is amended (a) by striking out, in the provision in subsection (a) and in the first proviso in subsection (c), the language "95 percent of", and (b) by inserting before the colon at the end of the first proviso in subsection (c) the following: "and any additional acreage so required shall be in addition to the national allotment and the production from such acreage shall be in addition to the national marketing quota."

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PEANUT-MARKETING QUOTAS

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 359) relating to peanut-marketing quotas under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] a question. In view of his previous statement, I understand that the acreage has been increased by about 300 percent.

Mr. PACE. About treble.

Mr. SABATH. In view of that tremendous increase, why is it that its costs me 60 cents a pound for peanuts now when I used to get them for 10 cents a pound in years gone by?

Mr. PACE. I might say to the gentleman that the farmer receives at the present time 8 cents per pound, and the gentleman can make his own calculation of the spread between the farmer and the consumer.

Mr. SABATH. I pay about seven times as much for them than the farmer receives.

Mr. PACE. The farmer receives between 8 and 9 cents a pound.

Mr. SABATH. In view of the fact that we granted a rule to the gentleman's committee some years ago for the purpose of making an investigation as to the spread, may I ask the gentleman what he has done and why that matter has not been somehow or another adjusted and the unfair prices eliminated?

Mr. PACE. I might say to the gentleman that under the splendid leadership of our chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN], that committee has been functioning throughout the year. It is very hopeful that it will be in a position shortly to submit some very worth-while recommendations.

Mr. SABATH. How soon may we expect a report on it?

Mr. PACE. I hope during the year. The chairman, perhaps, would be in a position to say.

Mr. SABATH. I am anxious to help the farmers because they receive only about one-seventh or one-eighth of what we pay for the peanuts, and I want to know where that money goes, and why.

Mr. PACE. That is one of the problems; the spread between what the farmer receives and the consumer.

Mr. SABATH. I think they should receive a little higher price and we should pay less.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of sections 357–359, inclusive, of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 edition, Supp. IV, title 7, secs. 1357 to 1359, inclusive), and in view of the critical shortage of high protein foods and feeds, and fats and oils, peanut-marketing quotas shall not be proclaimed with respect to the crop of peanuts produced in the calendar year 1947, and no national, State, or farm acreage allotments for peanuts for the 1947 crop shall be established.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SOLICITOR OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1460) to fix the salary of the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the sponsor of this bill to give us a little information on it.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. This bill fixes the statutory salary for the Solicitor of the Interior. At the present time he comes under the Classification Act. He gets $9,975, and we deemed it advisable to fix a flat salary of $10,000 and also to provide that the Solicitor shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The Solicitor's office has gradually increased in importance until it was felt that he should be appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate and his salary fixed by law. It amounts to a $25 salary increase a year over the present incumbent.

Mr. RICH. Why do you adopt this method? Does the Secretary of the Interior recommend it?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. It came to us from the Senate and it passed the House and had a favorable report from the Secretary of the Interior except the original bill as drafted contemplated that the Secretary of the Interior would make the appointment, and the Senate and the House felt that the President should make the appointment and confirmation had by the Senate. If we fixed it as a definite statutory position we felt that should be the case. It is not my personal bill, but I think it is a good bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Florida this question? After this statutory salary of $10,000 is set, how much bonus will the official then receive under the laws recently passed?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I have not checked as to that. That is a general civil-service bill. We fix the salary definitely at $10,000. That apparently is the limit, and I understand $10,000 salaries are not affected under the civil-service bill. That is the limit, and there will be nothing additional.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, those drawing $10,000 do not receive any additional benefits?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. That is right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the legal work of the Department of the Interior shall be performed under the supervision and direction of the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior with the advice and consent of the Senate and who shall be paid a salary of $10,000 per annum.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "Secretary of the Interior" and insert "President."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider, was laid on the table.

IMPROVEMENT OF RANGE LANDS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1392) for the purpose of renewing and increasing forage and improving watershed conditions on range lands, forests or Indian lands, or other public owned and controlled land of the United States; authorizing the sowing operations by airplane, machinery, or other means, for conducting experiments to improve methods of reseeding, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLS). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

AUTHORIZING THE EXCHANGE OF OREGON LANDS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2423) to authorize the exchange of lands acquired by the United States for the Silver Creek recreational demonstration project, Oregon, for the purpose of consolidating holdings therein, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of consolidating Federal holdings of lands acquired for the Silver Creek recreational demonstration project, in the State of Oregon, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to exchange any such lands for other lands of approximately equal value when in his opinion such action is in the interest of the United States, the title to any lands acquired hereunder to be satisfactory to the Secretary. Upon the vesting of title thereto in the United States, any lands acquired pursuant to this authorization shall become a part of the Silver Creek recreational demonstration project, and shall be subject to the laws applicable thereto.

SEC. 2. Upon the conveyance of the Silver Creek recreational demonstration project to the State of Oregon, or political subdivision thereof, pursuant to the act of June 6, 1942 (56 Stat. 326), the Secretary of the Interior may authorize the grantee to exchange or otherwise dispose of any lands so conveyed in order to acquire other lands of approximately equal value for the purpose of consolidating the holdings of the grantee, the title to lands so acquired to be satisfactory to the Secretary. For the aforesaid purpose the Secretary is authorized to execute a release, as to the particular lands involved, of any condition providing for a reversion of title to the United States, that may be contained in the conveyance by the United States to said grantee. No such release shall be executed, however, unless the grantee shall agree, in form satisfactory to the Secretary, that the lands to be acquired by it shall be subject to the conditions contained in the original conveyance from the United States, except that, in lieu of a provision for reversion, the grantee shall agree to convey said lands to the United States upon a finding by the Secretary in accordance with the procedure provided in said act of June 6, 1942, that the grantee has not complied with such conditions during a period of more than 3 years. Lands so conveyed to the United States shall be subject to administration or disposition in like manner as recreational demonstration project lands that revert to the United States under the terms of the aforesaid act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1963) to authorize additional permanent professors of the United States Military Academy.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That one additional permanent professor is hereby authorized for each of the nine departments of instruction of the United States Military Academy for which one such professor is now authorized. Such professors shall have the rank, pay, allowances, retirement rights, and other benefits authorized for other permanent professors of the Academy: Provided, That the senior professor in each department of instruction shall be the head thereof.

SEC. 2. The positions of professor of law and professor of ordnance of the United States Military Academy hereafter shall be filled by the appointment of permanent professors, who shall have the rank, pay, allowances, retirement rights, and other benefits authorized for other permanent professors of the Academy.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized, as an additional permanent professor of the United States Military Academy, a dean of the Academic Board, who shall have such duties as may be prescribed from time to time by the Superintendent of the Academy with the approval of the Secretary of War. Appointments to this position shall be made from among permanent professors who have served as heads of departments of instruction of the Academy. The dean of the Academic Board shall have the rank, pay, allowances, retirement rights, and other benefits authorized for permanent brigadier generals of the Army, except that the statutory retirement age shall be the same as that of other permanent professors of the Academy.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING THE MUNICIPAL BANKRUPTCY ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6682) to amend sections 81, 82, and 83, and to repeal section 84 of chapter IX of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SABATH. I object, Mr. Speaker.

AUTHORIZING CITY OF ANCHORAGE, ALASKA, TO ISSUE BONDS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5112) to authorize the city of Anchorage, Alaska, to issue bonds in a sum not to exceed $7,500,000 for the purpose of constructing, reconstructing, improving, extending, bettering, repairing, equipping, or acquiring public works of a permanent character, and to provide for the payment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING SCHOOL DISTRICTS IN ALASKA TO ISSUE BONDS FOR SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5800) to authorize school districts in Alaska to issue bonds for school construction, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of May 31, 1938 (52 Stat. 589; 48 U. S. C., sec. 315 and the following), entitled "An act to authorize public utility districts in the Territory of Alaska to incur bonded indebtedness, and for other purposes", is hereby amended to read: "That public utility and school districts in the Territory of Alaska, organized or which may be organized under the laws of the Territory, are hereby authorized to construct, improve, extend, better, repair, reconstruct, acquire, and operate any and all types of public utilities and improvements, school buildings and facilities connected therewith, respectively, under and in accordance with and to the full extent provided by the laws of said Territory relating to public utility and school districts in said Territory, and to incur bonded indebtedness and to issue negotiable bonds for any or all of said purposes: Provided, however, That no public utility or school district shall incur bonded indebtedness or issue its negotiable bonds under this act to an amount which shall exceed 10 percent of the aggregate value of the real and personal property within such district subject to taxation by such district."

SEC. 2. Section 2 of the above-entitled act is hereby amended by inserting after the words "public utility" the words "or school."

TOLL BRIGE ACROSS RIO GRANDE, RIO GRANDE CITY, TEX.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6751) authorizing Gus A. Guerra, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Rio Grande, at or near Rio Grande City, Tex.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate international commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, Gus A. Guerra, his heirs, legal representatives and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge and originally designed approaches thereto across the Rio Grande, so far as the United States has jurisdiction over the waters of such river, at a point suitable to the interest of navigation, at or near Rio Grande City, Tex., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, and subject further to the approval of the International Boundary and Water Commission, United States and Mexico, and also subject to the approval of the proper authorities in the Republic of Mexico to the construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge: Provided, That the construction of the bridge herein authorized shall not be undertaken until after an agreement regarding such construction shall have been effected between the Government of the United States and the Government of the United Mexican States.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon Gus A. Guerra, his heirs, legal representatives and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property in the State of Texas needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its originally designed approaches, as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes, upon making just compensation therefor to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State of Texas.

SEC. 3. The said Gus A. Guerra, his heirs, legal representatives and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge in accordance with any laws of the State of Texas applicable thereto, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act to any public agency, or to an international bridge authority or commission, is hereby granted to Gus A. Guerra, his heirs, or legal representatives; and any such public agency, international bridge authority, or international bridge commission to which such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or which shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such public agency, international bridge authority, or international bridge commission.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 6. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 8, after the word "act" insert "and further subject to the approval of the location, navigation clearances, and other design features of the bridge by the Secretary of the Navy concurrently with the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers of the War Department."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration is similar to H. R. 6286 which I introduced to permit the State of Delaware by and through its State highway department to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Delaware River between the States of Delaware and New Jersey. The bridge is to be constructed from a point below Wilmington, Del., to a point on the New Jersey side of the river just north of Pennsville, N. J.

The Delaware State line at the point where the bridge is to be constructed extends across the Delaware River to the low water mark on the New Jersey side. Because of this fact the bridge will be constructed by the State of Delaware by and through its highway department, and the entire expense will be carried by the State of Delaware. The Legislature of New Jersey has already given its consent to the construction of the bridge.

The public demand for this bridge is steadily increasing and its construction is of vital importance to the ever-increasing local and long-haul vehicular traffic along the Atlantic seaboard. This traffic serves commerce and business, both in war and in peace. The building of the bridge appears as a public necessity in the full development of the highway system along the Atlantic coast and it is believed that this necessity should be met as promptly as possible. Both the War and Navy Departments have recently filed reports indicating that they will interpose no objections to the proposed legislation. The Federal Works Agency, to which the pending legislation was also referred, has reported favorably upon the proposal.

The bridge is to be constructed as a toll project, on the basis that only the users of the bridge pay for its use, thus amortizing the cost of construction without any increase or effect upon State or Federal taxes. Upon amortization the bridge would become free from tolls. The bonds to be issued would be revenue bonds, and these bonds would be supported wholly by the earnings of the bridge. No credit of the States or the Federal Government would be pledged in support of such bonds. The toll rates would be reasonable and subject to review by the Federal Government. The proposed bridge is not only an interstate project, but more truly a regional or even a national project. The benefits would be so widespread and far-reaching throughout all the States of the North and South Atlantic seaboard that it may be stated that in its construction the State of Delaware would be acting merely as the agent for all the other interested States.

The importance of this large volume of motor traffic makes it virtually imperative that a safe, quick, dependable, and economic crossing be provided near and below Wilmington. These requirements can be met only through the construction of a modern, long-span, high-level highway bridge. The value of such a bridge to commerce and business and for pleasure is almost beyond calculation. Its value in wartime would likewise be of considerable importance from strategical, tactical, and productive points of view.

The bill should pass without objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT NATIONAL PARK

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill (H. R. 4435) to establish the Theodore Roosevelt National Park; to erect a monument in memory of Theodore Roosevelt in the village of Medora, N. Dak.; and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all those certain tracts, pieces, or parcels of land, title to which is vested in the United States of America, and being in the State of North Dakota, and within the boundaries particularly described, as follows, to wit: Beginning at the point where the north line of the right-of-way of United States Highway No. 10 intersects the east boundary of section 36, township 140 north, range 101 west, fifth principal meridian; thence southwesterly and northwesterly along the north line of said right-of-way through section 1, township 139 north, range 101 west, and sections 36, 35, 34, 27, 28, and 29, township 140 north, range 101 west, to the west boundary of said section 29; north along section lines to the northwest corner of said section 29; west along section line to the southwest corner of section 19, township 140 north, range 101 west; north along township line to the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 24, township 140 north, range 102 west; west to the southwest corner of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of said section 24; north to the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of said section 24; westerly along section lines to the southwest corner of section 16, township 140 north, range 102 west; northerly along section lines to the northwest corner of section 4, township 140 north, range 102 west; thence west along township line to the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of section 34, township 141 north, range 102 west; northerly through the center of sections 34 and 27 to the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of section 27 of said township 141 north, range 102 west; easterly along section lines to the northeast corner of section 28, township 141 north, range 101 west; south along section lines to the southeast corner of said section 28; east along section line to the northeast corner of section 34, township 141 north, range 101 west; south to the northwest corner of the southwest quarter of section 35, township 141 north, range 101 west; easterly through center of sections 35 and 36 to the northeast corner of the southeast quarter of said section 36 of said township 141 north, range 101 west; south to the southeast corner of said section 36; thence east along township line to the northeast corner of lot 3, section 2, township 140 north, range 101 west; southerly through the center of sections 2 and 11 to the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of said section 11, township 140 north, range 101 west; easterly along section lines to the northeast corner of section 13 of said township 140 north, range 101 west; southerly along township line to the northwest corner of section 19, township 140 north, range 100 west; easterly along north line of said section 19 to the northeast corner of the northwest quarter; southerly through center of sections 19, 30, and 31 to the northwest corner of the southeast quarter of section 31; easterly along the center of said section 31 to the northeast corner of the southeast quarter; southerly along the east line of said section 31 to the southeast corner; westerly along the township line to the east line of section 36, township 140 north, range 101 west; northerly along the township line between townships 140 north, range 100 west and 140 north, range 101 west to the north right-of-way line of United States Highway No. 10, the place of beginning, containing thirty-five thousand two hundred and seventy acres, more or less, are hereby dedicated and set apart as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people, and shall be known as the Theodore Roosevelt National Park. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to construct and maintain a road or highway through the park connecting with a State or Federal highway.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cause condemnation proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, entitled "An act to authorise the condemnation of lands for sites for public buildings, and other purposes" (25 Stat. 357), to acquire title to the lands, interests therein, or rights pertaining thereto that are privately owned within the boundaries of the said national park, and such property, when acquired, shall become a part thereof: Provided, That when the owner of such lands, interests therein, or rights pertaining thereto shall fix a price for the same, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be reasonable, the Secretary may purchase the same without further delay: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept, on behalf of the United States, donations of land, interests therein, or rights pertaining thereto required for the Theodore Roosevelt National Park: And provided further, That title and evidence of title to land and interests therein acquired for said park shall be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. That for the purposes of acquiring non-Federal lands within the boundaries of said park as established by this act, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to exchange federally owned lands within the Roosevelt recreational demonstration area project, located outside the boundaries of the park for State or privately owned land of approximately equal value within the boundaries of the park, when in his opinion such action is in the interest of the United States, the title to any lands acquired under this section to be satisfactory to the Secretary. Upon the vesting of title thereto in the United States, any lands acquired pursuant to this authorization shall become a part of the park and shall be subject to the laws applicable thereto.

SEC. 4. The administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535), entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes," as amended.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to erect a monument in memory of Theodore Roosevelt, in the village of Medora, N. Dak., with the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts: Provided, That the cost of the monument shall not exceed $35,000 and there shall be conveyed to the United States such suitable site as may in the judgment of the Secretary be required for said monument: Provided further, That the village of Medora, or other public agency or organization shall furnish, in writing, assurance satisfactory to the Secretary of its willingness to assume the perpetual care and upkeep of the monument.

SEC. 6. That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid existing claim, location, or entry under the land laws of the United States, whether for homestead, mineral, right-of-way, or any other purposes whatsoever, or shall affect the right of any such claimant, locator, or entryman to the full use and enjoyment of his land.

SEC. 7. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTIONS 81, 82, AND 83, AND REPEALING SECTION 84 OF CHAPTER IX OF THE UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 481 H. R. 6682, to amend sections 81, 82, and 83, and to repeal section 84 of chapter IX of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I originally objected to this bill, but it has been explained to me by the members of the committee, and I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 81, 82, and 83 of chapter IX of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended (U. S. C., title 11, secs. 401, 402, and 403), are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 81. This act and proceedings thereunder are found and declared to be within the subject of bankruptcies and, in addition to the jurisdiction otherwise exercised, courts of bankruptcy shall exercise original jurisdiction as provided in this chapter for the composition of indebtedness of, or authorized by, any of the agencies or instrumentalities hereinafter named, payable (a) out of assessments or taxes, or both, levied against and constituting liens upon property in any of said agencies or instrumentalities, or (b) out of property acquired by foreclosure of any such assessments or taxes, or both, or (c) out of income derived by such agencies or instrumentalities from any income-producing property, whether or not secured by a lien upon such property: (1) Drainage, drainage and levee, reclamation, water, irrigation, or other similar districts, commonly designated as agricultural improvement districts or local improvement districts, organized or created for the purpose of constructing, improving, maintaining, and operating certain improvements or projects devoted chiefly to the improvement of lands therein for agricultural purposes; or (2) local improvement districts, such as sewer, paving, sanitary, or other similar districts, organized or created for the purposes designated by their respective names; or (3) local improvement districts, such as road, highway, or other similar districts, organized or created for the purpose of grading, paving, or otherwise improving public streets, roads, or highways; or (4) public-school districts or public-school authorities organized or created for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating public schools or public-school facilities; or (5) local improvement districts, such as port, navigation, or other similar districts, organized or created for the purpose of constructing, improving, maintaining, and operating ports and port facilities; or (6) incorporated authorities, commissions, or similar public agencies organized for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating revenue-producing enterprises; or (7) any county or parish or any city, town, village, borough, township, or other municipality: Provided, however, That if any provision of this chapter, or the application thereof to any such agency or district or class thereof or to any circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the chapter, or the application of such provision to any other or different circumstances, shall not be affected by such holding.

"SEC. 82. The following terms as used in this chapter, unless a different meaning is plainly required by the context, shall be construed as follows:

"The term 'petitioner' shall include any agency or instrumentality referred to in section 81 of this chapter.

"The term 'security' shall include bonds, notes, judgments, claims, and demands, liquidated or unliquidated, and other evidences of indebtedness, either secured or unsecured, and certificates of beneficial interest in property.

"The term 'creditor' means the holder of a security or securities.

"Any agency of the United States holding securities acquired pursuant to contract with any petitioner under this chapter shall be deemed a creditor in the amount of the full face value thereof.

"The term 'security as affected by the plan' means a security as to which the rights of its holder are proposed to be adjusted or modified materially by the consummation of a composition agreement.

"The singular number includes the plural and the masculine gender the feminine.

"SEC. 83. (a) Any petitioner may file a petition hereunder stating that the petitioner is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature and that it desires to effect a plan for the composition of its debts. The petition shall be filed with the court in whose territorial jurisdiction the petitioner or the major part thereof is located, and, in the case of any unincorporated tax or special-assessment district having no officials of its own, the petition may be filed by its governing authority or the board or body having authority to levy taxes or assessments to meet the obligations to be affected by the plan of composition. The petition shall be accompanied by payment to the clerk of a filing fee of $100, which shall be in lieu of the fees required to be collected by the clerk under other applicable chapters of this title, as amended. The petition shall state that a plan of composition has been prepared, is filed and submitted with the petition, and that creditors of the petitioner owning not less than 51 percent in amount of the securities affected by the plan (excluding, however, any such securities owned, held, or controlled by the petitioner) have accepted it in writing. There shall be filed with the petition a list of all known creditors of the petitioner, together with their addresses so far as known to petitioner, and description of their respective securities, showing separately those which have accepted the plan of composition, together with their separate addresses, the contents of which list shall not constitute admissions by the petitioner in a proceeding under this chapter or otherwise. Upon the filing of such a petition the judge shall enter an order either approving it as properly filed under this chapter, if satisfied that such petition complies with this chapter and has been filed in good faith, or dismissing it, if not so satisfied.

"Whenever the petition seeks to effect a plan for the composition of obligations represented by securities, or evidences in any form of rights to payment, issued by the petitioner to defray the cost of local improvements and which are payable solely out of the proceeds of special assessments or special taxes levied by the petitioner, or issued by the petitioner to finance one or more revenue-producing enterprises payable solely out of the revenues of such enterprise or enterprises, it shall be sufficient if the petitioner aver that the property liable for, or the revenues pledged to the payment of such securities, principal, and interest is not of sufficient value, or that the revenues of the enterprise or enterprises are inadequate to pay same, and that the accrued interest on such securities is past due and in default; and the list of creditors to be filed with such petition need contain only the known claimants of rights based on those securities evidencing the obligations sought to be composed under this chapter, and such list shall include separately the names and addresses of those creditors who have accepted the plan of composition. If the plan of composition sought to be effected requires a revision of assessments so that the proportion of special assessments or special taxes to be assessed against some of the land will be different from the proportion in effect at the time the petition is filed, a list of the record owners or holders of title, legal or equitable, to any real estate adversely affected in the proceeding shall also be filed with the petition, and such record owners or holders of title shall be notified in the manner provided in this section for creditors and be entitled to hearing by the court upon reasonable application therefor.

"The 'plan of composition,'" within the meaning of this chapter, may include provisions modifying or altering the rights of creditors generally, or of any class of them, secured or unsecured, either through issuance of new securities of any character, or otherwise, and may contain such other provisions and agreements not inconsistent with this chapter as the parties may desire.

"No creditor shall be deemed to be affected by any plan of composition unless the same shall affect his interest materially, and in case any controversy shall arise as to whether any creditor or class of creditors shall or shall not be affected, the issue shall be determined by the judge, after hearing, upon notice to the parties interested.

"For all purposes of this chapter any creditor may act in person or by an attorney or a duly authorized agent or committee. Where any committee, organization, group, or individual shall assume to act for or on behalf of creditors, such committee, organization, group, or individual shall first file with the court in which the proceeding is pending a list of the creditors represented by such committee, organization, group, or individual, giving the name and address of each such creditor, together with a statement of the amount, class, and character of the security held by him, and attach thereto copies of the instrument or instruments in writing signed by the owners of the bonds showing their authority, and shall file with the list a copy of the contract or agreement entered into between such committee, organization, group, or individual, and the creditors represented by it or them, which contract shall disclose all compensation to be received, directly or indirectly, by such committee, organization, group, or individual, which agreed compensation shall be subject to modification and approval by the court.

"(b) Upon approving the petition as properly filed, or at any time thereafter, the judge shall enter an order fixing a time and place for a hearing on the petition, which shall be held within 90 days from the date of said order, and shall provide in the order that notice shall be given to creditors of the filing of the petition and its approval as being properly filed, and of the time and place for the hearing. The judge shall prescribe the form of the notice, which shall specify the manner in which claims and interests of creditors shall be filed or evidenced, on or before the date fixed for the hearing. The notice shall be published at least once a week for three successive weeks in at least one newspaper of general circulation published within the jurisdiction of the court, and in such other paper or papers having a general circulation among bond dealers and bondholders as may be designated by the court, and the judge may require that it may be published in such other publication as he may deem proper. The judge shall require that a copy of the notice be mailed, postage prepaid, to each creditor of the petitioner named in the petition at the address of such creditor given in the petition, or, if no address is given in the petition for any creditor and the address of such creditor cannot with reasonable diligence be ascertained, then a copy of the notice shall be mailed, postage prepaid, to such creditor addressed to him as the judge may prescribe. All expense of giving notice as herein provided shall be paid by the petitioner. The notice shall be first published, and the mailing of copies thereof shall be completed, at least 60 days before the date fixed for the hearing.

"At any time not less than 10 days prior to the time fixed for the hearing, any creditor of the petitioner affected by the plan may file an answer to the petition controverting any of the material allegations therein and setting up any objection he may have to the plan of composition. The judge may continue the hearing from time to time if the percentage of creditors required herein for the confirmation of the plan shall not have accepted the plan in writing, or if for any reason satisfactory to the judge the hearing is not completed on the date fixed therefor. At the hearing, or a continuance thereof, the judge shall decide the issues presented and unless the material allegations of the petition are sustained shall dismiss the proceeding. If, however, the material allegations of the petition are sustained, the judge shall classify the creditors according to the nature of their respective claims and interest: Provided, however, That the holders of all claims, regardless of the manner in which they are evidenced, which are payable without preference out of funds derived from the same source or sources shall be of one class. The holders of claims for the payment of which specific property or revenues are pledged, or which are otherwise given preference as provided by law, shall accordingly constitute a separate class or classes of creditors.

"At the hearing or a continuance thereof the judge may refer any special issues of fact to a referee in bankruptcy or a special master for consideration, the taking of testimony, and a report upon such special issues of fact, if the judge finds that the condition of his docket is such that he cannot take such testimony without unduly delaying the dispatch of other business pending in his court, and if it appears that such special issues are necessary to the determination of the case. Only under special circumstances shall references be made to a special master who is not a referee in bankruptcy. A general reference of the case to a master shall not be made, but the reference, if any, shall be only in the form of requests for findings of specific facts.

"The court may allow reasonable compensation for the services performed by such referee in bankruptcy or special master, and the actual and necessary expenses incurred in connection with the proceeding, including compensation for services rendered and expenses incurred in obtaining the deposit of securities and the preparation of the plan, whether such work may have been done by the petitioner or by committees or other representatives of creditors, and may allow reasonable compensation for the attorneys or agents of any of the foregoing: Provided, however, That no fees, compensation, reimbursement, or other allowances for attorneys, agents, committees, or other representatives of creditors shall be assessed against the petitioner or paid from any revenues, property, or funds of the petitioner except in the manner and in such sums, if any, as may be provided for in the plan of composition. An appeal may be taken from any order making such determination or award to the United States circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which the proceeding under this chapter is pending, independently of other appeals which may be taken in the proceeding, and such appeal shall be heard summarily.

"Such compensation of referees in bankruptcy and special masters shall not be governed by section 40 of this act.

"On 30 days' notice by any creditor to petitioner, the judge, if he finds that the proceeding has not been prosecuted with reasonable diligence, or that it is unlikely that the plan will be accepted by said proportion of creditors, may dismiss the proceeding.

"(c) Upon entry of the order fixing the time for the hearing, or at any time thereafter, the judge may upon notice enjoin or stay, pending the determination of the matter, the commencement or continuation of suits against the petitioner, or any officer or inhabitant thereof, on account of the securities affected by the plan, or to enforce any lien or to enforce the levy of taxes or assessments for the payment of obligations under any such securities, or any suit or process to levy upon or enforce against any property acquired by the petitioner through foreclosure of any such tax lien or special assessment lien, except where rights have become vested, and may enter an interlocutory decree providing that the plan shall be temporarily operative with respect to all securities affected thereby and that the payment of the principal or interest, or both, of such securities shall be temporarily postponed or extended or otherwise readjusted in the same manner and upon the same terms as if such plan had been finally confirmed and put into effect, and upon the entry of such decree the principal or interest, or both, of such securities which have otherwise become due, or which would otherwise become due, shall not be or become due or payable, and the payment of all such securities shall be postponed during the period in which such decree shall remain in force, but shall not, by any order or decree, in the proceeding or otherwise, interfere with (a) any of the political or governmental powers of the petitioner; or (b) any of the property or revenues of the petitioner necessary for essential governmental purposes; or (c) any income-producing property, unless the plan of composition so provides.

"Any agency or instrumentality referred to in section 81 of this chapter may file a petition for a preliminary stay with the court referred to in section 83 (a) stating (a) that the petitioner is insolvent or unable to meet his debts as they mature; (b) that it desires to effect a plan for the composition of its debts, a copy of which is filed and submitted with the petition; (c) that a creditor of the petitioner holding a security affected by the plan or a person claiming to be such a creditor (naming him and giving his address and the name and address of his attorney of record, if any), is attempting or threatening to obtain payment of said security in preference to other creditors by means of the commencement or continuation of a suit or process of the class hereinbefore in this section 83 (c) described; (d) that efforts are being made in good faith to the end that creditors of the petitioner owning not less than 51 percent in amount of the securities affected by the plan (excluding, however, any such securities owned, held, or controlled by the petitioner) shall accept it in writing; (e) that there is a reasonable prospect of such acceptance within a reasonable time; (f) that upon such acceptance the petitioner intends to file a petition under section 83 (a) of this chapter; and (g) that the petitioner prays that the judge will upon notice enjoin or stay the commencement or continuation of said suit or process. A single petition may seek the preliminary stay of several suits or process brought or threatened by the same or different creditors or persons claiming to be creditors. The petition shall be accompanied by the filing fee required in section 83 (a) of this chapter, unless such fee shall have been paid upon the filing of an earlier petition for a preliminary stay involving the same plan, and no further fee shall be required upon the subsequent filing of a petition under said section 83 (a). Upon such petition the judge shall fix a time and place for hearing and direct that notice thereof shall be given in such manner as he shall prescribe to said creditor or person claiming to be a creditor and to any other person deemed by him to be interested. After such hearings, and upon being satisfied of the truth of the allegations of the petition, the judge may, in his discretion, except where rights have become vested, enjoin or stay the commencement and continuation of said suit or process until a date fixed by him in his order not exceeding 60 days from the date of entry thereof. The judge shall retain jurisdiction to vacate said injunction or stay, or to extend the period thereof for one additional period of not exceeding 60 days, upon good cause shown.

"(d) The plan of composition shall not be confirmed until it has been accepted in writing, by or on behalf of creditors holding at least two-thirds of the aggregate amount of claims of all classes affected by such plan and which have been admitted by the petitioner or allowed by the judge, but excluding claims owned, held, or controlled by the petitioner: Provided, however, That it shall not be requisite to the confirmation of the plan that there be such acceptance by any creditor or class of creditors (a) whose claims are not affected by the plan; or (b) if the plan makes provision for the payment of their claims in cash in full; or (c) if provision is made in the plan for the protection of the interests, claims, or lien of such creditors or class of creditors.

"(e) Before concluding the hearing, the judge shall carefully examine all of the contracts, proposals, acceptances, deposit agreements, and all other papers relating to the plan, specifically for the purpose of ascertaining if the fiscal agent, attorney, or other person, firm, or corporation promoting the composition, or doing anything of such a nature, has been or is to be compensated, directly or indirectly, by both the petitioner and the creditors thereof, or any of such creditors—either by fee, commission, or other similar payment, or by transfer or exchange of bonds or other evidence of indebtedness whereby a profit could accrue—and shall take evidence under oath to make certain whether or not any such practice obtains or might obtain.

"After such examination the judge shall make an adjudication of this issue, as a separate part of his interlocutory decree, and if it be found that any such practice exists, he shall forthwith dismiss the proceeding and tax all of the costs against such fiscal agent, attorney, or other person, firm or corporation promoting the composition, or doing anything of such a nature, or against the petitioner, unless such plan be modified within the time to be allowed by the judge so as to eliminate the possibility of any such practice, in which event the judge may proceed to further consideration of the confirmation of the plan. If it be found that no such practice exists, then the judge may proceed to further consideration of the confirmation of the plan.

"At the conclusion of the hearing, the judge shall make written findings of fact and his conclusions of law thereon, and shall enter an interlocutory decree confirming the plan if he finds and is satisfied that (1) it is fair, equitable, and for the best interests of the creditors and does not discriminate unfairly in favor of any creditor or class of creditors; (2) complies with the provisions of this chapter; (3) has been accepted and approved as required by the provisions of subdivision (d) of this section; (4) all amounts to be paid by the petitioner for services or expenses incident to the composition have been fully disclosed and are reasonable; (5) the offer of the plan and its acceptance are in good faith; and (6) the petitioner is authorized by law to take all action necessary to be taken by it to carry out the plan. If not so satisfied, the judge shall enter an order dismissing the proceeding. No case shall be reversed or remanded for want of specific or detailed findings unless it is found that the evidence is insufficient to support one or more of the general findings required in this section.

"Before a plan is confirmed, changes and modifications may be made therein with the approval of the judge after hearing upon such notice to creditors as the judge may direct, subject to the right of any creditor who shall previously have accepted the plan to withdraw his acceptance, within a period to be fixed by the judge and after such notice as the judge may direct, if, in the opinion of the judge, the change or modification will be materially adverse to the interest of such creditor, and if any creditor having such right of withdrawal shall not withdraw within such period, he shall be deemed to have accepted the plan as changed or modified: Provided, however, That the plan as changed or modified shall comply with all the provisions of this chapter and shall have been accepted in writing by the petitioner. Either party may appeal from the interlocutory decree as in equity cases. In case said interlocutory decree shall prescribe a time within which any action is to be taken, the running of such time shall be suspended in case of an appeal until final determination thereof. In case said decree is affirmed, the judge may grant such time as he may deem proper for the taking of such action.

"(f) If an interlocutory decree confirming the plan is entered as provided in subdivision (e) of this section, the plan and said decree of confirmation shall become and be binding upon all creditors affected by the plan, if within the time prescribed in the interlocutory decree, or such additional time as the judge may allow, the money, securities, or other consideration to be delivered to the creditors under the terms of the plan shall have been deposited with the court or such disbursing agent as the court may appoint or shall otherwise be made available for the creditors. And thereupon the court shall enter a final decree determining that the petitioner has made available for the creditors affected by the plan the consideration provided for therein and is discharged from all debts and liabilities dealt with in the plan except as provided therein, and that the plan is binding upon all creditors affected by it, whether secured or unsecured, and whether or not their claims have been filed or evidenced, and, if filed or evidenced, whether or not allowed, including creditors who have not, as well as those who have, accepted it. If securities are deposited by the petitioner with the court or disbursing agent for delivery to the creditors, such final decree shall not be entered unless the court finds and adjudicates that said securities have been lawfully authorized and, upon delivery, will constitute valid obligations of the petitioner, and that the provisions made to pay and secure payment thereof are valid.

"(g) A certified copy of the final decree, or of any other decree or order entered by the court or the judge thereof, in a proceeding under this chapter, shall be evidence of the jurisdiction of the court, the regularity of the proceedings, and the fact that the decree or order was made. A certified copy of an order providing for the transfer of any property dealt with by the plan shall be evidence of the transfer of title accordingly, and, if recorded as conveyances are recorded, shall impart the same notice that a deed, if recorded, would impart.

"(h) This chapter shall not be construed as to modify or repeal any prior existing statute relating to the refinancing or readjustment of indebtedness of municipalities, political subdivisions or districts: Provided, however, That the initiation of proceedings or the filing of a petition under section 80 of this act shall not constitute a bar to the same agency or instrumentality initiating a new proceeding under section 81 of this chapter.

"(i) Nothing contained in this chapter shall be construed to limit or impair the power of any State to control, by legislation or otherwise, any municipality or any political subdivision of or in such State in the exercise of its political or governmental powers, including expenditures therefor: Provided, however, That no State law prescribing a method of composition of indebtedness of such agencies shall be binding upon any creditor who does not consent to such composition, and no judgment shall be entered under such State law which would bind a creditor to such composition without his consent.

"(j) The partial completion or execution of any plan of composition as outlined in any petition under the terms of this act by the exchange of new evidence of indebtedness under the plan for evidences of indebtedness covered by the plan, whether such partial completion or execution of such plan of composition occurred before or after the filing of said petition, shall not be construed as limiting or prohibiting the effect of this title, and the written consent of the holders of any securities outstanding as the result of any such partial completion or execution of any plan of composition shall be included as consenting creditors to such plan of composition in determining the percentage of securities affected by such plan of composition."

SEC. 2. Section 84 of chapter IX of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended by the acts of August 16, 1937, June 28, 1940, and June 22, 1942, is hereby repealed.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 4, line 9, strike out the word "as."

The amendment was agreed to.

OPERATION OF SECTION 8 OF FEDERAL AIRPORT ACT

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6741) relating to the operation of section 8 of the Federal Airport Act with respect to the fiscal year 1947.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the objectors on this side are rather loath to let any legislation be passed which is on the calendar but not yet eligible for consideration. Would the gentleman tell us the urgency of passing this bill at this time?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes. I will be pleased to. This bill really amends section 8 of the Airport Act, which was passed recently. If the conferees could have agreed upon a bill prior to the 1st of January or February last, there would not have been the necessity for it. But the larger class airports, 4 and 5, could not be considered until the fiscal year 1948. It is necessary to pass this bill in order that the Civil Aeronautics Administration may report to the Congress on those ports by the 1st of January next.

Mr. KEAN. If we did not pass this bill now it would put it off an extra year?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes. It was a unanimous report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. KEAN. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 8 of the Federal Airport Act—

(1) Request by the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics for authority to undertake, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, projects for the development of class 4 and larger airports, may, despite the time fixed by such section, be submitted to the Congress at any time on or before the day fixed for the first meeting of the Eightieth Congress; and

(2) Unless, on or before the sixtieth day after the day so fixed, a contrary intent shall have been manifested by the Congress by law or by concurrent resolution, authority to undertake such projects during such fiscal year, with the use of appropriations available therefor (whether made before or after the submission to Congress of such request), shall be considered to be granted.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INTERNATIONAL ANIMAL QUARANTINE STATION ON SWAN ISLAND

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 364, to provide for the establishment of an international animal quarantine station on Swan Island, and to permit the entry therein of animals from any country and the subsequent importation of such animals into other parts of the United States, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN]?

Mr. KEAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Virginia inform me of the urgency of this proposition?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Recently a number of cattle were brought in from Mexico without going through quarantine. Some of them found their way into the United States. The Department of Agriculture immediately established a blockade along the Mexican border in order to keep all cattle out until the situation could be cleared up, because the last time some of these cattle got in it cost the Government millions of dollars to eradicate the hoof-and-mouth disease that they brought in.

The Department made this recommendation. We heard the Department witnesses and the representatives of the cattle raisers of the West who, primarily, will be affected; and the committee reports the bill unanimously.

The object of this legislation is to establish a quarantine station on Swan Island where cattle that are needed in this country for breeding purposes can remain in quarantine until it is determined that the cattle are free of all diseases. We need to bring in certain types of cattle for breeding purposes, but before they are brought in we want to be sure there is no danger of the cattle bringing in the hoof-and-mouth disease or some other disease. We have assurances that the Mexican Government and the governments of Central America will cooperate with us in operating the station.

It is thought that the station after being established will be self-sustaining as the funds covering running expenses would be derived from fees assessed against livestock on a per capita basis.

Mr. KEAN. Is this a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. It is a unanimous report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, in his discretion, to establish and maintain on Swan Island, either independently or in cooperation with other American Republics and with breeders' organizations and similar organizations and individuals within the United States, an international animal quarantine station, including the acquisition of sites by lease or otherwise, and the construction of temporary buildings, improvements, and other facilities on such sites, and notwithstanding the provisions of any other law but subject to regulations prescribed hereunder by the Secretary of Agriculture to prevent the introduction into the United States of communicable diseases of animals, animals may be brought into said quarantine station from any country, including but not limited to those countries in which the Secretary of Agriculture determines that rinderpest and foot-and-mouth disease exist, and may be subsequently imported into other parts of the United States under said regulations.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF SUGAR ACT

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6689) to extend, for an additional year, the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937, as amended, and the taxes with respect to sugar.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. It is.

Mr. KEAN. What is the urgency for the passage of the bill?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. The urgency is that the Sugar Act will expire at the end of this year and there is a lot of confusion among the sugar industry as to what will be done. They have been trying to adjust their differences in order to agree on a bill, but they have been unable to agree and, in my opinion, there is no possibility of their getting together before the first of the year.

The bill before us only extends the act 1 year in order to see if the different interests cannot get together and agree on a proper bill in the meantime.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand this continues the Sugar Act as it applies to quotas.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. It continues the whole act.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Does the gentleman know whether it is contemplated to continue the suspension of quotas during the 1-year period?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I do not know. This extends the present law for the period of 1 year. I do know that Mr. Dodd, Under Secretary of Agriculture, in his letter to me of June 11, 1946, says this:

This procedure—

Extending the act for 1 year—would permit revision of the Sugar Act before it will be necessary to reinstate sugar quotas.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. It is the law under which quotas are possible.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. It is a continuation of the present act.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I shall have to object.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Will not the gentleman withhold his objection to permit me to make a further statement?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I will withhold it for the time being.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I understood that all the Florida Representatives had agreed that the only thing to do was to extend the act. The industry and the sugar people for some time have been making an effort to agree on legislation, but so far have been unable to agree. When it became apparent to the committee that an agreement at this time is impossible, we decided the best thing to do is to extend the act for 1 year. I thought all the Florida Congressmen thought likewise.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not true that in the absence of extending the act at this time that as of December 31 this year, assuming the present Congress does adjourn, we would awaken on the morning of January 1, 1947, without any Sugar Act in operation whatsoever?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. That is correct; that is one danger we face.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let me ask another question: At the moment and during the past many months the quotas have not been applied, have they?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. The quotas have not been applied, and that is the reason I rise. If I could be assured that quotas would not be applied during this year of extension on the Florida product then I would withold my objection. To me it seems absurd to apply quotas in a period of critical shortage like this.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with the gentleman and it seems to me it would be the essence of asininity to apply marketing quotas on any domestic production during the present calendar year and perhaps the calendar year 1947.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I would rather not object if I can get an assurance.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Of course, I cannot speak for the administration, however, I feel sure there will be no change during the coming year. This opinion is confirmed by the statement in Dr. Dodd's letter.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. If they attempt to restore quotas which would affect Florida would the gentleman join with me in asking the department not to do it?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I certainly would.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Has this bill passed the Senate?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. No; it has not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 513 of the Sugar Act of 1937, as amended (relating to termination of powers of the Secretary of Agriculture under the Sugar Act), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 513. The powers vested in the Secretary under this act shall terminate on December 31, 1947, except that the Secretary shall have power to make payments under title III under programs applicable to the crop year 1947 and previous crop years."

SEC. 2. Section 3508 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to termination of taxes with respect to sugar) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3508. Termination of taxes.

"No tax shall be imposed under this chapter on the manufacture, use, or importation of sugar after June 30, 1948."

SEC. 3. Section 503 of the Sugar Act of 1937, as amended (relating to payments to the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands), is amended by striking out "June 30, 1947" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1948."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXCUSING EMPLOYEES OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT ON JULY 5, 1946

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill H. R. 6691, to excuse employees of the executive branch of the Government from work on July 5, 1946, and its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know anything about what this bill provides. No one has spoken to the Chair about taking the bill up at the present time. The Chair requests the gentleman to withhold his request for the time being.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

PUBLIC DEBT ACT OF 1946

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6699) to decrease the amount of obligations issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, which may be outstanding at any one time.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6699, with Mr. SIKES in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the bill H. R. 6699 decreases the debt limit of the United States from $300,000,000,000 to $275,000,000,000.

The $300,000,000,000 debt limit was established by the Public Act of 1945, approved April 3, 1945. This act increased the debt limit from $260,000,000,000 to $300,000,000,000 and was the last of a series of increases which were brought about by the necessity of financing the most costly war in history.

This war is now over; and I believe that we can look forward, not merely to a balanced budget, but to a surplus during the fiscal year which will begin on the first of next month.

Happily, it was not necessary for the public debt to be increased to the full limit authorized by Congress. The gross public debt of the United States, including guaranteed obligations, as reported in the Treasury accounts, reached a high of $279,800,000,000 on February 28, 1946. This amount is somewhat lower, as I shall presently explain, than the amount of the debt as reported for the purpose of the statutory debt limitation. The debt, as computed for this purpose, amounted to $289,600,000,000 at that time.

Since February, the gross debt has been reduced by about $10,000,000,000. This reduction will continue for some time to come as the balance in the Treasury is reduced from the level appropriate to wartime expenditures to one appropriate to those of peacetime. In addition, I hope that the debt will be further reduced during the next fiscal year by applying funds arising from a budgetary surplus.

We never can reduce the debt if we keep on appropriating unnecessarily. I think that can be proved by my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylcania.

Mr. RICH. If we carry out the program as outlined by the President in his Budget message in January, wherein he says it will take $35,000,000,000 to run the Government beginning July 1, and for the next succeeding 2 years $25,000,000,000 each, and with conditions in the country being as they are, where the income of corporations and labor has decreased on account of strikes like it has this year, I cannot see how you are going to keep from having the Budget go over the $275,000,000,000 mark again. That is liable to happen at the beginning of next year, especially if you give $4,400,000,000 to Great Britain and billions to other nations.

Now you Democrats are in the hot spot right now, and you have got to do something to cut down expenses. I do not mean you, Mr. DOUGHTON, because it is the gentleman's business to raise revenue, but you, as chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means that raises the revenue, ought to demand of the Committee on Appropriations that they do cut down Government spending and that Congress see that we get a balanced Budget. I have a lot of confidence in the gentleman from North Carolina, and I know he will do that, and if there is anything that we can do now that will save this country. It will be the cutting down of unnecessary spending. It will not be the passing of this resolution, unless the Congress has made up its mind that it will cut down expenses so that this resolution that the gentleman is putting through today will really mean something. Otherwise it is only a gesture to the public, and you will again run over two hundred and seventy-five billion.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Will my good friend please help me by informing me how we would enforce that demand?

Mr. RICH. If the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Vice President of the Senate, and the President of the United States would call in the Committees on Appropriations of the House and the Senate and tell them just what we are going to have in the way of revenue and then say, "Now, gentlemen, it is your business to stop appropriating over and above that amount," then we will go some place in economizing, providing also the people back home let the Members of Congress know they want less spending and more economy in Government.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. As I understand my friend, he modifies his demand that the Committee on Ways and Means do it, and now suggests that the Speaker of the House do it.

Mr. RICH. No. The President of the United States is more responsible than anyone else for the spending of money, but he has not the sole responsibility. It is the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate. There is the nigger in the wood pile, and we have got to get after them and let these people know that they cannot go on and make these appropriations if this resolution means anything.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I hope my friend will get that nigger out of the wood pile that causes so much trouble.

Mr. RICH I will do everything I can to that end, and I always have,

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. If he can, we will be much better off. I would not be in favor of shooting anybody; but if he is in there and creating trouble, there ought to be something done about it.

Mr. RICH. What effort is being done by the powers that be now in this administration to cut down expenses? That is the point. That is the thing that is going to count; and unless they realize that responsibility, may I say to the gentleman, I do not think this resolution is worth a cent, or a tinker's hoot.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. The war ended earlier than we anticipated, and consequently appropriations that we thought would be necessary for the war were not necessary, and in place of increasing the debt we have reduced it by $10,000,000,000. That is encouraging. It is to be hoped that my good friend from Pennsylvania, the watchdog of the Treasury as far as the House is concerned, will assist in holding down appropriations to necessary expenditures and thereby lighten the heavy burdens on the taxpayers of today, and if he does, no one will be more pleased than the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. RICH. I know that and I realize that, but may I say this to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means? We have a lot of appropriation bills that are coming in here that will require a lot of money. Take, for instance, Great Britain, with a request for $4,400,000,000. They are also talking about giving Russia a billion-dollar loan and France $750,000,000 as well as a lot of these other foreign countries.

We just have no money to loan any country. We might barter or trade with foreign countries and do business with them, but we just must stop being a good fellow and a Santa Claus.

Our responsibility to our people is great and they expect of us a sensible, sound administration of the affairs of our Government.

If we want to keep our own house in order we just cannot afford to take on those obligations to all those foreign countries. Does the gentleman think we can? That is a fair question.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. No, I do not think we can.

Mr. RICH. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I would infer that my good friend from Pennsylvania is not in favor of all these loans or gifts or whatever they may be, and I somewhat share his opinion on the subject. That is an open question on which, however, we must keep an open mind until the evidence is all in. I always try to wait until the evidence is in before I arrive at a conclusion.

It seems appropriate, therefore, that the debt limit should be reduced to reflect this new situation. This is the first bill reducing the debt limit which this committee has had the privilege to report to the House since I became a Member of it in 1925. I know that you can all appreciate how happy I am to be able to report this bill and recommend its adoption.

In addition to reducing the debt limit from $300,000,000,000 to $275,000,000,000, H. R. 6699 changes the manner in which the debt is computed for the purpose of applying the limitation.

Some say that this is excessive, but I think the bill intends just to tell the truth and the facts as far as the actual debt of the United States is concerned. There may be an honest difference of opinion, but I think the bill is an improvement on the present law in that respect.

The present $300,000,000,000 limitation applies to the total face amount of the debt that can be outstanding at any one time. In the case of savings bonds sold at a discount, face value is identified by the present law with the maturity value, rather than with the issue price or current redemption value, of the obligations. This means, for example, that when the Treasury sells a Series E savings bonds for $75 it increases the debt for the purposes of the statutory debt limitation by the full maturity value of the bond—that is $100—although the Treasury has received only $75 from the sale.

The $100 will not be due until the end of the 10 years.

The debt limitation has been applied in this manner for many years. During this same period, the Treasury Department has, with the full knowledge of our committee, issued its monthly statement of the amount of the public debt, not on the basis of the maturity value of the securities outstanding, but on the basis of their current redemption values. In a statement made upon this basis, a savings bond sold at $75 is included in the public debt at $75 as long as it is redeemable at that amount. When at the end of one year, the redemption value of the bond increases to $75.50, it is taken into the public debt at that amount, and so on, until the tenth year when it is included in the debt at its maturity value of $100.

Computing the debt in this way makes more sense for most purposes than taking it at its maturity value. In addition to the fact that periodic Treasury financial statements have for years reported the public debt on this basis, Congress has recognized it by tying various pieces of legislation—for example, the determination of the rate of interest to be paid on special obligations issued to the Federal old-age and survivors insurance trust fund—to the amount of the debt as so computed. The informed public has also recognized that this is the more significant method of computing the debt. The figures based on current redemption values are used almost universally in public discussions, although the Treasury Department regularly publishes figures on both bases. The figures based on maturity values, on the other hand, have been little used, except in discussions of changes in the debt limitation statute. This has resulted in unnecessary confusion. Your committee believes that this confusion should be ended by placing the statutory limitation on the same basis as that used for other purposes.

For a number of years, the Treasury Department has issued at the end of each month a statement reconciling the amount of the debt as shown in its ordinary accounts with its amount for the purposes of the statutory debt limitation. That is, it issues two statements, one showing the actual maturity value of the obligations outstanding and the other showing the current redemption value, which is really what the Government owes at the time the statement is issued.

We had up this matter in 1944. The House passed a bill, and the Senate changed it, whereby the debt obligation of the United States would be computed on the same basis as provided in this bill.

That was first called to the attention of the chairman of the committee by Mr. Dewey, a very able and distinguished member of our committee, as well as of Congress, and a very able banker. He is now connected with some bank and has been in the banking business many years. I offered the amendment at his suggestion to change the method of computing the obligations of the United States. He certainly would not have advocated that if he had not thought it was sound legislation.

The bill which we are now reporting has been made possible by the rapid decline in Government expenditures and by the sustained level of tax receipts since VJ-day. Secretary Vinson recommended its adoption, and I think its passage by the House today will be a fitting recognition of the healthy state of Government finances as Secretary Snyder takes over. I am sure that the passage of this bill will give the House more satisfaction than that of any bill which has been before it in some time.

As my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, has so pertinently observed and so often emphasized, if the Congress can hold down the obligations, expenditures, authorizations, and appropriations to an amount necessary to meet the necessary expenditures of the Government, we will have no trouble or difficulty in balancing the budget while revenue receipts are at a reasonable level. If we are to retain the confidence of the public, we must gradually reduce or lower the debt. The only way we can do it is by a greater economy than we have ever effected up to this time or at least for many years.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. The report sets forth that the current redemption value of any obligation issued on a discount basis which is redeemable prior to maturity, at the option of the holder shall be considered to be the face amount of such obligation.

If that is applied to bonds, what does it mean? Does it mean the face value of the bond would be considered the amount that the Government would pay to the holder even though he bought it at a discount?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. No; it means that the redemption value of the bond shall be what he paid for it plus the interest that has accrued. For instance, a $100 bond is sold at a 25-percent discount which means that he paid $75 for it.

If the purchaser holds the bond for the 10 years, he will get $100. But if the holder wants to cash the bond and turns it in, he will just get the $75 plus the interest that has accrued, provided he does not turn it in before 1 year.

Mr. DONDERO. In other words, they do not have to redeem it at a loss?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. No, he does not have to cash it at a loss. He cannot turn it in at a profit and he gets no interest until he has held it a year, but he can call for his money any time after 60 days.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina has consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means what he thinks of the sale of surplus property. It seems to me that all the money that is derived from the sale of surplus property should be turned in toward reducing the national debt as fast as that money comes into the hands of the Government through the various Government organizations, because we should not confuse the operation of the Government in deriving income from the sale of this property with the money we have appropriated in the past to run the Government. We should figure the amount of our expenses annually as well as our receipts and the difference should be either a gain or a loss, a surplus or a deficit. All the moneys that are derived from the sale of surplus property should be turned in toward the reduction of our national debt and we should keep the account separate.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Of course, receipts from the sale of surplus property are turned in to the general Treasury fund. That augments the fund in addition to what we receive from the customs and internal-revenue taxes. Therefore it is all one fund, as I understand it. If at any time there is a surplus in the Treasury above a reasonable balance or a safe balance, it ought to be paid on the public debt and the bonds should be called in and the interest should be stopped.

Mr. RICH. I hold in my hand the Treasury statement of June 12, which shows a credit here for the fiscal year 1946 of receipts of $337,387,948.02 from the Surplus Property Act of October 3, 1944.

Certainly we should have a greater credit than that to apply on our national debt from sale of surplus property. What is this administration doing with surplus property sales? Why does not the Treasury statement reveal where it is applied?

Now, we know that there has been a great deal more surplus property than that sold. As fast as they sell it, they should get that money into the Treasury.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. At least that 2 cents should go to the reduction of the public debt. I am sure of that. We should be counting mills and cents now, we are so far in debt.

Mr. RICH. It is as amusing to you as it is to me how these Government statements mention 2 cents, the way they have been squandering money the last few years. But every 2 cents in bookkeeping is accurate accounting to me and should be tenderly cared for—10 pennies make a dime and 10 dimes make a dollar.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. The gentleman expresses my views exactly as far as that is concerned.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN].

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, my support of this bill is, to say the least, qualified. In the first place, it is in part an attempt to fool the American people—for this bill pretends to reduce the debt limit by $25,000,000,000 when it is really only reducing it by some fourteen or fifteen billions.

The difference comes through changes in the method of bookkeeping.

Whether it is correct to figure savings bonds at their redemption value today, or at the figure which they must be redeemed if held to maturity is a question about which accountants will disagree—so I suppose it is only human nature here to find the Treasury Department advocating the way which is most politically advantageous.

I personally would prefer that we be more honest with the public—leave the accounting rules as they are at present and make the figure two hundred and eighty-five billion, rather than the two hundred and seventy-five billion as appears in the bill.

The public will like this bill for it seems to show that the administration is heading in the right direction.

But does this bill really mean anything? Is not the whole question of the size of the public debt entirely a question of how much Congress is going to spend?

If we continue to appropriate at the rate we have been doing, what does this bill mean?

It only means that we say to the Secretary of the Treasury, "If Congress keeps spending, you will have to find the money in some other way than through borrowing."

You would set up quite a problem for him. Of course he could draw down his working balances for a while, but you would find him hot-footing up to Congress asking us to change this limit again—or crying for more taxes, or asking us to give him authority to issue printing-press money, or some other scheme for what our debt is—is entirely a question of how much we appropriate here.

The bill does not mean anything.

It does not accomplish anything.

It is merely a somewhat misleading gesture to the American people calling attention to the fact that Congress has not spent as much as was envisioned when we raised the debt limit to three hundred billion.

Of course, he have not. The war was on then—has been over nearly a year now. But we have, and are spending much too much. And the blame lies right here in this Capitol Building.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, if we were to take this bill at its face value I dare say anybody and everybody would support it without any qualms of conscience or any excuses or any reasons; but, just as my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] indicated, the bill on its face does not state the actual facts; and neither do any of these bills that we have passed heretofore with reference to debt limitation. Just as we have increased the debt limit several times we never have, had, nor has it ever been the intention that the bills we passed should include all of the debt we owed. We have had this matter up before. The last time we had it up I made a very exhaustive speech on the subject. I shall not attempt to do that today, but I shall go into it far enough to show that what we owe is not covered by or included in this bill. The Government owes many billions in addition to anything we have ever covered in legislation of this kind. For instance, we owe all of the contingent liabilities of the country. A year ago they aggregated $21,000,000. Some of them have been paid and some have been reduced. I do not have the figures at this time to cover them. Then we have other organizations that have the right to incur and bind the United States in debt obligations. There are a number of them. I listed them before. There were about 41, I think. Some of them have outlived their usefulness by this time, of course, and do not have that authority. I do not have the exact figures but I feel sure that the actual debt and contingent obligation of the Federal Government at this time would be at least $50,000,000,000 more than that included in this bill. I do not want to be held down to any exact figures because I think the principle is the same no matter how the figures vary, but a year or so ago I did have the figures showing that it ran up, I think, to about thirty-five or forty billions.

What is the need for legislation of this kind? I have always maintained that we have never needed any of these debt limitations for this reason: Regardless of the fact we passed a law providing that the debt limit shall be so much, that does not mean that we bind ourselves, because it is the Congress that has passed that limitation and the Congress can at any time it wishes exceed that limitation. In other words it is just like my saying that I will not spend any more money. It is my money, and if I change my mind I can spend some more of my own money. I may budget myself. I can live within the budget or if I do not want to live within the budget I can exceed the budget. It is not a bad idea to pass a law limiting the debt obligation, but I cannot see any reason why we should have to pass a debt-limit law when we are going down. For instance, if we say the present debt limitation is $300,000,000,000, what is the use of passing a new limitation fixing it at only $275,000,000,000 when we are coming down to that figure? It is only natural that the debt should recede with the conclusion of the war and really I maintain that it does not mean practically anything for you to say how much the debt shall be. For instance, if we approve this $275,000,000,000, something in the very near future might come up that might require us to assume some great obligation, for instance, say something in connection with this atomic age, where we would want to surpass that limit. There is no reason why we should not. There was one instance, I think, during the war when the debt ran above the limit before we had time to raise the limit. So we can do it again. I made a little speech out in Columbus, Ohio, about a year ago in which I divided up the amount that each community would have to pay of the national debt. We talk about the national debt being $275,000,000,000, but we do not appreciate how much it is. That is a terrific amount. Take the city of Columbus, Ohio, or one the size of Columbus, 400,000, and their portion of that debt is $655,000,000. That city now has the right to vote under the law a debt of no more than $22,000,000. In other words, the greatest debt that she could incur under the law would be $22,000,000, but if she started out to pay her portion of the national debt it would amount to $655,000,000. That is 147 percent of the assessed value of the whole city. That same situation is true all over the United States. So it is no wonder that the great group of people we call the common people does not pay much attention when we say that the national debt amounts to so much.

It is so colossal that there is not much chance for us to ever pay it, especially under the plans and legislative programs we have been using in the last few years. The only way we can ever pay it is to devolve plans that bring the United States to maximum production. Let us produce all we can, let everybody work and everybody produce and everybody earn his daily bread. When we do that, we might pay the debt sometime. When that will be, I would not dare to prophesy. I hope to live a long time, but I have no reason to expect to live that long.

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. MATHEWS. Assuming this House passes what is commonly called the British Loan Act, which is to be financed by the sale of bonds of the United States Government. Would that come under the provisions of this act now before us?

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman probably knows, if he has studied the British Loan Act very closely—and I am sure he has—that the claim is made it will not. They claim that the plans by which they are going to fund this obligation will be such that it will be taken care of so that it will not become a part of the national debt. But that is only a manipulation.

Mr. MATHEWS. I would like the gentleman's viewpoint.

Mr. JENKINS. It is only manipulation. You cannot incur an obligation that is not a debt. You can devise any kind of bookkeeping you please, but in the final wind-up it is a debt. If we advance it as a gift to Great Britain, we will not get it back. If we advance it as a loan, it will depend on how much you are going to figure that loan to be worth. You may lend money to a certain individual that you know is good and you would consider such a loan a good debt. But if you lend money to somebody you have grave doubts that he will pay you back, it is not a good loan. We are, as I understand the plans, to issue bonds which will be used to secure funds with which to make the proposed loan to Britain. Any kind of bonds issued by the Government are a part of the national debt.

Mr. MATHEWS. If the British-loan agreement is passed or agreed to by this House and that legislation amends this act to include the British loan, then this limitation does not mean very much, does it?

Mr. JENKINS. If it should develop that the Appropriations Committee will be called upon, in order to sustain the financial honor of the country, to appropriate money that will run the national debt beyond $275,000,000,000, we, the Members of Congress, will vote it on the floor of the House. If we obligate ourselves to lend this money to Great Britain, we will lend it; and if we must run the debt limit above $275,000,000,000, we will do so. That is one boast that we can make about America: we always live up to every obligation to which we agree. If it be a financial obligation, we pay what we agree to pay. We perform what we agree to perform. We should exercise that care before we incur an obligation, because after it has been incurred it is too late.

Mr. Chairman, let me say one more word. I want to impress especially on the Republicans that they should not get into their minds that this bill today means that $275,000,000,000 is all we owe. The day may come when we will be in power and we will then find that the country owes much more than two hundred and seventy-five billions. Then we might want to pass a debt-limitation law that will include the whole debt. In that event we might want to exceed the two hundred and seventy-five billion limit and just because a man says he owes only a thousand dollars that will not protect from paying $2,000 if he actually owes $2,000. Do not be backward about remembering that when we vote for this bill today we do it as a matter of expediency. Do not be fooled about all these figures. You have heard that sometimes figures do not tell the truth, which is the case here. The figures do not tell the truth and do not commence to tell the whole truth. I am going to vote for the legislation because it is just a little matter of expediency. Of course, I am glad that we are coming down a little with the national debt. We should have paid the debt off much faster than we have been paying it. But, as I said before, we will never pay our debt off until we produce more, until we have a more complete national income, an income that is a real income, not a manipulated income. The national debt will never be paid until the Republican Party is restored to power. That has been the history of our country. After World War I the Republicans were restored to power and we paid the debt off at the rate of $1,000,000,000 per year. We will have the task to do again.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. JENKINS. I yield myself an additional minute.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to my distinguished and learned colleague from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The gentleman made some very interesting statements about the share of the national debt in my district, which is Columbus, Ohio. The gentleman gave figures, I presume, based upon the population; on the per capita share of the debt.

Mr. JENKINS. That is right.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I wonder if it would not be possible for the gentleman, from his studies, to tell us what the share, for instance, of the national debt in my district would be based upon the amount of income tax we now pay or the amount of property in my district. It occurs to me that while the per capita debt is an extremely interesting figure, I happen to know that my district is going to have to pay far more than its per capita share of the debt if it is ever going to be paid.

Mr. JENKINS. That results from the fact that the gentleman comes from one of the finest districts in the United States as far as ability to pay taxes is concerned. I refer to the capital city of Ohio. Incidentally, I might say for the State of Ohio that we are far in the lead, as far as that is concerned, over the average of the States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself four additional minutes.

There is no question but what there are some cities in the country that have large populations that do not have much tax to pay, and consequently do not pay a great amount of taxes in proportion to other cities that have a less population. But the city of Columbus, I dare say, is far above the average, and the gentleman should get ready to pay more than his share.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. My people might just as well understand that they are not only going to have to pay the gigantic sum the gentleman has mentioned, but more, too, if the United States is to remain solvent.

Mr. JENKINS. There is no question about that.

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to my distinguished friend the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri. The gentleman was speaking of the public debt per district. If we consider the Federal, State, and municipal debt combined as the public debt, it amounts to about $435,000,000,000, or about a billion dollars per congressional district.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman is absolutely right. I wish we could say that all the national, State, and political subdivision debts were included in this sum of money. The States owe a colossal amount. The municipalities owe a colossal amount, and the various Government agencies owe a colossal amount. But I say this, taken as a whole, the financial position of the States is far better than the financial position of the United States of America at this time. The United States is staggering under the most colossal debt that ever burdened any country. There are some who say "Why worry, we owe it to ourselves." That is going to be a poor answer to an aged thrifty person who has denied himself in order to buy a few Government bonds to carry him on through his life. When he asks for cash for his bonds it would not be right to tell him he owes anybody any part of his bond. That would be repudiation. Repudiation is not American. Should America ever repudiate her honest debt then America would be America no more. Repudiation is inconsistent with the very genius of America.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH].

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio who just preceded me. This is a very embarrassing bill to our Republican friends. This is a bill that they have been asking for time after time. This is a bill as to which the distinguished Member from Ohio who preceded me has consistently stated "Why, there is no such thing as a limitation on debt by statute." So today we are now presented with this bill that has been introduced by our distinguished Chairman. The purpose of the bill is not to decrease the debt limit, but to decrease the amount of obligations issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act which may be outstanding at any one time.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. Let us have a little understanding here. The gentleman does not mean, of course, to give the impression that the passage of this bill will reduce the debt any more.

Mr. LYNCH. Absolutely not. It does, however, put a ceiling on the amount of bonds that may be issued.

Mr. JENKINS. That is right. Now I want the gentleman to get this right. What we Republicans were clamoring for was not this bill but a condition when the debt would come down. We are glad you have reached that place finally.

Mr. LYNCH. The situation is that under this bill the obligations which may be issued under the authority of the Second Liberty Bond Act are limited to $275,000,000,000, which is a reduction of $25,000,000,000 from the present authorized amount.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. We decrease the amount of obligations which can be outstanding at any one time without further legislation.

Mr. LYNCH. That is correct.

It has been stated here by one of my colleagues that this involves a change in Treasury accounting. Actually it does not involve a change in Treasury accounting. It conforms to the manner in which the Treasury has been rendering its accounts in the past and to which exception has been taken.

It also has been said here that we now seem to be heading in the right direction insofar as the administration is concerned. The American people were pledged time after time that as soon as the war expenditures were over the Democratic administration would make every effort to reduce our obligations. That is what has been done in the past, that is what we are doing now, and that is what I am sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania will recognize we are doing in the future. Is that correct?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. Certainly.

Mr. RICH. If this has anything to do with reducing our expenditures, then I know nothing at all about financing. This does not reduce expenditure one iota. You are not going to do anything so far as doing the sound, solid thing for this Government is concerned, unless you stop the appropriations you are making. By passing this bill and having the country think you are reducing the national debt, you are not reducing it one cent. All you are doing is putting a limit on it, but after awhile you will make appropriation after appropriation and then you will find you are up against a stumbling block, and you will probably have to come back here and increase the limitation again, as we have done 8 or 10 times in the last 4 or 5 years.

Mr. LYNCH. There is no more chance of our increasing the obligations once we have passed this bill than there is for the gentleman to fly out of the room.

Mr. RICH. This is only a shot in the arm.

Mr. LYNCH. The fact of the matter is that under this bill we are limiting the obligations that can be issued to $275,000,000,000 instead of $300,000,000,000. That is bringing it down $25,000,000,000, which is in line with what the gentleman has been asking for so eloquently in the years in which he has been in the House, as to where we are going to get the money. Now we have this reduction insofar as the obligations that may be issued under the bill are concerned. We have said under this bill that no obligations can be issued above $275,000,000,000. The existing law is that no obligations shall be issued over $300,000,000,000. That, to my mind, is definitely in line with what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been asking for a good many months and a good many years. Now, when we are trying to do what the gentleman asks, we are told that this is a fraud and that this is a cheat and that the American people are being deceived.

The fact of the matter is that this is $25,000,000,000 and not 2 cents like you were arguing about before. It is $25,000,000,000 less than the existing authorization. I should think you would be very happy.

I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. The gentleman is not correct when he says it is $25,000,000,000 less than the existing authorization. It is only $14,000,000,000 less than the existing authorization.

Mr. LYNCH. The gentleman's method of calculation is a rather peculiar one.

Mr. KEAN. It is the way the Treasury has calculated.

Mr. LYNCH. I fail to understand why he calculates that way. If you owed $1,000 on a demand note, would you say your obligation was $1,000 plus 6 percent interest for 6 years or would you say your obligation was $1,000 plus 6 percent up to the present day? Of course, the gentleman would say that his obligation was $1,000 plus interest up to the present day. That is the way it is with these $75 bonds which have a face value of $100 but the obligation is only $75 plus the accrued interest down to the present time.

Mr. KEAN. In my hand I hold a bond. It says $25 and does not say $18.75. That is the principal amount of the bond.

Mr. LYNCH. The principal sum of the bond is $18.75 and you have the accumulated interest. The gentleman knows that very well. The accumulated interest for 10 years brings it up to $25 in the case of an $18.75 bond.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. If the gentleman would turn the bond over and read the back of it he will see that it does not have a value of $25. It is worth $25 at the end of 10 years. But the gentleman should read if he will what the value is after 1 year or 2 years or 3 years. The value then is much less than $25.

Mr. KEAN. Why did they print $25 on that bond then?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Why do you not give the whole story?

Mr. KEAN. I know the whole story. I have bought bonds the same as the gentleman has.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Why do you not give us the whole story?

Mr. LYNCH. I know the gentleman is familiar with that bond because as he says, and as I know, he has purchased many of them. He is one of the most patriotic Members of the House. At the same time the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey knows very well that actually that bond was bought for $18.75. If he will look at the face of the bond he will note that the obligation runs from the date printed thereon up to the present time. If the bond was presented for payment today, a person would get $18.75 plus the interest from the date of the bond to the 17th day of June 1946, and that, in my opinion, is the real obligation of the United States Government—to pay that bond of $18.75 with interest to the time when it is presented. It can be presented at any time and if it were presented today, that would be the amount of the obligation of the Government.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. The bond shows how much it is worth after each year and it is not worth $25 until the end of 10 years. It is written plainly on the back of the bond how much it is worth at the end of each year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, certainly no damage can be done by passing this resolution. But if we are cutting down our national debt $25,000,000,000, it would please me a whole lot more than it is to pass this resolution. I have a statement of June 12 showing that our national debt is $271,188,582,719.95.

Now, the situation is just this. This resolution has no effect whatever in aiding or assisting in cutting down our national debt. It is just saying that our debt shall not be increased over and above $275,000,000,000. But you know the President sent a message in here last January that the expenditures for the year beginning July 1 would be $35,000,000,000. For the next 2 years it would be $25,000,000,000 each year. That means if you want to balance the budget you have to take in $35,000,000,000 next year. With the system of taxation we have and the condition of business in the country and the number of strikes there are at this time I question whether you will get $35,000,000,000 income. Therefore if you do not get it, you will naturally have to increase the debt a little over and above what it is at that time.

In my opinion you will go in the red about $1,000,000,000 a month next year. That is, if you do not take into consideration any moneys you receive from the sale of surplus property, your regular income and outgo. If you go into debt $12,000,000,000 next year, the following 2 years you will go into debt five or six billion dollars. To me that is a terrible situation to be in. You have not had a balanced budget since 1941. Just think of it. That is the longest period in the history of our Nation that we have gone in the red. We have had the greatest orgy of spending that any nation has ever had. It behooves the Members of Congress and those responsible for the operation of this Government not to permit any more expenditures than are absolutely necessary for the conduct of the affairs of this Government. We have been too lax in trying to hold down expenses. Too lavish in spending. I know the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee realizes that as much as any Member of the House, but I hope he will join with the Republicans and say we are not going to permit the expenditure of any more funds than we are going to take in by our revenues regularly collected. If you do that, it is up to you, Mr. Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, to see that we get the money before we spend it. If we will take an attitude of that kind, then I believe we will be able to get this country on its feet. That is, provided we do not play Santa Claus to every nation in the world. I say it with all respect to every nation on the face of this earth, this country cannot afford to go into debt any further, in order to help all the countries of the earth we would like to help, and who have their hands out, because of the way this Nation has played Santa Claus to every nation and every organization in the world in the last 10 years of New Deal experimenting, New Deal incompetency, and New Deal extravagance, vote maneuvering and waste.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. The gentleman will agree there is nothing in this bill, by any stretch of the imagination, that could be interpreted as increasing the public obligation or increasing the debt? The purpose of it is to fix a limitation of obligations to be outstanding at any one time.

Mr. RICH. Exactly so.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. It does not increase or decrease the public debt, as far as that is concerned, or as far as expenses are concerned. The British loan and appropriations and all those things will come up later. One thing about the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will say he is always consistent. He does not believe in wasting money. I wish I were a little stronger than I am in that respect. I cannot go quite as far as he does, but I keep as near to him as I can.

Mr. RICH. Well, I always had to work and earn and save if I wanted to get along, and I think every man in this country has to do the same thing. We must work for what we get and we will appreciate it more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. RICH. I think every Member of Congress has to come to the conclusion that every dollar he appropriates and spends is going to be added to the burden of his constituents who are the taxpayers. When every Member of Congress realizes that it is his duty now to try to keep expenditures down so that his taxpayers back home are not going to be overburdened with paying taxes that will be assessed, then we will get some place, and we can save this country from financial ruin. But this country is in danger of being taken over by the radicals and people who believe in spending and spending. We have had enough of those radicals in the administration in the last few years, and I hope the people back home eliminate them all. The administration now, since we have a new President, must realize that it should insist on economy of Government operation, consolidate departments, cut out duplication, leave much of the New Deal functions on the shelf, or put them in a basket, carry them to the dump and throw them overboard. They have no place here. We ought to clean them up.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. The taxpayers are weary and heavy laden. They are entitled to a rest and are demanding a rest.

Mr. RICH. The taxpayers are the voters. The voters, the people back home, I am sure, will soon realize the situation and refuse to support Members of Congress who come here for everything under the sun in the way of expenditures when every State in the Union is now in better financial condition than the Federal Government. There is not a State that is not in better financial position than the United States Government.

I hope the membership of the House will remember these facts when these requests come to us for unnecessary spending of our own and foreign loans. Next week we are going to have a request to lend $4,400,000,000 to Great Britain. We cannot make that loan or gift because we just cannot obligate the taxpayers of this country to make these gifts to foreign countries when it is not due them, when we do not owe it to them in any way. And it may wreck us financially if we give them the money. Stop it before it is our downfall.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, this bill, of course, is an altogether proper bill. I am sure it is going to pass without any dissent. It seems to me that the bringing in of this debt-limit-reduction bill today, coinciding, as it does, with the report of the Federal Reserve Board which is contained in this morning's papers, is rather significant, and I wanted to speak about it from that point of view.

We all know, of course, that the reason it is possible for us to bring in this bill today, the reason it is possible for us to look forward to the likelihood of a balanced budget, if not the running of a surplus, is because of the high level of production that is taking place in the Nation today. The first point I want to make is that everything connected with the possibility of reducing the national debt depends upon the maintenance through the years of that full production which incidentally means reasonably full employment for our people.

The Federal Reserve Board has recommended that we maintain taxes for the next few years without reducing them further—at least the net amount of the tax, regardless of the incidence. That might be changed, but they recommend that the total amount of taxes collected should not be reduced. I agree with them. I think we already perhaps have gone too far in that direction. Then they recommend a reduction of Government expenditures just as much as possible. Again, of course, the Board is right. Then they proceed to point out, in effect, that we still will not be out of the woods if we do those things.

To approach the matter from a little different angle for a moment, I am one of those people who have believed that we needed a more realistic administration of OPA, one aimed more directly at getting maximum production than we have had. But I have had, and still have, the fear that if OPA were virtually eliminated or seriously reduced or taken away at the present time we would face a dangerous inflationary period. I think that is true, and I am afraid it is going to happen. Under those circumstances, then, as the Federal Reserve Board points out, it becomes incumbent upon the Congress to attempt to use every other means at hand to prevent inflation. Those other means should have been used from the beginning, and some of these means are vastly more fundamental to the problem than anything this OPA itself can apply. So it is necessary, the Board points out, to attack what it calls the "inflationary potentials" of the present situation. I might quote statements made by the president of the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, Mr. Chester Davis, who pointed out in a radio address not very long ago the following:

> We must stop the expansion in our supply of money which is due to monetization of bank debts.

In another place he said:

> We must act on the inflationary source of bank credit particularly.

In another place he points out there are two different kinds of borrowing the Government engages in: First, borrowing from individuals and corporations; and the second is "borrowing from banks who create new money on those bonds. That, in large part, has been responsible for the great growth of our money supply as the result of the war."

That is not myself speaking. That is Mr. Chester Davis speaking. He is, however, saying things that I have said many, many times in the well of this House. I pointed out that we were in effect permitting the banking system of the United States to create hundreds of billions of dollars of brand new money during the war period.

What does the Federal Reserve Board say we ought to do about it? They point out that more than $100,000,000,000 of Government bonds is now held by the banks or about 40 percent of our total national debt? To the extent that the national debt is reduced by paying off some of these bonds, as we all hope can be done, the amount of the bonds becomes cash in the hands of the banks and creates a new inflationary danger of five times the proportion of the present one. The reason is that under present banking laws and regulations, with the reserves now at their maximum at which the Federal Reserve can legally fix them, for every dollar of cash reserves the bank has it can loan into circulation $5 of bank credit of demand deposit money. So the Federal Reserve Board is concerned about this matter, and quite properly so.

The first thing that might occur to the Federal Reserve Board or to any one else who studies the question would be to raise the rate of interest. If they raised the rate of interest that would make it less desirable for people to borrow. It would put a brake upon the desire of people to borrow this money from the bank, and thus put a brake on the expansion of the monetary supply of the country. The monetary supply of the Nation today is more than twice what it was 4 years ago, in 1941. Then people wonder why we have the inflation problem. The reason the Board cannot raise the rate of interest, however, is very succinctly stated by the Federal Reserve Board when they point out that a rise in the rate of interest of even 1 percent means an addition to the Nation's tax bill of $1,000,000,000 a year under present circumstances. The Board points out that the national debt is six times as big as it was 4 years ago.

So the Board recommends three measures to be taken. Here is what they are: In the first place, they recommend that there should be a limitation on the opportunity of banks to make long-term investments with newly created money; that is, bank credit money created on the bank's books with which the Government has nothing to do at all. It is the use of a sovereign power of the Nation by a banking system to create new money. They recommend that the bank's right to use that money created on their books by making long-term investments be eliminated. Otherwise the banking system can and does buy for example productive plant in the country with money it has created out of thin air. They also recommend that a portion of the short-term bonds be frozen in the banks as a part of their reserves. This would mean the banks could not turn their short-term bonds into cash nor expand upon them at a 5 to 1 ratio in the manner I have described.

In the third place they recommend an increase in the Board's power to control reserve requirements. They say that the Federal Reserve Board should have the power to increase the reserves in the commercial banks as against demand deposits to a greater extent than they now have. I believe the Board is decidedly on the right track. I would only say that I do not think they have gone far enough if we are in earnest about meeting the present situation.

I have a proposal. I have made it before repeatedly. I have made it in books, articles, and speeches. I have written books and I have made speeches in the House recommending that what we ought to have is a hundred percent reserves behind the demand deposits in the banks. When people have money in the bank, when they think they have money in the bank, it ought to be there dollar for dollar. Suppose we did that. Then we should at the present time, as a means of making the transition easy and as a means of preventing inflation permit the banks to use Government bonds that they now hold as a part of those reserves and make those bonds eligible as a part of the reserves. This would mean that the banks would have to hold those bonds and could not use them as a basis for inflationary expansion. The bonds would be a part of their reserves. Let the banks hold them and draw interest on them as long as the bonds are outstanding and until they reach maturity. Then at the point where they do reach maturity, in view of the fact that those bonds were acquired by the banks through the process of the creation of money on the bank's part, therefore were bought with money the only security for which was the credit of the United States of America as a nation, I would pay those bonds off at point of maturity, by an act of Congress, authorizing the creation by the American Government of money in precisely the way the banking system created the money when they bought the bonds. Thus I would replace those bonds with lawful money in the hands of the banks as their reserves behind demand deposits.

If this were done, three things would happen: One, 40 percent of the national debt of the United States would have been paid off in the course of time, not immediately, but would be paid off without the necessity of a single dollar of tax raise to do it. No. 2, danger of inflation at the moment would be largely eliminated or, at least, greatly mitigated. No. 3, not a single bank in the United States could ever fail again as long as it lasted in all history, for the possibility of bank failure would be automatically wiped out.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I simply asked for this time because I believe this bill is quite a proper bill, and I am glad it is possible to bring it in. Also the bill points in the direction that we must go. To go in that direction we must be resolute in resisting reduction of taxes, we must be resolute in the curtailment of expenditures, but more than that we must establish a proper policy in the monetary and fiscal field.

I just want to make this point, too, that when the river and harbor bill was on the floor I offered an amendment to the bill which said that none of those projects should be engaged in until such time as there was either insistent need for the construction of the project or until such time as vital materials were available in ample supply and there was a volume of unemployment in the construction industry requiring that need for expansion of employment and business in the construction industry. Yet, I got very little support on that amendment. That amendment was designed in a way that we could have cut down expenditures now when we do not need to make them and wait until such time as it was sound to make public improvement. But I also want to say that when I offered that amendment, some gentlemen on the minority side of the aisle that talk so much about economy did not rise on their feet and support the measure.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. If we follow the procedure outlined, how would the banks make their profit?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The banks would make their profit, first of all, because there would be a larger volume of savings accounts than there are now, and those savings accounts are put in the banks for the purpose of investment and lending by the banks. In the second place, the banks would be allowed to make service charges for the services they perform in connection with those demand accounts. We would pay them honestly for the services they perform. In the third place, the present volume of money and credit now outstanding would not be reduced and would be available for reloaning whenever loans now outstanding were paid off. I could answer the gentleman much more at length if there were time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think this bill gives us an opportunity to say some things which I believe should be said for our own benefit and for the benefit of the people of this country. I do not want the good people of my district to understand that this bill reduces the debt of the Federal Government, and I ask the members of the committee to correct me on any statement that I make in error while I am addressing the House.

As I understand this bill, it reduces the authorization of the debt.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. It rather limits the authority to issue obligations. It curtails the authority.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I thank the gentleman. The Treasury has recently reduced the amount of the debt outstanding by taking a portion of the excess cash which the Treasury had on hand and which came to the Treasury as the result of selling bonds in the last bond drive beyond the actual needs of the Treasury, as it has since developed, and I think that reduction has run in the neighborhood of $10,000,000,000. I congratulate the Treasury for taking the excess cash on hand and reducing the debt in that manner. If the Treasury still has excess cash on hand as a result of borrowing from our people and our savings institutions and banks, I hope the Treasury will further reduce the debt to the point where it cannot go any further with respect to the cash it has on hand. Of course I am in favor of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a rather blunt statement here for the benefit of the people in my section of the country, and that is this, that the management of the present debt during the coming 25 to 50 years will undoubtedly have as much to do with the quantity of business we transact in this country, with the rate of interest which our people receive on their investments and their savings and their loans, with price levels, with wages, with the total volume of business, and with the total national income, as any other single factor that will operate in the United States.

I repeat that the factor which will exercise this vast and far-reaching influence on our economy is the management of the present debt. I do not wish to get into this particular argument with any thought with respect to what we may add to the present debt by additional deficit financing during the current fiscal year or any other fiscal year during the next 25 to 50 years. These remarks are directed directly to the proposition of the management of the present debt. I keep repeating that because I find it necessary to drive it home continually, the management of the present debt. What are we going to do with it?

Our good friend from California, whom we all admire so much [Mr. VOORHIS], has started the ball rolling, and I hope before this House recesses a sufficient number of men will take the floor to discuss this proposal, which comes from the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, so that our people in this country will begin to see what the management of the present debt is going to mean to them.

What kind of banking system did you have in this country prior to the approval of the Federal Reserve Banking Act of 1913? You had a banking system largely based on Government bonds. After using the Federal Reserve Banking System for some 34 years, here comes a proposal from our friend from California to throw the compass away with respect to sailing on the sea of central banking, the Federal Reserve Banking System, and go back to a proposition of bank deposits based on 100-percent reserves invested in Government bonds, if you please.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The only reason I propose to use the Government bonds as part of the reserve is as a means of controlling the present inflationary situation and as a temporary means of enabling the banks to have sufficient reserves for that purpose. I do not believe it ought to be the basis of reserves, I will say to the gentleman. I think those bonds ought to be monetized in the course of time and that eventually it should be a cash basis.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think I understood exactly what the gentleman said originally and I certainly understand what he says now, but I still make my statement to the effect that, temporarily or otherwise, here is a proposal to throw the compass away.

What are we going to do about that in this country? Let me tell you something. As of January 1 of this year the individuals, partnerships, and corporations of this country had on deposit in the banks of the United States—I am referring to insured banks—approximately $112,000,000,000. You can get the exact figure from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation with respect to all the insured banks. Against those deposits the banks hold about $28,000,000,000 in loans. So deduct your $28,000,000,000 from the $112,000,000,000 and you have left about $84,000,000,000 of deposits which belong to the people of this country, the depositors of the banks. Those are debts which the banks owe to the people, if you please. Since when in all history did anything like that ever happen before? I can appreciate the predicament in which the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System find themselves under the present Federal Reserve Act. Suppose the OPA does die after June 30? Suppose it does die as of next December 31, or next April 1, or next July 1947? It does not make any difference which of those dates you select because the date furtherest away is only a few months from now. What kind of a gadget do we propose to recommend to the people of this country for the purpose of controlling inflation or preventing inflationary forces running wild after OPA has been liquidated? OPA has been just a political economic umbrella. It will not suffice when the real storm breaks. The Board of Governors know that. That is the problem the Federal Reserve Board is wrestling with. That is why every commercial bank in the United States is wondering at this very minute what in the world is going to become of its earnings. The banks draw their earnings at the present time primarily from investments and loans. If you are going to prohibit commercial banks from making loans on which they can draw interest and if you are going to prevent commercial banks from buying more bonds issued by the Treasury, or from drawing interest on bonds now held as investments, what will be the net effect on bank earnings, and bank capital? Remember the commercial banking system in this country has for the past 5 years been the residuary purchaser of all bonds issued by the Treasury which the public did not purchase—it does not make any difference how much was issued, whatever the public did not purchase, the banks had to take; and as a result you had in the insured banks of this country as of last December 31, about $96,000,000,000 worth of these bonds, and to that extent we monetized the debt of the United States, drew checks against it, turned the check money out into the hands of the people, and today that constitutes a very large portion of the potential inflationary base with which the Board of Governors and this Congress is wrestling through OPA machinery and the far-reaching and startling recommendations made by the Board which the gentleman from California referred to.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I think the gentleman should point out that 70 percent of all deposits in banks are now represented by Government bonds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield three additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] has said is another significant fact. In World War I your commercial banks purchased about $4,000,000,000 worth of these Treasury issues. Today as I have pointed out to you, the commercial banks alone, let us put it that way, hold about $96,000,000,000, according to my last figures. In other words, about 57 percent of the total balance-sheet footings of the banks; that is, the total assets of the banks, is represented by these Government bonds; or say, about $158,000,000,000 total of all deposits and bank holding roughly, as of last December 31, some $96,000,000,000 of bonds.

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman discussed the question of the management of loans. I think one of the things that are disturbing the financial institutions of the country is the question of how the $130,000,000,000 of short-term paper issued by the Treasury is going to be managed. I refer to certificates of indebtedness and Treasury notes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Out of the total interest-bearing debt at the present time of $270,000,000,000 roughly $130,000,000,000 is short-term paper. You have $61,000,000,000 of that debt maturing within this year and $124,000,000,000 of that debt maturing say before January 1, 1952. That does not include the $49,000,000,000 of savings bonds which are held by the people and which can be made demand paper on the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury is the appointee of the party in power. He must think in terms of the management of that debt from the standpoint of the political exigencies of the case.

The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System is a nonpolitical organization. They must think of the management of the debt as related to the responsibilities imposed upon them by the provisions of the Central Reserve Banking Act. This Congress may have to do something before it adjourns, especially if OPA dies as of June 30. Whether OPA dies June 30 this year or June 30, 1947, make up your minds you will have to deal with the most far-reaching banking legislation imaginable on this floor sometime during the coming 12 months, because every commercial bank in this country will undoubtedly be whipped to its knees as a result of the cut in its earnings. A situation will develop with reference to its ratio of capital to deposits by reason of the mismanagement of the Federal debt of the United States. Do not overlook this most important problem in your study and analysis of inflationary movements, controls related thereto, and the disposition of OPA.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the Congress in April, 1945, fixed the national debt limit at $300,000,000,000. It was not known then when the war would end or what financial obligations it might be necessary for the Government to incur. I wish to commend the able Committee on Ways and Means for having favorably reported H. R. 6699, the bill now before us for consideration, which amends section 21 of the Second Liberty Loan Act and fixes the maximum debt limit at $275,000,000,000.

This does not mean that we are balancing the budget or that we have paid $25,000,000,000 on the national debt. The President and the Treasury Department estimate that we shall have a deficit on June 30, 1946, of $21,700,000,000. In other words, the war in Germany has been over since April 1945, and the war in Japan since August 1945. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, our expenditures will exceed our revenues by $21,700,000,000, and may I point out that we have collected in taxes and other revenues from the American people for this fiscal year approximately $45,000,000,000. We have spent all of that and we still shall go into the red $21,700,000,000 by June 30, 1946, for the present fiscal year.

There will be collected from the American people for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1946, and ending June 30, 1947, approximately $31,500,000,000, and there will be expended approximately $36,000,000,000, and it is estimated there will be a deficit for the coming fiscal year of approximately $4,500,000,000, and that means that this Government up to June 30, 1947, will have gone into the red for 17 successive years. This Nation will have spent each year more money than it has taken in for 17 years, and only the Almighty Himself knows how many more years this Nation will continue to go into the red.

This is an alarming situation. What would we think of any business concern going into the red every year for 17 years and piling up additional debts? How could such a concern escape bankruptcy? This Nation must quit deficit financing. We must put our financial house in order. We must balance the budget. We must quit exacting from the people 12 times as much in taxes as was taken in in 1930 or 1931, and still spend each year billions more than we take in.

I said some years ago that so long as the New Deal remained in power, taxes and the national debt would increase. I do not expect any relief from these intolerable conditions so long as the New Deal remains in power. It is up to the American people to elect a Congress in 1946 and a President in 1948 who are willing to stop this waste and extravagance, and save our country from financial and economic disaster.

In addition to our fixed national debt, we have billions of undetermined obligations. We are informed that our Government has approximately one hundred and thirty billion of short-term loans the demands for payment of much of which could be made in 1946. The American people have in their possession approximately fifty billions of bonds on which they could demand payment. Approximately 70 percent of the deposits in our banks are represented by Government bonds. From 50 to 75 percent of the assets of our banks are Government bonds. While we have not resorted to the printing press in the printing of billions of dollars in money, we do use the printing press printing bonds. These all present a serious threat of uncontrolled inflation. What will happen to our banks and to our country if we continue this unwise policy of deficit financing and the holders of these bonds present them for payment?

There is a heavy drive on now to sell Government bonds. Why is this? One reason is we continue to spend more than we take in in the way of taxes and other revenues. The other is, according to press reports and other information we have, the American people are cashing in their bonds in greater quantities and faster than they are buying bonds, and hence, the bond drive to sell more and more Government bonds. With that situation confronting our country we shall be called upon in a few days to pass a bill approving a loan to Great Britain for $3,750,000,000. We have pointed out that we face a deficit of nearly twenty-two billion for the present fiscal year and more than four billion for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, yet we propose to reach down into our empty Treasury and turn over to Great Britain three billion and seven hundred and fifty million. We do not have the money to lend. In fact, we are not paying our own running expenses. With a national debt confronting us of two hundred and seventy-five billion we must borrow the money. The only way the Government can borrow the money is through increasing the sale of bonds to our overburdened banks and our people.

We have been going into the red for more than 15 years. How long will it be before the American people become alarmed and present their bonds by the billions and demand payment? As we pay off these bonds we must sell additional bonds to replace them. How can the people have faith in the way and manner in which our Government is conducting its finances?

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAVIN. If bonds were floated to raise the three billion and seven hundred and fifty million of the British loans, does the gentleman believe the American people would buy them?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I have no way of knowing, of course, just what American people would or would not do. I certainly would not buy bonds for that purpose, and it is my own personal opinion that the average American would not grab up these bonds for that purpose. Our national debt is three times that of Great Britain. Our deficit for the present year is two or three times that of Great Britain. We have been going in the red ever since 1930. To me it seems very, very unwise to borrow money under our present financial conditions and lend it to Great Britain. No other country has ever done that. No other country would do that for us. If we aided any country under the circumstances, I would prefer to aid Great Britain, but I think it is our first duty to maintain the financial and economic stability of our own country. We have been very generous with our British allies in furnishing men and our own materials in helping to win the war. Since the war closed we have turned over to Great Britain $6,021,000,000 worth of surplus stable materials and supplies of every kind at a little over 10 cents on the dollar, giving them 55 years in which to pay it and the same length of time to pay this cash loan at the rate of 2 percent. No payment or interest is to be due until after December 31, 1951, and then no interest is to be paid unless the foreign trade of Great Britain is approximately 60 percent more in volume than it was before the war.

Our veterans have been unable to secure surplus property because of the immense amount we have turned over under these conditions to Great Britain and other countries have also received billions of dollars of surplus property. We also canceled the $25,000,000,000 balance due us on lend-lease. We turned over to Great Britain our Army, Navy, and air bases with all the equipment, installations, and improvements in Great Britain, free of charge, and then we propose to give Great Britain access with little or no tariff to the rich American markets.

Under all the circumstances, I cannot see where Great Britain has any just claim at all for a cash loan from us of this immense sum of money. Is it possible that those in authority believe there is no limit to the financial resources or credit of the United States?

We must not overlook the welfare of the American people.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, quite a number of years ago, in fact shortly after the First World War, I made a very careful study of the effects of the printing-press type of government as operated in those countries abroad that were ruined. I made a careful study of what happened in Germany when they started the printing presses running. I made a study of what happened in France. Remember their fine educational institutions with their wonderful endowments. What happened to them under printing-press financing? I think the highest that was realized on some of their best endowments in France was 14 percent. One of their fine institutions was only saved because it had all invaluable serums to sell to the afflicted, war-torn world, so that France did not go quite so far in the depreciation of their money as did Germany.

You will recall that one of our able economists went over to Germany to study the inflationary situation. He stopped off on his way to Germany to see an economist in Great Britain. This economist in Great Britain said to him: "When you get to Germany you will find the people do not know they have inflation. They just figure they have had a rise in prices." Our economist said, "That is incredible. They must know it. The school children in the United States know it." But when he arrived in Germany he found that no one there, even the highest officials, thought they had inflation. They just thought they had had an increase in prices.

In spite of OPA, and to large extent because of it, we have inflation in this country. The administration has been using the printing press, only it has been using it in a subtle and slick way so that the people have not realized any more than they did in Germany why it was that prices have been going up. We have heard a discussion here today, and I am not going to repeat it, of the amount of money in the banks that the people could use and would like to use to buy things they need. But the administration has been carrying on inflation from two different directions. The OPA has strangled all possibility of maximum production in this country. You all know it. You all get mail from your districts that this particular industry or that industry cannot get started, it is on a dead-center, principally because they cannot get materials or because of some fool, idiotic regulation under which they just cannot operate. So I am not very much worried about what may happen to OPA when that comes along, except to destroy it if possible to do so.

This country has been flooded with credit money. Of course the country is short of goods for the people to buy with their money. The result is inflation of prices and inflation is growing at an alarming pace every day. The Federal Reserve has known all of this or should have known it for a long time, but today they are coming up for air. They are frightened. They have a right to be frightened. This country is a good deal nearer the brink of insolvency than it has ever been in its history, there is no question about that, and this bill that we have before us at the present time is not an open, frank bill. It misleads the people. It may make them feel a little more secure to be told the debt is only $275,000,000,000 instead of $300,000,000,000. Perhaps the administration may think by bringing out this bill it will relieve a lot of fear.

We have heard much talk about bonds, such as has been exhibited in the debate. We can differ on the floor and debate it to our heart's content, but this changing the rules in the middle of the game as is provided in this bill does not give the true picture. Heretofore we have figured the face value of these bonds in measuring the national debt. Now the administration just wants to disregard the face value and make the people believe we are really reducing the national debt by about $10,000,000,000 when we are doing nothing of the kind.

It would seem to me, speaking to both sides of the House, leaving out all partisanship, that the fight we all should make, now that we know the situation our country is in, is to try to restore the solvency of this Government, because you cannot preserve the freedom of the people with an insolvent government. The most dangerous enemy of free government is the printing press. We have been printing bonds, we have been deceiving the people in regard, for instance, to the great fund of $7,000,000,000 collected under the Social Security Act. Where is it? It has been spent for running expenses of the Government and millions of taxpayers in the future including our GI's, many of whom are under covered employment, are going to be taxed to pay this trust fund over again. It is a plain fraud upon the people of the United States.

Away back in the early days before the King of France lost his head, Louis XVI devised a very clever scheme of annuities. Everybody was wild over Government annuities. They hired money to purchase Government annuities, they bought annuities wholesale. Then the Government financed the annuity system much as our Social Security System has been financed.

The people bought annuities for their babies and for themselves figuring that in a few years they would get a large percent on their annuity investment, that they could then retire and live happily forever afterward. Finally, the King let Necker, the conservative Minister of Finance, go. The people knew something was wrong. When the people found out that something was wrong, the King tried to reestablish the confidence of the people by recalling Necker. It was too late. What happened was that the money the people had invested in annuities; a profligate King and his officials had spent the money and the annuities were gone, and they were in such financial distress and hunger that finally the people marched to Versailles, brought the King back and ultimately beheaded him.

The time has come when there ought not to be partisanship in our legislation. The time has come for this Congress to save this country from insolvency. That is the important thing for the Members to do and that is the specific responsibility we are sworn to discharge as representatives of the people. The only way that you can create confidence in the minds of the people is to legislate wisely and sanely, and on matters even of this kind to tell them the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. If that is done so that all the people really understand the serious financial plight of their country, how near it is to the financial abyss, you will find that the people will tighten their belts to meet and solve the problem. The American people will see to it that a Congress is elected and sent here that will underwrite the future of this great Republic.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. On the social security trust fund I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not he would agree that a completely accurate statement of that situation would be as follows: The money was collected. The money was not stored away as money, but a certificate of indebtedness to that trust fund was issued.

Mr. REED of New York. Yes; I agree with the gentleman that it was a certificate of indebtedness; just printing-press bonds.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Had that not been done, we would have had to borrow the $7,000,000,000 elsewhere.

Mr. REED of New York. Of course, the administration should have been honest about it and said so.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. And you would have owed the money to some other place than to that trust fund, is that not true?

Mr. REED of New York. The money has been spent. Why did not the administration come out and inform the people and let them know what this OASI is costing them instead of deceiving them and using this money, which is nothing more than an income tax imposed upon the smaller taxpayers of the country? They do not realize that the $7,000,000,000 has to be paid over again, but it will have to be paid over again by future taxpayers.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I do not agree that it will have to be paid over again.

Mr. REED of New York. Yes; the people will have to be taxed to pay it over again.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the pending bill, H. R. 6699, is to decrease the amount of obligations issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act which may be outstanding at any one time from the present $300,000,000,000 to the amount provided in the bill of $275,000,000,000. A similar bill has already passed the Senate. The pending bill is supported and recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Under section 21 of the Second Liberty Bond Act as amended the face amount of the obligations issued under the authority of that act and the obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States except such bonds as are held by the Secretary of the Treasury is fixed at $300,000,000,000. As I stated a moment ago, the pending bill provides for that amount to be reduced to $275,000,000,000.

The pending bill also provides that the current redemption value of any obligation issued on a discount basis which is redeemable prior to maturity at the option of the holder of the obligation shall be considered for the purpose of section 21 of the Second Liberty Bond Act to be the face amount of such obligation.

As was pointed out by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the present statutory debt limit was fixed by the act of Congress of April 1945, when we were at war with Germany and Japan. We were unable to tell at that time what it would cost to win the war. But since the defeat of Germany and Japan, the demands on our Federal Treasury have considerably decreased, and we can now form a much more accurate estimate as to the amount of expenditures that will be necessary, so that the present limit of $300,000,000,000 as provided under the Second Liberty Bond Act may be safely reduced to the amount provided in this bill of $275,000,000,000. Our present outstanding debt under the Second Liberty Bond Act is about $270,000,000,000, so that it will be seen that we will have about a $5,000,000,000 margin between the present amount of the indebtedness and the amount authorized under the pending bill.

I would especially like to invite attention to the fact that the provision in the pending bill which provides for the redemption value of these outstanding savings bonds to be used rather than the maturity value is based upon the principle of accuracy in bookkeeping and accounting. It is well known that many of these savings bonds are being cashed all along. We know that a person after holding a bond for 60 days can cash it at its present redemption value. Therefore, it is not accurate to say that the maturity value 8 or 10 years from now is the outstanding indebtedness of the United States, because the fact is that many of these bonds are being paid all the time.

It should further be borne in mind that the provisions contained in this bill provide for exactly the type of system and arrangement that is now reflected in the Treasury statements that we receive. The fact is that the passage of this bill will simply make the situation conform to the practice that is now being followed by the Treasury Department in issuing these financial statements from time to time. So the charges made here about any fraud being practiced upon the public or anything of that kind are simply not borne out by the actual facts as they exist in this case. This is simply to make the accounting system conform to the existing practice that reflects the real truth of the situation to the American people. As was also pointed out by our distinguished chairman, the peak of our outstanding debt under the Second Liberty Bond Act reached the highest figure in February of 1946, which was $279,213,558,897. Since the close of the war and especially during recent months, the Treasury Department has redeemed or paid off something like $10,000,000,000 of the public debt. We had the assurance of the Treasury Department when they appeared before your committee that it is their intention to continue that practice to retire these outstanding bonds and pay off the public debt as rapidly as it can safely be done. So your Committee on Ways and Means presents this bill today feeling that it is in the interest of the people of this country that the outstanding authorization for the issuance of bonds under the Second Liberty Bond Act be reduced by this $25,000,000,000 as is here provided and that the accounting method to be used be based upon the facts of the case so that the true situation will be presented. I do not know of any opposition to this bill. Your committee feels it should pass and that it is in the public interest. The Treasury Department has recommended it. I hope there will be no opposition to it in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 21 of the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 21. The face amount of obligations issued under authority of this act, and the face amount of obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States (except such guaranteed obligations as may be held by the Secretary of the Treasury), shall not exceed in the aggregate $275,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. The current redemption value of any obligation issued on a discount basis which is redeemable prior to maturity at the option of the holder thereof shall be considered, for the purposes of this section, to be the face amount of such obligation."

SEC. 2. This act may be cited as the "Public Debt Act of 1946."

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SIKES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6699) to decrease the amount of obligations, issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, which may be outstanding at any one time, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the remarks I made in Committee of the Whole certain tables and materials.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROWAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include three letters advocating extension of the OPA.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address made by the Commander in Chief of the Polish armed forces.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan (at the request of Mr. MICHENER) was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a broadcast made by himself.

Mr. CRAWFORD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement he made before the Pennsylvania Bankers' Association.

EXTENSION OF HOSPITAL FACILITIES

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, on January 10, 1945, an important piece of legislation was introduced into the United States Senate. Extensive hearings were held on it during which the measure received almost universal support from all elements of our society. This measure has since been passed by the Senate, favorably reported by a subcommittee of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and now awaits the favorable action of that committee for consideration by this House of Representatives.

I speak of Senate bill 191 which provides for the use of Federal funds—under careful control—for the construction of hospital facilities for the use of our civilian population.

American hospitals represent the finest traditions in American life, having received the faithful support of great numbers of interested citizens with no thought of private gain. An overwhelming proportion of their physical assets are an expression of the philanthropy of the American people. During the grim days of the early thirties funds were not available for their extension to meet the expanding needs of our growing population and to keep their physical facilities abreast of the advances in modern medical science. Only a small proportion of the funds spent for public works during those years was used for hospital construction, and then only for institutions that were wholly owned by government. During the war years construction has been impossible so that we are now faced with a population which has outgrown its hospital facilities, and a science which has outgrown its workshop.

Hospitals have traditionally called forth the finest support on a voluntary basis from our population. It would be unthinkable for this Congress to do anything which would dampen the ardor of the vast numbers of our citizens who contribute time, energy, and money to hospitals. It would be equally deplorable if this Congress does not take a firm stand in stimulating the extension program for our civilian hospital facilities so urgently needed.

With the great Johns Hopkins in my home district, and the University of Maryland Medical School and Hospital also located in my home city, Maryland is often thought of as a medical center, but, within 50 miles of those institutions—indeed, within 50 miles of the spot where I stand at this moment—are areas of the same State not adequately served with hospital facilities.

Senate bill 191 represents a carefully developed plan, meeting with universal approval of health authorities and all sections of our public, to stimulate, on a sound basis, the necessary extensions of hospital facilities. It is imperative that this House of Representatives take immediate and favorable action on this measure.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF GRAVES OF DECEASED SERVICEMEN

Mr. CARNAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes, and to revise and extend my remarks and include therewith a copy of a bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARNAHAN. Mr. Speaker, on June 14 I introduced H. R. 6793, a bill directing the Departments of War and Navy to furnish photographs of permanent graves located outside of the United States to the next of kin of the decedents. The carrying out of the provisions of this bill will represent a very small expenditure in money but will mean much to our citizens who have lost a relative during the recent war.

The Congress has recently enacted legislation which provides for the return of the remains of our honored war dead for burial at home in the United States if the next of kin requests such return. For those who may elect not to have the remains of their loved ones returned the furnishing of photographs of the permanent grave will mean much in assurance that the loved one was correctly and reverently interred. Such photographs will relieve any doubt regarding the location of the permanent grave and will give assurance that the grave has had and will continue to receive adequate care.

The bill has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I am asking that the bill be given immediate consideration and that it be placed on the Consent Calendar. I invite the favorable consideration of the House membership to this bill. I feel that no Member of the House will find any objection since we are all anxious to extend this assuring expression of appreciation to those of our people who made the heavy contribution of a relative to the winning of the war. We are also anxious to perpetuate the remembrance of our war dead who made the supreme sacrifice that we might remain free.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include a copy of this bill.

H. R. 6793

A bill to require the Departments of War and Navy to furnish photographs of permanent graves located outside of the United States to the next of kin of the decedents

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause photographs to be made of each permanent grave located outside the 48 States and the District of Columbia of those who died in World War II while serving in the Army or any civilian capacity under the direction of the War Department. Such photographs shall include a view of the grave, showing its general surroundings and a view of the grave showing all identifying markings placed thereon. Such photographs with the negatives shall be furnished without charge to the next of kin of the deceased.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to cause photographs to be made of each permanent grave located outside the 48 States and the District of Columbia of those who died in World War II while serving in the Navy or Coast Guard or any civilian capacity under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy. Such photographs shall include a view of the grave showing its general surroundings and a view of the grave showing all identifying markings placed thereon. Such photographs with the negatives shall be furnished without charge to the next of kin of the deceased.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAWFORD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JUNE 18, 1946

(Legislative day of Tuesday, March 5, 1946)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, our life, our hope, our strength, like clanging bells on a lonely ocean tolled by the restless sea, so in our unquiet souls tolls the longing for Thee that will not be stilled. Out of the night that covers us we come groping up the altar stairs to the light that never fails. For our day, with all its sinister renewal of injustice, misery, and of ruthless regimentation that robs men of their freedom, make us children of the light, harbingers of the day. Thou seest us plunged, almost unaware of its dire portent, into the most fateful struggle of human history. As those called to steer the Ship of State in mountainous seas, reveal to us the things that belong to our peace and our salvation. With the rapture of high resolve, being done with lesser things, gird us with might to clear across the ravished earth a highway for the feet of our God whose kingdom has no frontiers. In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Saturday, June 15, 1946, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] may be excused from attendance upon the sessions of the Senate of this day and of each day to and including June 21.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

NOTICE OF HEARING ON NOMINATION OF GEORGE B. HARRIS TO BE DISTRICT JUDGE, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, and in accordance with the rules of the committee, I desire to give notice that a public hearing has been scheduled for Tuesday, June 25, 1946, at 10:30 a. m., in the Senate Judiciary Committee room, upon the nomination of George B. Harris, of California, to be district judge of the northern district of California, new position. At the indicated time and place, all persons interested in the nomination may make such representations as may be pertinent. The subcommittee consists of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], chairman; the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HUFFMAN]; and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on June 15, 1946, the President had approved and signed the following acts:

By Mr. ELLENDER:

A concurrent resolution of the legislature of the State of Louisiana; to the Committee on Finance.

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 3

"Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to exempt all veterans of World War II from the payment of any Federal income taxes during their tenure of service and for 1 year subsequent to honorable discharge on net income not exceeding $2,500 per annum

"Whereas the democracy of this country is owed largely to the millions of its youth who served in the armed forces during the global conflict known as World War II; and

"Whereas the sacrifices made by these gallant men and women of the United States cannot be compensated in dollars and cents, and such is not expected by them; and

"Whereas their whole lives were transformed during their training and fighting without any concern being given to personal business activities, and many of them do not have the funds to defray income-tax payments due or becoming due for the period of their military service; and

"Whereas in most instances periods of readjustments are required for these veterans to settle down to civilian routine, employment, and business transactions: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Senate of Louisiana (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Legislature of Louisiana do respectfully request and recommend to the Congress of the United States that its membership sponsor and enact amendments to the Internal Revenue Act whereby each and every veteran of World War II shall be exempted from the payment of any Federal income taxes during their tenure of service and for 1 year subsequent to honorable discharge on net income of each not exceeding $2,500; be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Louisiana be, and he is hereby, directed to send certified copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, President pro tempore of the United States Senate, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Member of the Louisiana delegation in the Congress of the United States.

"J. EVERRET,
"Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate.
"R. NORMAN BAUER,
"Speaker of the House of Representatives."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana; to the Committee on Military Affairs:

"House Concurrent Resolution 15

"Whereas the legislature had the privilege of enjoying a most interesting and informative address by Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, National Director of Selective Service; and

"Whereas we realize the perilous position that the United States now faces due to the unsettled conditions in numerous countries now suffering from starvation, famine, diseases, and internal strife: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the legislature, That we express our thanks to General Hershey for his most timely message; and be it further

"Resolved, That the members of the Louisiana delegation in Congress be requested to give their undivided support in helping to maintain a strong armed force to defend the peace just won and to urge Congress to enact a draft law for this purpose."

A resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana; to the Committee on Military Affairs:

"House Resolution 9

"Whereas the Federal Government built and operated during World War II ammonia plants at Sterlington and Lake Charles, which plants are still the property of the Federal Government; and

"Whereas the Sterlington and Lake Charles plants will be subject under the Federal law to sale or lease and negotiations looking toward such disposition are now under way; and

"Whereas it is to the manifest interest of Louisiana and adjacent States that when said plants are leased or sold that they be operated at least in part for the production of fertilizers to which they can be easily converted, which utilization will not only mean conversion to a permanent industry but will be of great benefit to the farming population of Louisiana and adjacent States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of Louisiana, That it urge and memorialize the Federal Government and its appropriate agencies to require any lessee or purchaser of the Sterlington and Lake Charles ammonia plants to use at least a portion of the capacity thereof for the production of fertilizers; and that preference be given to bidders proposing such utilization over those which do not."

THE WHEAT SITUATION

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred telegrams from O. E. Case, secretary, Kansas Grain Feed & Seed Dealers Association, and Roy F. Bailey, State senator and editor, Salina Journal.

Reports from other sources in eastern and western Kansas tell of this same kind of sentiment among the farmers of that section. I have brought this matter to the attention of the Department of Agriculture and in doing so pointed out that the Senate on Thursday adopted an amendment which would authorize the issuance of certificates to these wheat growers. I trust this provision will be retained in H. R. 6042 in its final form.

There being no objection, the telegrams were received, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HUTCHINSON, KANS., June 12, 1946.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Grain dealers, who are members of this association, advising producers are angry because of forced selling of wheat under amendment 8 to WFO 144; and many reported refusing to deliver wheat, preferring to pile on ground. Suggest CCC guarantee that if any advance in ceiling price of wheat occurs prior to June 1, 1947, it will be made retroactive to all forced sales of wheat (one-half of all wheat covered by said amendment 8 to WFO 144 delivered to elevators and warehouses); and retribution to producer will be made by CCC in the amount of such increase per bushel in the ceiling price on wheat multiplied by the number of bushels producer was forced to sell under the provisions of amendment 8 to WFO 144.

O. E. CASE,
Secretary, Kansas Grain Feed & Seed Dealers Association.

SALINA, KANS., June 14, 1946.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Farmers in central and western Kansas up in arms on threatened seizure of half their crops, and price uncertainties. They plan to store more grain than ever before at a time when it is most needed. Worse than that, wheat has ripened unevenly in same fields, which makes storage dangerous because of spoilage. As a means of getting wheat sold at harvest, so it will be available for feeding ourselves and as many others as possible, and avoiding losses which will result from organized program of holding back on the farm, hope you will do everything possible to prevent proposed seizure of half each farmer's crop as it goes to elevator. Also believe Congress should guarantee that any increased ceiling prices granted before next June, be made available to the producer. Having been fooled before, the farmer is justified in being suspicious, and he is entitled to assurances on which he feels he can rely before he sticks his neck out again. Harvest now getting under way and quick action is essential if wheat is to pour into elevators where it can be cared for properly, and become available for food and feed immediately. I believe this situation to be acute and dangerous.

ROY F. BAILEY.

PUBLIC WORKS ON RIVERS AND HARBORS—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce, I ask unanimous consent to report favorably with amendments the bill H. R. 6407, being an act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1508) thereon. I ask that the bill be placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina:

S. 2344. A bill authorizing the appointment of three additional judges of the municipal court for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HAYDEN (for Mr. TYDINGS):

S. 2345. A bill to provide for the retention by the United States Government or its agencies or instrumentalities of real and personal property within the Philippines now owned or later acquired and for the administration of the Trading With the Enemy Act of October 6, 1917, as amended, in the Philippines, subsequent to independence; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. McFARLAND (for himself and Mr. HAYDEN):

S. 2346. A bill authorizing the construction, operation, and maintenance of a dam and incidental works in the main stream of the Colorado River at Bridge Canyon, together with certain appurtenant dams and canals, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. McCARRAN:

S. 2347. A bill to amend the act of August 19, 1937, relating to the incorporation of the Southeastern University of the Young Men's Christian Association of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. EASTLAND (for himself and Mr. BRIDGES) introduced S. J. Res. 167, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, relating to the composition of the Supreme Court, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and appears under a separate heading.)

UTILIZATION OF WARTIME PLANTS AND FACILITIES FOR PROCESSING AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES, ETC.—EXTENSION OF TIME TO FILE REPORT

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, on October 9, 1945, the Senate agreed to Senate Resolution 176, which requested all administrative agencies holding war plants to place a temporary freeze on the sale of such plants which were designed and equipped to process surplus agricultural crops into raw materials for industrial use. This resolution was designed to give the Congress time to study the question of the proper disposal of these plants. We want to adopt a definite national policy toward them before they are sold into the hands of private interests, which might dismantle them or might not use them in the best interests of American agriculture or the national welfare.

Since that resolution was agreed to we have made considerable progress toward developing such a national policy on these plants. We now have a bill—Senate bill 1908—in the Agriculture Committee which we expect to bring before the Senate very soon. I am very hopeful that the Senate will adopt it and that it will be finally enacted into law within a few weeks—before the end of the session, at least.

We did expect to have all action completed on the subject before this time. Unfortunately for one reason and another, the report called for by Senate Resolution 176 has been held up and is not yet in print for general distribution. We expect to have it available within a few days. Meanwhile Senate Resolution 176 set a termination date at the end of this month. The resolution I am now presenting will move that date up to March 1 of next year at the latest, or until the time when Congress passes some legislation establishing a definite policy, such as Senate bill 1908 that the Agriculture Committee will report within a day or two. We have set the final termination date for next March just to cover the possibility that we may not get around to taking final action on Senate bill 1908 at this session because of the rush of last-minute business and the desire of so many Members to adjourn and get home. That might make it necessary to take up Senate bill 1908 again at the opening of the next session. But we really expect to have the whole matter disposed of before we adjourn next month.

I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution for reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 286) was received and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 176 (relative to the continued operation of federally owned plants for processing agricultural commodities and forest products or for manufacturing nitrates for fertilizer), agreed to October 9, 1945, is hereby amended by striking out "July 1, 1946" wherever it appears in such resolution and inserting in lieu thereof "March 1, 1947."

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE LATE SENATOR JOHN H. BANKHEAD

Mr. HILL submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 288), which was referred to the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the Committee appointed by the President pro tempore in arranging for and attending the funeral of Hon. John H. Bankhead, late a Senator from the State of Alabama, on vouchers to be approved by the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

CONTINUATION OF INVESTIGATION OF GENERAL SURVEY OF CONDITION OF INDIANS

Mr. O'MAHONEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 289) which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 79, agreed to February 2, 1928, and continued by subsequent resolutions, authorizing the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, to make a general survey of the condition of the Indians in the United States, hereby is continued in full force and effect during the Eightieth Congress.

SALARY OF SOLICITOR OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1460) to fix the salary of the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior, which was, in line 6, to strike out "Secretary of the Interior" and insert "President."

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947—AMENDMENT

Mr. TAYLOR (for Mr. MAGNUSON) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6335) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 84, after line 25, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Trout-rearing pools Quilcene, Wash.: For the construction of trout-rearing pools at Quilcene hatchery, Quilcene, Wash., to supply trout for stocking lakes and streams within Olympic National Park, $35,000."

RETURN OF GRAND RIVER DAM PROJECT TO GRAND RIVER DAM AUTHORITY—AMENDMENTS

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina (for himself and Mr. BUTLER) submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to the bill (H. R. 5508) to authorize the return of the Grand River Dam project to the Grand River Dam Authority, and the adjustment and settlement of accounts between the Authority and the United States, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

NOTICES OF MOTIONS TO SUSPEND THE RULE—AMENDMENTS TO DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, JUSTICE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. McCARRAN submitted the following notices in writing:

In accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 6056) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and the Judiciary, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely: Page 35, after line 4, insert the following new paragraph:

"Notwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 555), or the provisions of any other law, the Secretary of State may, in his absolute discretion, on or before June 30, 1947, terminate the employment of any officer or employee of the Department of State or of the Foreign Service of the United States whenever he shall deem such termination necessary or advisable in the interests of the United States, but such termination shall not affect the right of such officer or employee to seek or accept employment in any other department or agency of the Government if declared eligible for such employment by the United States Civil Service Commission."

In accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 6056) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and the Judiciary, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely: Page 67, after line 18, insert the following new paragraph:

"The Navy Department is authorized to transfer without charge to the Coast and Geodetic Survey two AGP seaplane tenders, two PCS submarine chasers, and three SC submarine chasers from the reserve or surplus to the needs of the Navy Department, each of the seven vessels equipped with the necessary launches and ship's outfit."

Mr. McCARRAN also submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 6056, the Departments of State, Justice, etc., appropriation bill, 1947, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

(For text of amendments referred to, see the foregoing notices.)

NOTICES OF MOTIONS TO SUSPEND THE RULE

Mr. McCARRAN pursuant to the provisions of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate gave notices in writing of his intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 5452) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, several amendments, as follows:

On page 13, following the paragraph ending in line 21, insert the following:

"As used hereafter in this section—

"(1) The term 'veteran' means any person who was in the military service of the United States, as defined in section 101 (1) of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Relief Act of 1940, at any time during the period beginning on December 7, 1941, and ending on the date of the cessation of hostilities in the present war as proclaimed by the President, and who shall have been honorably discharged from such service; or any person who served in the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps and who shall have been honorably discharged for disability incident to such service.

"(2) The term 'veteran's loan' means a loan made by a lending agency to a veteran pursuant to the provisions of this act for the purpose of enabling such veteran to retire indebtedness owed by him on the date of his discharge from the service.

"(3) The term 'lending agency' means any banking institution the deposits of which are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, any Federal savings and loan association organized pursuant to the provisions of section 5 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, and any building and loan association which is a member of a Federal home-loan bank.

"(4) Masculine pronouns shall be taken to include the feminine, the singular to include the plural and the plural to include the singular.

"Upon receipt of an application in such form as may be prescribed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (hereinafter referred to as the 'Corporation') pursuant to section 5 (a) of this act, filed by a veteran within 6 months after the date of his discharge from the service, or within 6 months after the date of enactment of this act, whichever is later and upon execution by such veteran of a veteran's note in such form as may be prescribed by the Corporation pursuant to such section 5 (a), a lending agency is authorized to make a veteran's loan to such veteran in an amount not to exceed the amount of indebtedness and accrued interest thereon owed by such veteran on the date of his discharge as evidenced in the manner prescribed in subsection (c) of this section; but in no case shall the amount of such loan exceed $1,000.

"Such veterans' loan shall be on the monthly installment plan, repayment to begin 6 months after the date of execution of the loan. Veterans' loans shall bear interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum on the unpaid portion of the obligation. No veteran's loan shall be made for a period longer than 3 years; but if made for a shorter period, any veteran's loan may be refinanced, in the discretion of the lending agency, by extension of payments, without impairing the obligation of the Corporation under section 5 (a) of this act: Provided, That under any refinancing plan agreed to, equal monthly installments shall be required, and provision shall be made for complete discharge of the entire obligation, including interest, not later than 3 years from the date of the veteran's loan. Acceleration of installments on a veteran's loan shall not be permitted by the lending agency unless the loan is more than 3 months in arrears, except that the lending agency may accept whole or partial settlement of any veteran's loan, without regard to prescribed installments, in any case where the lending agency has good reason to believe that the veteran's loan was procured, wholly or in part, by fraud.

"Any application for a veteran's loan shall be accompanied by satisfactory evidence of the honorable discharge of the applicant, by a list of present and certain future benefits due the applicant from the Government of the United States, or from any of its departments or agencies, at the time of the application, and by a certified list of creditors showing the amounts owed by such applicant as of the date of such discharge; and shall comply with such other requirements as may be provided in accordance with section 5 (a) of this act. No security, endorsers, or comakers shall be required with respect to any such loan. The obligation of the Corporation to purchase, as provided in section 3, shall not be created in the case of any borrower who is not in fact a veteran.

"Within 5 days after making any veteran's loan, the lending agency shall give notice thereof, in such form as shall be provided in accordance with section 5 (a) of this act, to the Corporation and to all Government departments and agencies from which benefits are due or to become due the applicant, according to the list filed by the applicant with his application, as provided in subsection 2 (c) of this act.

"The Corporation shall agree to purchase from the lending agency any note legally executed by a veteran for the purpose of securing a veteran's loan, in full compliance with the provisions of section 2 and subsection 6 (a) of this act, which remains unpaid for 30 days after the date of maturity thereof, or on which installments are more than 3 months in arrears, at a price equal to the unpaid portion of such note and any interest accrued and unpaid thereon: Provided, That in any case in connection with which the lending agency is guilty of fraud or gross negligence, the Corporation shall not be obligated under this section. As consideration for such agreement by the Corporation, the lending agency shall agree to pay to the Corporation an amount equal to 1½ percent per annum of the unpaid portion of such loan, to be payable at such time and in such manner as the Corporation may prescribe.

"Upon notice by the Corporation or by a lending agency that it is the holder of a note given by a veteran for the purpose of securing a veteran's loan under this act, any Government department or agency of the United States shall consider the amount of unpaid principal and interest thereon as a preferred lien on any pension, compensation, insurance, or other financial benefit accrued or thereafter accruing, under any of the laws administered by such department or agency, to such veteran or to his dependents or beneficiaries, and shall withhold from such accrued or accruing benefits, and remit to the Corporation upon demand, such amounts as will fully discharge such indebtedness: Provided, That the official having charge of the payment of any such benefits may, with the approval of the Corporation, release all or part of such benefits from the Corporation's lien, in any case where he determines such release is advisable because of the needs of the veteran, or his dependents or beneficiaries.

"The special remedy in the preceding paragraph shall not be deemed exclusive.

"The Corporation is authorized and directed to prescribe and furnish to lending agencies forms of applications for veteran's loans under this act and of notes to be executed by veterans for the purpose of securing such loans, and to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper to enable it to carry out the provisions of this act, and such forms, rules, and regulations, shall be uniform with regard to all veterans' loans.

"The amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations which the Corporation is authorized to issue and have outstanding at any one time under existing law is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to enable the Corporation to carry out the provisions of this act.

"Not more than one veteran's loan shall be made under the provisions of this act to any veteran, regardless of the amount of such loan, except that a veteran who has received a veteran's loan for less than the maximum amount of the loan to which he is entitled under subsection 2 (a) of this act, but who is otherwise eligible for a veteran's loan, may apply for and receive a second veteran's loan: Provided, That the existence of the first veteran's loan shall be disclosed by the applicant to the lending agency to which application for a second veteran's loan is made, and that such lending agency shall make certain such first loan is paid in full, both as to principal and interest, from the proceeds of such second veteran's loan.

"Any person who, having obtained a veteran's loan under this act, solicits, applies for, or accepts another such loan, except as provided in subsection 6 (a) of this act, and any person who knowingly and willfully furnishes any false or misleading information for the purpose of obtaining a veteran's loan, or of enabling another to obtain a veteran's loan, under this act, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both."

On page 15, following the paragraph ending in line 12, insert the following:

"The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the business practices and operations of the alcoholic-beverage industry in all its phases, including any matters relating to the production, importation, distribution, purchase, or sale of whisky, gin, rum, brandy, or other distilled spirits, or wine or malt beverages. The Commissioner shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of such study and investigation, together with his recommendations for necessary legislation."

On page 15, following the paragraph ending in line 12, insert the following:

"Section 2806 (d) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'(d) All distilled spirits found in any cask or package, and any bottled distilled spirits found in any case, without having upon such cask or package or case each mark and stamp required therefor by law or regulations, shall be forfeited to the United States.'

"Section 4 of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act (U. S. Code, title 27, sec. 204) is amended in the following respects:

"(1) Subsection (d) is amended to read as follows:

"'(d) A basic permit shall be conditioned upon (1) compliance with the requirements of section 5 of this act (relating to unfair competition and unlawful practices) and of section 6 of this act (relating to bulk sales and bottling), with the twenty-first amendment and laws relating to the enforcement thereof, and with all other Federal laws relating directly or indirectly to distilled spirits, wine, and malt beverages, including taxes with respect thereto, and (2) conduct of the operations under such permit in conformity with the laws of the State in which such operations are conducted.'

"(2) Clause 1 of subsection (e) is amended by striking out 'provided that for a first violation of the conditions thereof the permit shall be subject to suspension only.'

"(3) Subsection (g) is amended to read as follows:

"'(g) A basic permit may be issued for 1 year and shall expire on the 31st day of December next succeeding the issuance thereof unless suspended, revoked, or annulled as provided herein, or voluntarily surrendered: Provided, That the Secretary may without formal application extend any permit granted under this part after August 31 in any year to December 31 of the succeeding year. (1) If leased, sold, or otherwise voluntarily transferred, the permit shall be automatically terminated thereupon, and (2) if transferred by operation of law or if actual or legal control of the permittee is acquired, directly or indirectly, whether by stock ownership or in any other manner, by any person, then such permit shall be automatically terminated at the expiration of 30 days thereafter: Provided, That if within such 30-day period application for a new basic permit is made by the transferee or permittee, respectively, then the outstanding basic permit shall continue in effect until such application is finally acted on by the Secretary of the Treasury.'

"(4) The second sentence of subsection (h) is amended to read as follows: "Such appeal shall be taken by filing, in the district court of the United States within any district wherein such person resides or has his principal place of business, or in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, within 60 days after the entry of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Secretary be modified or set aside in whole or in part."; and the next to the last sentence thereof is repealed.

"All basic permits issued pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, as amended (Public, No. 401, approved August 29, 1935; U. S. C. 1940 edition, title 27, ch. 8, sec. 201 and the following) prior to the approval of this act shall expire on the 31st day of December 1945: Provided, That if this act is approved after August 31, 1945, the Secretary may, without formal application, extend any such permit to December 31, 1946: Provided further, That before the expiration date of any such permit it may be terminated, or, upon notice and hearing, suspended, revoked, or annulled as provided in the said Federal Alcohol Administration Act."

On page 17, following the paragraph ending in line 2, insert the following:

"The principles set forth in section 29.23 (m)–16 of Treasury Regulations 111 shall be similarly applicable with respect to development costs in the case of mines."

On page 17, following the paragraph ending in line 2, insert the following:

"Section 7 of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act is amended by inserting after the third paragraph thereof the following new paragraph:

"'No license under this act of any class shall be transferred to, or issued with respect to, premises which on the date this paragraph takes effect are not licensed, excluding hotels, if such premises are within 600 feet of the nearest boundary of premises on which is located a school, church, playground, public library, eleemosynary institution providing housing for the indigent, soldiers' home, Army post, navy yard, or marine barracks. For the purposes of this section, the term "hotel" means an establishment operating under a hotel license and having in excess of 50 rooms used predominately for transient occupancy; that is, for living quarters for nonresidents upon a short-time basis.'

"Section 9 of such act is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(g) No holder of a retailer's license, class A, or retailer's license, class B, or wholesaler's license shall, with respect to alcoholic beverages covered by such license—

"'(1) advertise, by any means or through any medium, the price for which such alcoholic beverages are for sale;

"'(2) distribute, sell, or give away any price list or information with respect to the price of such alcoholic beverages;

"'(3) display in his place of business any price list or sign with respect to the price of such alcoholic beverages if any price on such list or sign is visible from the street; or

"'(4) display, or leave in his place of business, in a place where customers may take it away, any price list or information with respect to the price of such alcoholic beverages.'"

On page 20, following the paragraph ending in line 9, insert the following:

"Hereafter every Saturday shall be a holiday and not a business day for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; and any act which would otherwise be required, authorized, or permitted to be performed on Saturday in the Bureau, if Saturday were not a holiday, shall or may be so performed on the next succeeding business day, and no liability or loss of rights of any kind shall result from such delay."

On page 34, following the paragraph ending in line 9, insert the following:

"The Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, approved June 30, 1945, is hereby amended as follows:

"(1) By striking out the word 'forty' where it appears in section 201, in subsection (b) of section 202, and in subsections (a) and (d) of section 604 and inserting in lieu thereof the word 'thirty';

"(2) By striking out the words 'forty-eight' in subsection (a) of section 202 and inserting in lieu thereof the word 'forty'; and

"(3) By striking out the words 'two thousand and eighty' where they appear in subsection (a) of section 201 and in subsections (a) and (b) of section 203, and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'one thousand five hundred sixty.'

"Sections 26b and 26c of title 5 of the United States Code, being, respectively, (1) section 11, title II, chapter 212 of the act of March 3, 1933 (47 Stat. 1516); and (2) section 1, chapter 359 of the act of June 16, 1937 (50 Stat. 269), are hereby repealed.

"The Civil Service Commission is hereby authorized and directed to issue, within three months after the date of enactment of this act, and subject to the approval of the President, such regulations as may be necessary for the administration of the provisions of this act insofar as this act affects officers and employees in or under the executive branch of the Government."

On page 34, following the paragraph ending in line 22, insert the following:

"Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Postmaster General, acting through the postmaster of the Senate Post Office, is authorized and directed to cash checks for Senators and secretaries to Senators, in accordance with such rules and regulations as he may deem advisable, and for that purpose he is authorized to use any funds available for disbursement by him."

On page 41, following the paragraph ending in line 14, insert the following:

The following provisions of this act shall apply to the carrying of mail on star routes within the United States.

"(1) There shall be placed in charge of the Star Route Service in the Post Office Department a Superintendent of Star Route Service.

"(2) For the purpose of fixing rates for the transportation of mail on star routes the Postmaster General shall divide such routes into classes A and B. Class A shall consist of those routes on which the mail service is performed by aircraft or by common carrier by motor vehicles. Class B shall consists of those routes not included in class A.

"(3) (a) Upon the expiration of an existing contract on a class A route, or upon the creation of a new class A route, the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, advertise for proposals for the transportation of mail on such route, or may negotiate therefor without advertising, for a contract period not exceeding four years.

"(b) Upon the expiration of an existing contract on a class B route, or within ninety days after the enactment of this act, the contractor on the route, if otherwise qualified, shall be afforded an opportunity to accept an appointment as carrier on such route under the provisions of this act by giving notice in writing to the Postmaster General of such desire, the appointment to be without term, except as hereinafter provided.

"(c) To be eligible as a class B carrier under this act a person must be a citizen of the United States; a resident of the county or counties through which the star route passes, or a resident of a county adjoining such county or counties; of good moral character; between the ages of 21 and 70 years; in good health, except that a present contractor may be considered eligible if capable of performing the duties required on the route which he has been serving. Vacancies shall be filled by the Postmaster General upon certification by the Civil Service Commission from registers of eligibles resulting from examination: Provided, That only persons between the ages of 21 and 55 years shall be eligible to take such examination.

"(4) At the end of the month in which a class B carrier serving under the provisions of this act attains his seventieth birthday he shall be relieved of the duties of his appointment and the vacancy thus created shall be filled as provided herein, except that a present contractor capable of performing the duties of his route shall be permitted to carry the route for a period after reaching his seventieth birthday not exceeding the expiration date of his present contract.

"(5) Class B carriers serving under the provisions of this act shall be paid for the scheduled time of the route, including scheduled lay-over time at outside places to be fairly established by the Postmaster General, at the rate of 90 cents per hour; and in addition thereto shall be paid for equipment maintenance for horse, horse and vehicle, dogs and sleds, boat, passenger motorcar, or lesser type of equipment, a sum equal to 6 cents per mile or major fraction of a mile traveled in performing star-route service; for one-half-ton truck station wagon, or closed body delivery truck, 7 cents; for one-ton truck but less than two-ton, 8 cents; and for two- and two-and-one-half-ton truck, 9 cents; and for large equipment, 10 cents: Provided, That the Postmaster General shall determine the size of equipment necessary to transport the mail over the route with certainty, celerity, security, and economy. Payment of equipment maintenance shall be at the same period and in the same manner as payments for regular compensation.

"(6) Each class B carrier shall designate a substitute carrier acceptable to the postmaster at the head of the route to act in the absence of the carrier. The substitute shall receive for his services the same amount as is paid to the carrier for such services: Provided, That if the substitute carrier uses the equipment of the carrier to perform the services of the route the equipment maintenance allowance for the use of such equipment may be paid to the carrier.

"(7) Every class B carrier and substitute carrier shall take the official oath prescribed in section 30, Postal Laws and Regulations, and shall execute a bond in the sum of $1,000 with acceptable sureties, the bond to be forwarded to the Postmaster General; the amount of bond required on each class A route to be determined by the Postmaster General.

"(8) Wherever the Postmaster General is unable to procure mail service on a class B route under the provisions of this act he may enter into a temporary contract for the performance of mail service on such route at a rate in excess of the fixed rate until such time as he is able to procure such service at the rate scheduled herein.

"(9) Carriers on all routes shall furnish equipment sufficient for transportation of the mails and the proper handling of all postal business on the route with certainty, celerity, security, and economy."

On page 44, following the paragraph ending in line 5, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"It is the sense of the Senate that September 8, 1946, being the twenty-sixth anniversary of the dispatch by the Post Office Department of the first air-mail letter from coast to coast, the Postmaster General should issue a special air-mail postage stamp, of 8-cent denomination, of such design and for such period as he may determine, in commemoration of this anniversary."

Mr. McCARRAN also submitted several amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 5452, the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill, fiscal year 1947, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert: "$70,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "the making of loans to any individual farmer in excess of a total outstanding obligation of $5,000 for all such loans or the making of loans to any individual farmer in excess of $2,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment, insert the following: "and no loans, excepting those to eligible veterans, may be made for the acquisition or enlargement of farms which have a value, as acquired, enlarged, or improved, in excess of the average value of efficient family-size farm-managed units, as determined by the Secretary, in the county, parish, or locality where the farm is located"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$1,750,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 43, 52, 54, 55, 66, 67, and 68.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider the conference report. I think it will not take more than 2 minutes.

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 5605, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
June 11, 1946.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 43, 52, 54, 55, and 68 to the bill (H. R. 5605) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 66 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, insert:

"SEC. 5. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That such administrative or supervisory employees of the Department as may be designated for the purpose by the Secretary are hereby authorized to administer the oaths to persons making affidavits required by this section, and they shall charge no fee for so doing: Provided further, That any person who engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed to require an affidavit from any person employed for less than 60 days for sudden emergency work involving the loss of human life or destruction of property, and payment of salary or wages may be made to such persons from applicable appropriations for services rendered in such emergency without execution of the affidavit contemplated by this section."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67 to said bill an concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"SEC. 6. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to alter, or modify in any manner whatsoever, the aggregate maximum personnel ceilings established by section 14 (a) of the Federal Employees' Pay Act of 1946 (Public Law No. 390) nor to authorize the compensation of a greater aggregate number than the number provided for in the aforesaid act. In the case of any activity whose personnel may be increased in consequence of appropriations contained in this act, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget shall recommend and effectuate such reduction in personnel in such governmental agencies as he may deem advisable as will offset any increase in personnel for which provision is made in this act."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 66 and 67.

The motion was agreed to.

ANDRE DACHARRY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2192) for the relief of Andre Dacharry, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ELLENDER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. O'DANIEL, and Mr. WHERRY conferees on the part of the Senate.

JOSEPH E. BENNETT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2091) for the relief of Joseph E. Bennett, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ELLENDER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. HUFFMAN, and Mr. WILSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

CROW IRRIGATION PROJECT, MONTANA

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, when the calendar of the Senate was called on Friday last two Senate bills were passed, one, S. 1681, to provide for adjustments in connection with the Crow irrigation project, Crow Indian Reservation, Mont., introduced by the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and another bill, S. 2077, also introduced by the senior Senator from Montana, to amend section 1 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 751), entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands of the Crow Tribe, for the distribution of tribal funds, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of May 26, 1926 (44 Stat. 658).

Yesterday the House passed two companion bills, which are identical in all respects with the Senate bills passed last Friday. In order, therefore, to secure the action which both Houses have taken, I ask unanimous consent that the two House bills now be received and considered by the Senate, and passed. Let me refer first to H. R. 4983, which is now on the desk.

I ask that the vote by which Senate bill 1681 was passed be reconsidered, and that the Senate proceed to consider House bill 4983.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4983) to provide for adjustments in connection with the Crow Indian project, Crow Indian Reservation, Mont., was read twice by its title, considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 1681 is indefinitely postponed.

ALLOTMENT OF LANDS OF THE CROW TRIBE

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I now ask that the vote by which Senate bill 2077 was passed be reconsidered, and that the Senate proceed to consider House bill 6195.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6195), to amend section 1 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 751), entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands of the Crow Tribe, for the distribution of tribal funds, and for other purposes, as amended by the act of May 26, 1926 (44 Stat. 658), was read twice by its title, considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 2077 will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wish to express my deep appreciation to the Senator from Pennsylvania for yielding for this purpose, and I assure him that the delegation from Montana and the Crow Indians will likewise be grateful.

MILITARY ASSISTANCE TO THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. I find that the House and Senate passed identical bills to provide for military assistance to the Republic of the Philippine Islands. Both bills were passed on the 14th of June, 1946. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which Senate bill 2254 was passed be reconsidered, and that the Senate proceed to consider House bill 6572.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I understand the bills are identical or substantially identical.

Mr. HAYDEN. I notice that one bill provides that the Secretary shall deem something to be proper, and in the other bill the Secretary shall find something to be proper. The language would seem to be practically identical.

Mr. WHITE. I should think that would be near enough.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6572) to provide military assistance to the Republic of the Philippines in establishing and maintaining national security and to form a basis for participation by that Government in such defensive military operations as the future may require, was read twice by its title, considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 2254 will be indefinitely postponed.

ECONOMY ABROAD AND ECONOMY AT HOME

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] has frequently called upon the Federal Government to make drastic reductions in pay roll and other expenses.

Recently, as chairman of the committee dealing with such matters, he has recommended that Federal personnel be reduced to 1,650,000 by June 30 of next year.

This would mean a reduction of 1,243,670 from the 2,893,670 employees on the Federal pay roll as of January 31.

Economy is a popular issue for any man in public life.

There are few Members of the Congress and few of their constituents, who will not agree in principle that economy is a good thing.

Since it is not alleged that the supposedly personnel are not performing services to the public, the question is one of curtailing services now rendered.

When we ask what services are to be curtailed, we encounter a difficult problem.

Certainly many agencies set up exclusively for war purposes could and should be reduced or eliminated.

At the same time, the problems of reconversion have made new and different public services necessary, all requiring personnel. This means that while we fire with one hand we hire with the other, so that any large-scale reduction can be accomplished only at the expense of services which the Congress has voted to give.

We cannot arbitrarily decree that nearly half of our civil servants shall be fired during the next year unless we are prepared to abandon the work those employees do.

Year after year the Federal Government has taken on new and greater obligations which it cannot now abandon.

The social security program, to give one illustration, involves many thousands of employees who were not necessary before social security legislation was enacted.

Many other new agencies which are performing essential public services account for many more thousands.

If the Congress wishes the laws administered and enforced, it must provide the manpower to do the job.

Consequently, I suggest that pay rolls cannot be considered apart from agencies, or agencies from the laws which impose duties upon them.

The question cannot be settled by a simple arithmetical slash of personnel.

It must necessarily involve abandonment by the Federal Government of some fields in which it now operates.

It reduces itself to this—can we reduce the functions of the Federal Government?

In recent years the functions of all Government agencies, whether Federal, State or local, have increased to a marked degree.

Since the senior Senator from Virginia has been such an outstanding advocate of curtailed Federal pay rolls, I have been interested to see how his home State of Virginia dealt with this problem.

It is a matter of general knowledge that in his home State the senior Senator is a person of considerable influence.

I would not say that he is the political boss, since that might have connotations which I do not intend, but I believe I may say that he is on terms of friendship if not intimacy with the elected officials and the legislators of Virginia.

I might venture further to say that his word carries great weight, and that any policies of State government which conflicted with his opinions or principles would make little progress in Virginia.

With this in mind, I have been amazed to find that the fiscal practices of the Virginia State administration, sponsored and elected through the influence of the senior Senator, not only have little in common with, but in fact are diametrically opposed to, the fiscal practices which the senior Senator urges so eloquently and so forcefully upon the Federal Government.

I am very surprised to discover that although the senior Senator advocates wholesale pay-roll reductions in Washington, he apparently does not do so back home.

The distinction, I suspect, is that in Washington he is not burdened with the problem of administering the laws, whereas in Virginia his political associates face it every day.

They face the fact, just as the Federal Government does, that the public demands more services, and that personnel and taxes are necessary to provide those services. So, just as the Federal Government does, they put people on the pay roll to do the job.

One of the largest and most influential newspapers in Virginia, The Richmond Times-Dispatch, has called attention to the fact that State jobs have increased more rapidly than Federal jobs.

In June of 1924 Virginia had 4,650 employees, the Federal Government 550,000.

For June of 1930 the figure was 7,011 for Virginia, 608,900 for the Federal Government.

In June 1937, the total was 12,250 for Virginia and 841,700 for the Federal Government, while in June of 1942 it was 17,590 for Virginia and 2,248,600 for the Federal Government.

The Federal increase from 1924 to 1942 was 300 percent, and the Virginia increase a little less than 300 percent. But if we eliminate war agencies, the increase is 92½ percent for the Federal Government and 278 percent for Virginia.

The Times-Dispatch, in another article, pointed out that only 8 States in the country had larger State pay rolls, and that 10 other States, larger than Virginia, had substantially fewer State employees.

Virginia had 1 employee for every 164 persons in its population, whereas 18 larger States ranged from 197, for my own State of Pennsylvania, to 466 population per State employee.

It would appear from this that even Pennsylvania, with a Republican State administration breaking all records to pad its pay rolls with political workers, could not equal Virginia's record in this respect.

It is worth noting, in passing, that, although the senior Senator's Virginia associates apparently do not read his economy speeches, they are in accord with his crusade for low salaries.

The salaries paid by the State of Virginia are substantially below those paid by the Federal Government for comparable work.

Yet, strangely enough, this has not prevented the cost of government from rising in Virginia.

The economy that is urged upon the Congress by the senior Senator finds no echo in the State budget of Virginia.

On the contrary, the cost of government has risen virtually as fast in Virginia as it has in the Federal Government.

The State's costs rose from $33,108,973 in 1925 to $89,432,589 in 1940—an increase of 170.1 percent.

During the same period the cost of the Federal Government increased from $3,063,000,000 to $8,998,000,000, or 193.7 percent.

Comparisons of expenditures during the war years would be meaningless because of the Federal war expenditures.

However, it should be noted that Virginia spent $126,906,962 in 1945, or 1,487½ percent more than it spent in 1915.

In the past 10 years its biennial budgets have increased from $123,000,000 for the 2 years ending June 30, 1938, to $321,000,000 for the 2 years ending June 30, 1948.

This is a stupendous sum for a State with 3,000,000 population, when we consider that my own State, with 10,000,000 population and with a free-spending Republican administration in office, has a current biennial budget of less than $500,000,000.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I should like to be advised, if the Senator knows, whether Virginia has a bonded indebtedness.

Mr. GUFFEY. I do not know. I am taking this information from the Times-Dispatch.

Mr. OVERTON. The reason why I ask the question is that I understand that Virginia built her roads without floating a single bond; and, so far as I know, she may be now on a cash basis. I think that is a remarkable condition.

Mr. GUFFEY. I may say the same of Pennsylvania. I think the only debt we have in the State is the self-liquidating debt on the turnpike.

Mr. OVERTON. I congratulate the Senator.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, in calling attention to these figures it is not my intention to be critical of the senior Senator or of the State administration of Virginia.

It is rather my purpose to point out to the senior Senator and to those in accord with his proposal to cut Federal pay rolls in half that the same reply which the Virginia State administration gave to the Richmond Times-Dispatch, in answer to its criticism of State pay rolls, applies equally to the senior Senator.

The answer, in brief, was that pay rolls had increased because the State had taken over additional functions.

Federal pay rolls have increased in precisely the same way, because the Federal Government has taken over additional functions.

It would be pertinent to suggest to the senior Senator, whose word carries great weight in Virginia, that he attempt a practical demonstration in that State of the policy he has suggested for adoption on a Nation-wide scale.

If Virginia can cut its State pay roll in half, at the same time paying a decent wage to its public servants and not curtailing any essential public services, then I will be convinced that the senior Senator's plan to do the same in the Federal Government is sound and feasible.

Until he does, I suggest that the most damaging and irrefutable argument against his economy proposals is the object lesson which his own State administration has provided on the other side of the Potomac.

THE POWER LOBBY OF 1946

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President——

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MURRAY. In recent years able economists and distinguished leaders in business have been pointing to the rapid growth of monopoly in our country. They have been directing attention to the trend toward the growth of large combinations involving the control of prices and other basic factors which are the direct opposite of the principle of free markets.

During the depression years of the 1930's, Walter Lippmann, a distinguished writer on economic problems, in referring to this trend, said:

> The development of combinations in business which are able to dominate the markets in which they sell their goods and in which they buy their labor and their materials must lead irresistibly to some form of state collectivism. So much power will never for long be allowed to rest in private hands, and those who do not wish to take the road to the politically administered economy of socialism must be prepared to take the steps back toward the restoration of the market economy of private competitive enterprise.

Shortly before World War II, Mr. George H. Davis, then President of the United States Chamber of Commerce, frankly recognizing this growth of big business, said:

> There is not much doubt that the development of business organization has outrun the public understanding of it. It is like a locomotive that has become too heavy for the roadbed on which it runs.

I could quote a score of other men distinguished in business and industrial life, all expressing grave apprehension in regard to the future of our system of free enterprise.

Just a few days ago, Mr. Eric Johnston, the retiring president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, who represents the liberal viewpoint in that body, in addressing a convention of the United States Chamber of Commerce in Atlantic City, called for a series of reforms in our economy in order to make it operate in the interest and welfare of the whole people.

Mr. President, this growth of monopoly and control of business by large combinations is seen as creating serious problems for our country. It is a collectivist technique, and it makes necessary the development of huge government bureaus and agencies to control our economy in order to safeguard the public interest. In our country, business has become divided into two groups—one favoring the extension of big business and monopoly, and the other crying out for a return to the principle of free enterprise. This economic system, half monopoly and half free enterprise, cannot long continue to work; and unless we are willing to sacrifice political democracy in America, we must start now to stop this progress of collectivism and return business to the democratic competitive order.

Mr. President, Abraham Lincoln once said: "A house divided against itself cannot stand." While he did not believe that the house would fall, he thought it would eventually have to become all one thing or all the other. That simile illustrates the division and confusion existing in our economic system today. We cannot continue to operate our capitalistic economy under such a dual system, with one section operating on the basis of free competition and the other, a rapidly growing section, operating under a system of big business and monopoly.

Small independent concerns are being rapidly pushed to the wall, while monopolistic practices in all lines are continuing to expand. This trend toward economic feudalism will eventually destroy all opportunity and the right of men to engage in business.

WHO'S WHO IN THE POWER LOBBY OF 1946

Mr. President, the wilting touch of monopoly not only affects our economic life directly but it reaches out to slow up and throttle the will of the people in their efforts to better our Nation's economy through governmental procedures. This political arm of monopoly is the big-business lobbies. These lobbies seek to influence every action taken by this body. We have struggled with their efforts on major legislation—as with the OPA measure last week. The appropriation bill for the Interior Department that we are now considering has limped its weary way to this floor through a maze of obstacles placed in its path by some of the oldest and most powerful lobbies known to Washington. It was with this appropriation measure in mind that, on March 11, 1946, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Hon. SAM RAYBURN, took the floor to denounce the private-utility lobby now infesting Washington. He warned the House and the public against being deceived by their activities in opposition to public power and rural electrification. His speech followed one delivered on February 27, 1946, by Representative SAVAGE, of Washington, who, likewise, paid his respects to these sinister influences.

In addition to that, the dean of the House, the Honorable ADOLPH J. SABATH, of Illinois, on March 12, 1946, introduced a resolution to investigate lobbies; and on the following day he spoke on the subject, declaring that although all Members of the Congress, and especially the older Members, had seen "some vicious and unscrupulous lobbies here in Washington," he doubted that "any of us have seen a time when there were so many, nor when there was more evidence of common understanding and purpose among the legislative counsels and the national representatives." He concluded with the words, "The evil far from being abated is greater than ever before in my memory of my long service here."

Mr. President, this is a most significant statement. The distinguished dean of the House is not given to careless or sensational utterances for mere oratorical effect. He first came to Congress in 1906. He has served under 8 Presidents and for 20 consecutive terms—40 years—added to which he has been a member of the House Rules Committee for 17 years and chairman of that powerful committee since 1939. That position has put him in close touch with the fate of all important legislation before Congress. Hence, when a legislator of such unique and impressive experience deliberately asserts, in sum, that the lobby evil is worse today than at any time during the twentieth century, and that present-day lobbies seem to have more influence with Members of this Congress than any other Congress during this momentous period, his words constitute a challenge to every American who values the honesty and effectiveness of representative government.

PIERRE DU PONT DEFINES LOBBYING

I shall presently deal with the water and power lobby in particular. But, first, I desire to make clear the kind of lobbying I am discussing. It was once aptly defined by none other than Mr. Pierre S. du Pont, when president of the great du Pont corporation, as "underhanded promotion of individual interests."

The occasion of the pronouncement is of unique interest today when the extension of the TVA idea is a burning issue. It was in 1916. Congress was considering a government hydroelectric plant, presumably Muscle Shoals, for making by the Government of air nitrates for munitions of war. The du Pont corporation had a corps of men in Washington fighting this proposal and seeking a 50-year lease of Muscle Shoals under which the du Ponts would supply the Nation with nitric acid for munitions. The late Senator Underwood had, in effect, charged du Pont with lobbying. Du Pont, while admitting he had representatives in Washington, denied lobbying in a letter inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 3, 1916, in which he used the phrase "lobbying—that is, underhanded promotion of individual interests," as I quoted before.

I recoil from thinking of what would have happened to the Tennessee River and Valley and its people had Mr. Du Pont's "representatives" succeeded. Certainly there would have been no TVA, and certainly underhanded opposition to public development has been going on ever since that day.

The hoary age of the power lobby has not dimmed its ardor nor sapped its effectiveness. In the appropriation bill which we are now studying, that lobby has been and is playing a big hand.

The power sales responsibilities of the Interior Department are great. They require that we appropriate necessary funds to assure that publicly produced power shall be made widely available to the people, especially through public agencies and farmer cooperatives, and not turned over to a few utility monopolists. But the directive of the Congress to this agency that it so dispose of Federal electric power as to encourage its widespread use and prevent its monopolization can be nullified by failure to appropriate funds for transmission lines to carry the power from the dams.

The sharp cuts made in the House would have destroyed effectively the power programs of this Department. The House hearings on this bill show that lobbyists from power companies throughout the land appeared in opposition to the Government's power programs. Those hearings—and, of course, no record fully discloses the extent of off-the-record wire-pulling—have resulted in the emasculated bill that came to this body. Fortunately, the able Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and his committee were able to repair much of the damage. But there are still three important power items that have fallen by the wayside. I refer first to the Central Valley transmission lines which were vigorously opposed by the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., and are no longer in the bill. Second, to the lines for the Colorado-Big Thompson project which were opposed by the Colorado power companies, and have met a similar fate. And, finally, to the Southwestern power appropriation which has been fought by the combined utility companies of the Southwest and has been sunk without a trace.

Here we have an example in the present situation of the strength of the power lobby in Washington which operates against the interests of our people and continues year after year its deadly work in spite of all of our efforts to bring it to book.

LOBBY INVESTIGATIONS BY CONGRESS

It will be useful briefly to recount the efforts of Congress to expose and end this underhanded power lobbying since the turn of the century.

The first water power lobby to make its appearance in great force in Washington was during the close of the administration of President Theodore Roosevelt in 1908 and 1909. It opposed conservation measures sponsored by the President under the leadership of Hon. Gifford Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, a Republican, and United States Senator Francis G. Newlands, of Nevada, a Democrat. Historians of the period note that the most active lobbyists were those representing special interests from the South and West which had vast water power and other resources awaiting development. There was no demand then for Government operation, but under the banner of States' rights and freedom for private enterprise, that lobby resisted any attempt of the Federal Government even to regulate or to control water power utilization of that or other natural resources.

The first real lobby investigation by Congress was made in 1913. The need for conservation had rightly captured the imagination of the American people. The Democratic and Bull Moose platforms of 1912 contained strong planks for progressive measures of various kinds, including conservation of water resources. When the Sixty-third Congress was organized, the largest army of lobbyists then known to our history had turned up in Washington to prevent the redemption of those campaign pledges. But President Wilson, in a forthright public statement, exposed its existence. The then sensational "Mulhall investigation" followed, which disclosed that the most powerful brigade of this army of lobbyists was the so-called National Council for Industrial Development with 250 member associations Nation-wide. That organization, with its high-sounding name, was a mere front for the National Manufacturers Association which is still with us and still employing their same old practices and methods of evasion and deception.

In 1916 there was another flurry in Congress over a lobby intent upon blocking honest water power legislation and seeking to pass a bill concocted by private utilities. That struggle lasted until 1920, when the Federal Power Commission was created.

In 1928 when the Swing-Johnson Boulder Dam bill and the Norris Muscle Shoals bill were pending, Congress authorized the notable Federal Trade Commission investigation of the propaganda and financial methods of the electric and gas utilities under a resolution jointly sponsored by Senators Walsh of Montana and Norris of Nebraska. That probe revealed that both electric consumers and investors were being looted by the captains of finance dominating the holding companies, and that they were propagandizing everybody from United States Senators down to children in the grade schools in their efforts to control public opinion.

The House hearings on this appropriation bill contain statements and admissions by power company officials that these efforts to control public opinion through donation of money to schools and country clubs are still being made. The testimony of Mr. Davis, of the Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co., in the hearings is not about his activities back in the terrible twenties—he openly admits to the expenditure today of his utility company's funds for country club memberships, schools, and newspapers.

In 1929 and 1930, a most thorough investigation of lobbying was made by a Senate committee, under the chairmanship of Senator Caraway, of Arkansas. Other members of that committee were Senators Borah of Idaho, Walsh of Montana, Blaine of Wisconsin, and Robinson of Indiana. Shocking practices by the private-power interests were exposed in those hearings and the lobby organizations, a joint committee of electric, gas, and street railway national organizations, quickly dismantled their sumptuous offices in the Washington Building here and silently left the city.

I wonder what Senator Caraway, that stalwart fighter against monopoly and greed and arch foe of the lobbies, would think if he could witness the lobby that today emanates from his own great State of Arkansas against a public-power program that can so greatly benefit the people of that region and bring about the development of its great natural resources. Did not the nylon lobby originate with the power companies of Arkansas?

Five years later in 1935, another Senate lobby investigation committee, under the chairmanship of Senator Hugo Black of Alabama, was directed to look into the million dollar lobby opposing the passage of the utility-holding company bill. That bill, which was designed to break the strangle hold of that utility monopoly on the American people, was a direct result of the findings of the Federal Trade Commission investigation. Mr. President, it is safe to say that Senator Black's investigation saved that bill from certain defeat. Mr. Howard C. Hopson, president of the now defunct Associated Gas & Electric Co., was one of the leaders of that lobby. He was later convicted and sent to the Federal penitentiary for maladministration of the funds of his trusting investors.

EIGHTY-TWO BILLS HAVE BEEN INTRODUCED

Mr. President, an examination of the record discloses that during the 40 years here under discussion, as a result of these inquiries, no less than 82 bills have been introduced in Congress to regulate this vicious practice and mitigate its evils. I shall not go into the details of the remedies proposed because not one of these bills has been enacted into law, with the result that this treacherous lobby system of the power interests is worse than ever in all its evil manifestations.

Through the radio, the press, and by personal observation, the people of the entire Nation are now becoming acutely aware of this intolerable situation which threatens the very foundation of democracy. If a public opinion poll were taken today, it would be certain to reveal the fact that the power lobby is exercising a controlling influence in all legislation affecting power problems.

Mr. President, I wish now to briefly discuss the origin and character of the allied lobbies opposing the extension of TVA principles to the development of the other river valleys of the Nation.

AFTER BOTH WORLD WARS

There is a remarkable parallel between the aims and methods of the electric utilities at the close of the two world wars. In 1919, their trade organization, the defunct National Electric Light Association, launched a Nation-wide propaganda campaign to block further municipal ownership, prevent multipurpose dams and Government development and sale of power on the Colorado, Tennessee, Columbia, or other rivers. The Federal Trade Commission probe officially reported it to be probably the greatest peacetime campaign ever conducted by private interests in this country.

For nine long years, this propaganda campaign conducted in connection with active lobbying in Washington blocked any progress. Then came exposure that cleared the way for the Boulder Dam Act, the TVA Act, Bonneville, Coulee, Santee-Cooper, Fort Peck, Lower Colorado in Texas, Grand River in Oklahoma, and others, all multipurpose projects for water and land conservation, and distribution to the people of the low-cost power produced on their own rivers from their own dams built with their own money.

That great program of reclamation and public-power development has made a tremendous contribution to the expansion of the national economy. It has meant new homes for millions of our people in the less populated sections of the country. It has meant a huge development of national resources and an unprecedented expansion of industry and business in the areas affected. It has given new life and vigor to democracy and has educated the people as to the benefits of free enterprise over monopolies.

But now again at the close of World War II, these same monopoly interests in the same fashion as in 1920 have inaugurated a like powerful propaganda lobby effort to block any further extension of the TVA idea of the development and public marketing of public power.

It is a well-planned and efficiently executed campaign highly financed and unique only in that the power interests have summoned to their aid more outside organizations than ever before. I can here only roughly sketch the main maneuvers of this campaign as it has recently developed.

THE CAMPAIGN OPENS

To begin with, it was well known in the spring of 1944 that President Roosevelt, if nominated and reelected, would vigorously pursue the TVA policy as soon as the war ended. In May of that year, the United States Chamber of Commerce, which the late Senator Norris used to call the big brother of the Power Trust, submitted to its member chambers referendum No. 81, declaring against more TVA's, advocating further development by the Army engineers and existing bureaus, and the sale of electric power to private companies for retail by them. Regional authorities were said to be super government, inimical to private free enterprise, destructive of State rights, and socialistic. It is germane to observe that on the natural resources committee of the chamber which prepared this policy document for the businessmen of America, we find the names of Kinsey M. Robinson, of Spokane, president of the Washington Water Power Co.; ex-Governor Ralph L. Carr, of Denver, Colo., utility attorney; and L. Ward Bannister, of Denver, utility attorney and corporation spokesman.

This declaration was accompanied with arguments for the policy but none against. It was approved and of course got a good press. Hence, the Nation was advised that organized business was against more TVA's, and it was charged that the Roosevelt administration had been without regard for States' rights and opportunity for private enterprise. The broadside was well timed.

The Presidential campaign was beginning. Soon following this in September in the middle of the campaign under the leadership of the National Reclamation Association there was held in Chicago a water conservation conference with representatives from 28 States. It also denounced the regional authority principle and created a continuing committee to represent it in Washington.

These maneuvers of the chamber and the self-styled reclamation leaders were undoubtedly intended to influence the election and perhaps the attitude of the President, but they failed. During the campaign he announced his support of an MVA bill, which I had introduced; and following the election, while he signed the Flood Control Act on December 22, 1944, he warned that construction in the Missouri Basin there authorized would not jeopardize the creation of an MVA.

In February, the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. MITCHELL] introduced an authority bill for the Columbia River Basin. Hearings on these measures were in prospect, and another wing of the opposition organized a temporary water lobby and went into action.

In the Flood Control Act of 1944, the combined power lobby took a serious setback. That measure provided that all power produced at flood control and navigation dams should be sold on the same public power basis as the Congress provided for TVA, Bonneville, and Fort Peck. The strenuous efforts of the lobby to defeat that sound measure failed. But the appropriations necessary to make effective the policy we declared in the Flood Control Act are now being hamstrung by the same forces. They must be defeated here today again by restoring the President's power Budget items.

THE WATER LOBBY

Mr. Fred D. Benke, an attorney of Memphis, Tenn., is the enterprising secretary-treasurer of both the Rivers and Harbors Congress and the Mississippi Valley Flood Control Association. He was instrumental in calling together the heads of 20—later increased to 31—organizations from Maine to California, who, for various reasons, were opposed to the TVA method of administration, and other like independent regional authorities. These gentlemen formed a coordinating committee, and sent to all Senators in Congress on April 13, 1945—3 days before hearings began on my bill (S. 555) to establish a Missouri Valley Authority—a joint statement signed by the officers of 20 organizations declaring all regional authorities to be dictatorships, superstates, inimical to free enterprise, and which "threatened interference with social and cultural activities of the people." It asserted that the Flood Control Act of December 1944, constituted a new water bill of rights, and demanded that the Army engineers, Reclamation Bureau, and others, be entrusted with further river valley development. As to electric power, it was to be disposed of on sound business principles, whatever that may mean.

These gentlemen, as I have said, had appointed from among their number a coordinating committee of five to represent the group before Congress. It is highly entertaining to note that when last July the Washington Daily News printed a brilliant series of six articles by Peter Edson with the caption "Washington Water Lobby," and indicating motives not disclosed in their propaganda, the coordinating committee issued an indignant denial that the then organization of 31 was a lobby. "The objective," they said, "is the enlightenment of all the people as to the true story of TVA."

I refrain from comment on the mass of misinformation and false charges about TVA being presented to committees of the Congress and vended in pamphlets by this committee, except to say that if the gentlemen are not lobbying, then a new distinction must be drawn between ordinary lobbyists and alleged crusaders of enlightenment on the beneficent effects of power monopoly.

The chairman of this coordinating committee was the late Roy Miller, of Texas, dean among lobbyists, who, for a generation, represented waterway interests in Washington, as well as the Texas Gulf Sulphur Co., whose charm and hospitality led him to acquire a wide acquaintance among Representatives and Senators.

On this committee is the name of our old friend, F. O. Hagie, who for years represented in Washington the National Reclamation Association, and who recently left the job of executive secretary of that association to go to work for the Seattle Chamber of Commerce. He works for large appropriations for reclamation and irrigation, but strangely enough is unalterably opposed to public power. This reclamation association is today largely composed of, and dominated by, utility, railroad, mining, banking, contracting and other large interests and their legion of lawyers, instead of working farmers. As ex-Secretary Ickes has pointed out, "Utility job holders have joined the Reclamation Association in droves and they have become an influence so great that this once great progressive body has degenerated to such a degree that it is now denouncing as 'communistic' cheap public power and the 160-acre land limitation law—two of its three original goals." The National Reclamation Association also has affiliated with it State reclamation associations of the same sort of personnel in Montana, Idaho, Washington, and other Western States collaborating with its Washington campaign against more authorities. It is significant that some of them have been just recently organized.

Next in importance on this committee is the name of William H. Webb, for years quartered in Washington by the Rivers and Harbors Congress which is interested in appropriations for harbor and river improvements, and is likewise opposed to public power. Mr. Webb talks of authorities as "monopolistic Federal agencies," and demands development by the States or existing agencies.

Next comes the veteran Washington agent of the Mississippi Valley Association, Lachlan MacLeay, strong for navigation and flood-control works to be done by Army engineers, but who eloquently denounces multipurpose dams of the TVA kind.

Mr. MacLeay declares that the principle of TVA's and their alleged destruction of free enterprise is "a most outrageous undercover attempt to impose socialism upon the United States." Is it possible that the American people can be deceived by such obvious hypocrisy?

It is unfortunate that the selfish motives at the roots of these organizations have not been established as clearly as was that of the Associated General Contractors. This organization, though not listed among the 31, is also opposed to MVA's and CVA's. Its general manager, H. E. Foreman, with offices in the Munsey Building in Washington, told Senate committees that "the valley authority idea is contrary to the American way of life, and destructive to our American system of free enterprise." Questioned as to whether the attitude sprung from selfish interest, Mr. Foreman reluctantly admitted that the TVA did its own construction and "let no work out on contract." Furthermore, that "the MVA bill has no provision requiring its work to be done by private contracts."

THE ELECTRIC UTILITY LOBBIES

So much, Mr. President, for the land and water lobbies. The next organized attack in point of time against the TVA idea was made by the electric utilities themselves. On July 15, 1945, the newly created National Association of Electric Utilities announced the opening of a Washington office, and 4 days later, Mr. C. Hamilton Moses, president of the Arkansas Power Co., spokesman for a group of 167 utilities, in a newspaper statement, fired the opening blast of a campaign against new valley authorities of the TVA type, claiming, as do others, that they were dictatorships.

Mr. Moses has spent much time here in Washington opposing the Southwestern Power Administration program. Fortunately, the light and power users of Arkansas do not depend upon work of this official for their electricity—or that area would have been in the dark most of this year.

A new National Association of Electric Utilities, with its offices on Fifteenth Street in Washington, is the successor of the 1928 Joint Committee of National Utility Association, which folded up when the light was turned on by the Trade Commission investigation. Later, of lesser potency, came the Council of Utility Executives, managed by the late Philip Gadsden of the United Water Improvement Co. of Philadelphia, another wheel horse in the United States Chamber of Commerce.

In direct command of the Washington office in this latest electric lobby is Purcell L. Smith, of Chicago, former president of the Midwest Corp., an Insull holding concern, who is said to be receiving a salary of $65,000 a year to tutor Congress in favor of monopoly.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I wonder if the Senator would be willing to point out that these expensive and extravagant propaganda campaigns are paid for by the people themselves, and not by those who profit by reason of being in control of these various power companies and other interests. There is no question that every dollar of the millions which must now be spent and which are being spent to create a feeling more favorable to the private utilities among the people is being added to the electric-light bills of the Nation.

Mr. MURRAY. The Senator is exactly right. I thank him for his contribution.

Mr. President, powerful in the formation of the National Utility Association and direction of its work is Kinsey M. Robinson, before noted as a factor in shaping the power policies of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

Ex-Gov. Ralph L. Carr, of Denver, took office space with Messrs. Purcell, Smith, and Robinson soon after the new lobby got started. Governor Carr has a right there since he is a utility attorney. He is also the western leader of the States' Rights crusade and promoter of the meetings of Governors to protect the power monopoly under the guise of protecting irrigation rights as against authority bills, although all such rights are fully protected in said bills.

Differ as the lobbyists may among themselves on their ordinary objectives, there are several strident notes which they all sound in common accord, namely, "No more TVA's," "Change the Holding Company Act," "Cut power-line appropriations."

In conclusion, Mr. President, let me point out that when the issue of danger to honest Government from private interest lobbies is raised, the rejoinder always comes that the so-called radical forces also maintain powerful lobbies in Washington and out, and hence, private utilities and other interests are forced to fight back in self-defense.

This explanation, however, places the cart before the horse. The truth is that, as a rule, the people are forced to organize lobbies, if you please, to defend their interests against encroachments of entrenched special privilege. But the distinction goes further and turns upon the character of the lobbying and the propaganda accompanying it.

No Member of Congress, least of all myself, will deny to the utilities, the manufacturers, irrigation interests, or any other interest, the right to present their case to Congress and the public. The right of petition involved has cost oceans of blood in past centuries, and was a chief cause of the creation of republics. But such presentation should be honest, candid, and a truthful statement of facts and principles relating to any question.

There is an old adage which we all remember, to the effect that where there is so much smoke there must be fire. This recital of who's who and what's what in the power lobby of 1946 is intended as a first attempt to sweep aside some of the cloud of smoke which conceals that fire. At a later date I and other Members of the Senate will have more to say about the power lobby at work in Washington.

I am firmly of the opinion, from my own personal experience with the power lobby, that it has sinned most grievously against Congress and the general public. The array of falsehoods told the people and whispered in the ears of Members of Congress and other public officials against the growth of authorities, can only be compared to the canards circulated when TVA was being formed.

This matter is so serious that I agree with the distinguished dean of the House, Representative SABATH, that the Congress should investigate lobbying 1946 style fully. We need the detailed facts that such an investigation would disclose.

But the immediate job at hand is to assure ourselves that the objectives of the power lobby are not accomplished through emasculating this important appropriation measure. The Central Valley transmission lines, essential to making Shasta power available to the Government's own pumps in the Delta area and to public agencies throughout northern California, must be built and built quickly.

In the Southwest, the Government dams already constructed and those under construction should be tied together with transmission lines so that this Federal power will not be bottled up but will be widely available to public bodies, farmers' cooperatives, and private industry and play its part in the building of that great region.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator has made reference to an investigation which was made by the Federal Trade Commission about 15 years ago of the power lobby and the methods employed by them. In that investigation it was found that one of the methods of propagandizing was for the power interests to write editorials which they would send to newspapers all over the country, in which it is presumed they had some interest, if nothing more than an advertising interest, and that all over the United States editorials exactly alike, or almost exactly alike, would appear, lauding the utility interests and decrying public power and other movements they felt were opposed to their interests. Lest anyone should think that that method has been done away with, I desire to call attention to more recent developments. As the Senator knows, I have been interested in getting the approval of Congress for the St. Lawrence seaway development, which is the greatest source of undeveloped power in North America today. This project has had the consistent opposition of the utility companies and the financial interests which control them. In early March hearings were held before a subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee. The testimony at those hearings was overwhelmingly in favor of the development of the St. Lawrence power and seaway project. The subcommittee reported favorably by a 3 to 1 vote and the full committee has since reported the bill favorably to the Senate.

On March 25 there appeared in the Reporter News of Abilene, Tex., an editorial headed "What about the big ships?" and the first two paragraphs read in this vein:

> A charge that more than 91 percent of the Amercan merchant marine and 81 percent of the world's tonnage would be barred from the long-proposed St. Lawrence seaway, connecting the Atlantic and the Great Lakes, has been made by the American Merchant Marine Institute, a trade association which includes a majority of the Amercan merchant fleet's owners and operators.
> In a letter to Senator CARL HATCH, the institute claims that only 404 of the 5,025 ships built for our merchant fleet since 1939 could pass through the 27-foot channel from Montreal to Lake Ontario when fully loaded. Of those 404, 130 are coastal vessels.

Then the editorial goes on to oppose the development. It gives an inference directly contrary to the facts, because at the hearings before the Foreign Relations Committee the acting chairman of the Maritime Commission testified that more than 30,000,000 tons of American shipping could use the St. Lawrence seaway if it were developed. But this editorial was printed in the Abilene (Tex.) Reporter News of March 25, 1946.

On March 26, 1946, there appeared in the News of Harrisburg, Pa., an editorial word for word the same, and headed "What about the big ships?"

Then the Times of Roanoke, Va., on March 25, 1946, printed an editorial against the St. Lawrence seaway headed, "What about the big ships?"

A week later, on April 2, there appeared in the Arizona Republic, of Phoenix, Ariz., an editorial headed "Not designed for big ships." This was printed a week later, and during that week's time the editor had apparently rewritten the editorial to some extent.

I do not know how many more newspapers in the United States printed the same boiler-plate editorials which were undoubtedly sent out by the utility interests in opposition to the St. Lawrence development project. These four happened to have been sent to me.

It may be recalled that on December 8, 1944, as I remember the date, the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] very ably exposed some 20 or 30 or more newspapers in the United States which made a practice of printing in their editorial columns whatever the utility interests sent them to print. To show that they have not abandoned this practice, I ask unanimous consent that these four editorials may be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of the address of the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUFFMAN in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont? The Chair hears none, and the editorials may be printed in the RECORD, as requested.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. MURRAY. The Senator has pointed to the subtle methods and practices which these lobbyists follow. If an investigation were made, I think it would be found that editorials of the same style are published in a great many newspapers all over the country.

Mr. AIKEN. I may further add that an investigation today would disclose that every one of the subtle methods used by the utility interests in the late twenties, and which were exposed by the Federal Trade Commission, are being employed today by the same interests in their effort to prevent the development of our natural resources for the benefit of the people of the United States.

EXHIBIT A

[From the Harrisburg (Pa.) News of March 26, 1946]

WHAT ABOUT THE BIG SHIPS?

A charge that more than 91 percent of the American merchant marine and 81 percent of the world's tonnage would be barred from the long-proposed St. Lawrence seaway, connecting the Atlantic and the Great Lakes, has been made by the American Merchant Marine Institute, a trade association which includes a majority of the American merchant fleet's owners and operators.

In a letter to Senator CARL HATCH, the institute claims that only 404 of the 5,025 ships built for our merchant fleet since 1939 could pass through the 27-foot channel from Montreal to Lake Ontario when fully loaded. Of those 404, 130 are coastal vessels.

At the same time, the institute's letter continues, foreign shipping would carry the bulk of the trade through the waterway, since 72 percent of the world's merchant ships of 25-foot draft or less are foreign-owned. The letter makes the point that a draft deeper than 25 feet would be unsafe, because a vessel draws 6 inches more in fresh water than in the denser salt water, because a ship rides lower in motion at rest, and because there must be some allowance for bottom clearance.

A natural question is: Why not build smaller shallow-draft ships to negotiate the seaway? The institute's answer is that the construction cost of a smaller vessel is disproportionately high per ton. A small ship requires almost as large a crew as a big one, while carrying about one-third the cargo at one-third the revenue.

With America's high construction and maintenance costs, and high wages and living standards aboard its merchant vessels, our lines must carry bigger cargoes in bigger ships in order to compete with foreign operators.

Naturally, it is to be expected that these charges will be investigated thoroughly and considered carefully. The St. Lawrence seaway, which proposes to take oceangoing ships into the industrial heart of this country, promises great opportunity and great expense. It would be bitter irony if this gigantic project, partly sponsored and financed by this country, should be closed to most of our merchant fleet, which now includes 60 percent of the world's tonnage.

What it would cost to deepen the seaway's channel to accommodate our larger ships, and what mechanical obstacles would be encountered in so doing, should be explained to Congress as fully as possible.

It would then be up to Congress to match those difficulties and expenses against the possible difficulties and expenses involved in excluding the greater part of our fleet from a new field of opportunity, and diverting the greater part of the revenue from that field away from our shores.

NOT DESIGNED FOR BIG SHIPS

The American Merchant Marine Institute, a trade association made up of a majority of American merchant ship owners and operators, contends about 91 percent of the American merchant marine and around 81 percent of the world's merchant shipping will be barred from the long-proposed St. Lawrence seaway, should it be authorized and built according to present specifications. The institute wants a deeper channel so the big ships can use the seaway which proposes to take ocean-going vessels into the industrial heart of the United States.

The institute asserts only 404 of the 5,025 ships built for the United States merchant fleet since 1939 could navigate the proposed 27-foot channel from Montreal to Lake Ontario when fully loaded. Of the 404 ships, it explains, 130 are coastal vessels. The institute further explains that 72 percent of the world's merchant ships of 25-foot draft or less are foreign-owned. Ships with more than 25-foot draft, it explains, could not pass through the waterway since a vessel draws 6 inches more in fresh water than in the denser salt water. Furthermore, it points out, a ship in motion rides lower than one at rest. Twenty-seven feet, it claims, isn't sufficient clearage for ships over 25-foot draft.

With respect to building ships of shallower draft for the proposed seaway, the institute explains the construction cost of the smaller vessels is disproportionately high per ton. A small ship, it points out, requires almost as large a crew as the bigger ones although carrying one-third of the cargo at one-third of the revenue.

Before the waterway is built, these matters should be investigated. It would be ironical, indeed, if the seaway's construction is partially financed by this country and then turns out to be closed to the greater part of our own merchant fleet. The irony wouldn't be lessened by the fact that we now have about 60 percent of the world's merchant tonnage. If the seaway is built, it should be deep enough to accommodate our ships, otherwise there would be no point in sponsoring it or aiding in the financial cost of construction.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution calling for an investigation along the lines which I have discussed.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 287), submitted by Mr. Murray, was received and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Whereas the full development and careful conservation of the natural resources of the United States is essential to the present and future defense of the Nation; and

Whereas the availability from these resources of a great volume of electric energy is essential to the present and future defense of the Nation; and

Whereas it was necessary to increase the volume of available electric power from 51,518,000 kilowatts to 62,835,000 kilowatts between 1940 and 1944 in order that the national defense might be strengthened and in order that the war might be prosecuted, and even this volume was barely adequate to the emergency; and

Whereas in any future contingency it will be more necessary than at any time in the past, by reason of the great significance of electricity in the production of atomic energy, in the conduct of projectile warfare and of modern war in all its phases, that a very great volume of such electrical energy be immediately available; and

Whereas installations now existing in the United States may well prove inadequate in the event of future emergency for the production of sufficient electric power; and

Whereas construction of future public power projects and continued successful operation of present installations is reported in the press to be seriously threatened by the activities of a strongly financed and unscrupulous lobby maintained by the private power interests of the country: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to make a full and complete study and investigation of all lobbying activities designed to prevent or delay the enactment of public power legislation, and to report to the Senate not later than January 1, 1947, the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations concerning any necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-ninth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE, SHAWNEETOWN, ILL.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, on Friday last, during the call of the calendar for bills to which there was no objection, the bill (S. 1809) to revive and reenact and amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the county of Gallatin, State of Illinois, its successors, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near the city of Shawneetown, Gallatin County, Ill., to a point opposite thereto in the county of Union, State of Kentucky," approved July 18, 1939, was passed. It develops that there is now pending before the Committee on Commerce a substantially similar bill, House bill 5444.

In order to have the same bill passed by both Houses, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from further consideration of House bill 5444, and that the House bill be considered at this time and passed; also that the vote on the passage of Senate bill 1809, which is now in the custody of the Senate, be reconsidered, and that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

I have taken this question up with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], acting chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and he sees no objection to the request.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senate Committee on Commerce considered an identical bill, Senate bill 1809, and approved it, and the Senate has passed the Senate bill.

Mr. LUCAS. The committee passed on an identical bill, with one exception. In the House bill the Senate inserted section 3, which provides as follows:

No toll or other charge shall be levied against any employee, civil or military, or any vehicle or conveyance of the United States Government for the use of such bridge in the performance of official duties.

The Senator from Illinois has no objection to that provision, and I presume that no other Senator would object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, the minority leader [Mr. WHITE] is not at the moment present in the Chamber, and I do not see any minority members of the Commerce Committee present. I wish to make sure exactly what the Senator is proposing.

Mr. LUCAS. What I am proposing is simply this: Sometime ago I introduced Senate bill 1809, authorizing the county of Gallatin, State of Illinois, and its successors, to construct a bridge over the Ohio River near Shawneetown, Ill. At the same time a similar bill was introduced in the House of Representatives by the Repreesntative from the twenty-fourth district, in which the bridge is located. The House passed that bill and sent it to the Senate with the provision which I have previously discussed, prohibiting the charging of tolls to Government employees.

The House bill came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Commerce, but for some reason or other the Committee on Commerce has no record of receiving that bill, although we know it is here. In the meantime the bill which the Senator from Illinois introduced in the Senate was favorably reported by the Committee on Commerce. I caught the situation on last Friday, and after we passed the Senate bill I had the Senate hold it up until I could make this motion. In reality, all I am doing in presenting this question to the Senate today is seeking to have the Committee on Commerce discharged from further consideration of the House bill, so as to have the House bill passed as it came from the House. Is that a clear explanation?

Mr. BRIDGES. It is perfectly clear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and the Committee on Commerce is discharged from the further consideration of House bill 5444.

Is there objection to the present consideration of House bill 5444?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 5444) to revive and reenact and amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the county of Gallatin, State of Illinois, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near the city of Shawneetown, Gallatin County, Ill., to a point opposite thereto in the county of Union, State of Kentucky," approved July 18, 1939, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which Senate bill 1809 was passed is reconsidered; and the bill is indefinitely postponed.

THE UTILITY PROPAGANDA MILLS

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, for some time now, from a variety of sources, there has been coming to my desk in letters, clippings, pamphlets, a series of strangely similar and equally irresponsible attacks on TVA. At first I ignored them. Then I decided that the frequency and similarity both deserved a little investigation. I have made such an investigation, and I am convinced the subject deserves further exploration.

It seems clear to me that today thousands if not millions of dollars are being poured into a widespread, vicious, and unprincipled lobbying and propaganda campaign. It centers here in Washington, but it extends into practically every hamlet in the land. So sordid and so bold has this campaign become that it begins to assail the nostrils like the malodorous affairs exposed by the Federal Trade Commission in the lush money days of the 1920's, when the financial freebooters of the Power Trust, led by the Insulls of Chicago, were riding high—and riding inevitably to a fall.

The objectives of the current campaign are clear. The stakes are high. The question is simply this: Shall the wealth of our many rivers and their watersheds be developed in the public interest for the benefit of the people or shall they be turned over to those who would exploit them for their own profit? This lobbying and propaganda campaign is aimed at stopping, at all costs, the development of our watercourses except as the power which results is handed over to special interests to exploit as they please.

Specifically, these lobbyists and propagandists are out to halt, by any means that come to hand, any integrated regional developments like that which has proved so successful in the Tennessee Valley. What has roused them to a desperate, last ditch stand is the fact that in the Columbia Basin, in the Missouri Valley, in the Arkansas, people are rising to ask: If a TVA can bring so many benefits to the Tennessee Valley, why not a CVA or an MVA or an AVA in our own river valley?

I have no doubt of the answer to that question, once the facts are known. Nor is there any doubt in the minds of those with special axes to grind. Once the truth becomes known, their cause is lost. That, more than anything else, explains the reckless frenzy with which the power interests are throwing their money around in attempts to befog the issues. They see the signs.

In the Missouri Valley, in the Columbia Basin, and in other river valleys throughout the country people are coming to see the possibilities of a proper, balanced development of their natural resources. They are becoming restless and dissatisfied with the old methods of development which have cost so much and accomplished relatively so little. They are tired of turning over their natural resources to exploitive, selfish interests, in return for a fond hope or a nebulous promise that some of the benefits of private exploitation would somehow dribble down to them. They are ready to try something new.

It is this new resolve on the part of the people that the propagandists are out to stop, by fair means or foul. It is this which has roused the Power Trust and its satellites to a new campaign of distorters, clippings, pamphlets, a series of which is reminiscent of the days of the late and unlamented National Electric Light Association—NELA.

This assault by special interests is well organized and well heeled with money. Those behind it, those who represent the privileged few as against the interest of the many, are sparing no expense and overlooking no bets in their efforts to halt progress and turn back the clock. Today we have high-priced utility executives leaving their posts to come to Washington to direct the campaign, instead of staying home and figuring ways to give consumers cheaper power. New organizations of doubtful antecedents and mysterious financing have sprung up all over the lot. Though claiming to represent diverse interests, we find them piping the same false tune in remarkable harmony. Mimeograph machines and printing presses have gone on a mass-production basis to pour forth a torrent of misinformation about every effort to improve and develop our resources for the public welfare.

To those of us who know the story of Power-Trust propaganda in the years before 1933, all this has a familiar ring. What is going on today recalls the frantic efforts of special interests over a period of 15 years to capture control of the Government-built power plant at Muscle Shoals and to hamstring the proposals for development of rivers of the far West and other areas.

But there is one essential difference between those years and the present. In 1933, the advocates of river developments and public power had little but faith and hope to sustain them in their efforts for the public welfare. Examples of public-power developments were relatively few and scattered. It was easy to smother facts about their operations beneath the flood of propaganda issued by the high priests of the NELA and kindred organizations, propaganda which was even insinuated by devious methods into the schools and textbooks.

Today, that is changed. The world has moved forward in the past decade and a half, although the Power Trust propagandists are apparently not yet aware of it.

While great developments in the Tennessee Valley and in the Pacific Northwest have been constructed and have served the people magnificently, the propagandists have clung to all their ancient myths about public operation. They go on saying that it cannot be done; or that if it can be done, it will not work; or that if it does work, then success should be disregarded, because the whole idea is clearly the work of un-American totalitarians led by George W. Norris and Franklin D. Roosevelt. In terms of their thinking, their methods, and their regard for the public weal, these special interests and their lobbyists and propagandists have stood still. Of them we can say, as Talleyrand said of the Bourbons, "They have learned nothing and forgotten nothing."

People cannot be fooled for long in these days by such arrant nonsense. When they read in a slick and expensive brochure that integrated development of a river is impossible, or that the same system of dams cannot provide both flood control and power, or that regional authorities are superstates robbing the people of their liberties, they have only to ask the people of the Tennessee Valley to learn that such propaganda is false.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I assume that the Senator from Alabama is aware of the fact that the Mississippi Valley Authority bill, which is the only one of the authority bills which has yet received any consideration, was considered by the Senate Committee on Commerce, and that committee unanimously reported it unfavorably. It was then considered by the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, and from that committee it received a practically unfavorable report. I do not know whether the able Senator has read those bills. If he has, I think he will not hesitate to agree that the 21 members of the Commerce Committee and, I think, the 21 members of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, representing almost half of the United States Senate, are correct in their belief that those bills represent a proposal to vest in the Authority an autocratic power which is greater and more far-reaching than any power which the Constitution of the United States vests in the National Legislature. Of course those bills have not been approved.

I hope the able Senator is not espousing the cause of authority legislation.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I say to the Senator that I am not speaking about those bills, and of course I am in no way, either by thought or action, criticizing the Senator's committee. However, I am speaking about the advantage of regional developments, as demonstrated in the Tennessee Valley; and before I conclude my remarks I shall talk a great deal about the terrific campaign which the propagandists and lobbyists of the Power Trust are carrying on today against public power developments.

Mr OVERTON. The Senator is talking about regional developments. Let me carry it home——

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I do not mind yielding to the Senator, but I have a speech which I should like to make. I do not wish to be discourteous, and I wish to yield to the Senator whatever time he wishes. But I should much prefer to have the Senator wait until I conclude my remarks, and then I shall be delighted to yield to him.

Mr. OVERTON. Very well.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, today, I intend to trace some of the devious lines of this propaganda campaign. I am going to show that it can be traced back, in its origins, its sponsors and its methods, to the golden era of exploitation and high finance before the Insull debacle. I am going to show that, on the basis of the evidence, the Power Trust's propaganda machine did not go out of existence after the exposures of the Federal Trade Commission, nor was it reformed. The evidence is that it simply went underground. Now it is emerging in its old character.

I am going to talk about this campaign in terms of its relationship to TVA, the Tennessee Valley Authority, and for two reasons: First, because I come from the Tennessee Valley area and I know the works of the TVA intimately and at first hand. I have fought for it since the earliest days. I introduced in the House of Representatives the bill which became the TVA Act. In the House I led the fight in 1935 to secure needed amendments to the original act, and on many occasions during the past 13 years I have risen to defend it against attacks which would have hamstrung or destroyed it. I know what the TVA has meant to the Tennessee Valley and to my own State of Alabama.

The second reason why I am going to limit my analysis of the utility propaganda to its relationship to the facts about TVA is because TVA is today the target of most of this propaganda campaign. I can understand that. The Power Trust and its propaganda satellites know full well that if they are to keep their strangle hold on the resources of the people of this country, they must discredit TVA. They must muddy the waters so the truth will be obscured.

What is it that these men are seeking to hide?

TVA has been in existence 13 years. In that brief space of time it has brought a whole river under control for the benefit of man. This is something which cannot be said of any other major river and its tributaries in the world, in spite of the vast sums which have been spent on other streams. Some have been developed for navigation, a few for flood control, many for power. Only the Tennessee, developed for all three, is really controlled. TVA has provided a 650-mile modern navigation channel—something the people of the Valley had dreamed of for a century. It has provided great reservoirs for flood control, not only making the Tennessee Valley as a whole safe from disastrous floods, but providing benefits worth, at a conservative estimate, $100,000,000 to $200,000,000 to the alluvial valleys of the Lower Mississippi. As recently as last January this still incomplete TVA system saved the city of Chattanooga, Tenn., from $10,000,000 damage in what, if the river had not been controlled, would have been the fourth highest flood in its history.

TVA's dams and steam plants produce nearly 12,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity a year, the greatest power system in the country today. We have the word of the Army that it was TVA's ability to supply adequate power at short notice that dictated the location of the great atomic-bomb plant at Oak Ridge, Tenn.—Col. K. D. Nichols, Oak Ridge, Tenn. That fact alone, aiding as it did in shortening the war with Japan, would justify the entire cost of the TVA. So would the fact that in the early days of the war TVA's ability to supply power was the key to providing aluminum production when the Nation was just beginning to build its mighty air forces. We could add that it was because of TVA's research in the use of electric furnaces for phosphate production, that TVA and other producers had the capacity to produce large tonnages of elemental phosphorus for munitions, in contrast to World War I, when relatively small amounts were available.

The power which helped to win the war is now being used in peacetime production. We need not rely on TVA's war record to justify its cost. Its service to the people in peace is sufficient answer to its critics. These critics would hide the fact that power is being supplied to consumers at savings of more than $11,000,000 a year as compared with their former power bills. They would obscure the fact that the people are using more power. Residential consumers in the TVA area today are using 50 percent more power than the average consumer in the United States, and they are paying 20 percent less money for it.

And this public power system is paying its way. The TVA system, selling power at wholesale, in the last fiscal year obtained gross revenues of more than $39,000,000, and its net income, which is the property of the Federal Government, amounted to nearly $18,000,000 after payment of all operating expenses interest on outstanding bonds, and payments in lieu of taxes to State and county governments. The municipal and cooperative distribution systems, 140 of them, all locally owned and locally managed, make money by distributing TVA power at low rates to more than 600,000 consumers. Last year their gross revenues were in excess of $38,000,000 and their net income more than $7,000,000.

Other benefits have flowed from this program of river development. Malaria has largely been stamped out in a widespread program which has been studied by medical men all over the world and which gave valuable aid to our armed forces in the Pacific during the war.

The great lakes have provided tremendous recreation possibilities which are being developed by the States, counties, and cities of the valley. These are some of the important secondary benefits of TVA's integrated development of the river.

In TVA's unified development of the region, the dams and reservoirs have been dovetailed into the program on the land. The soil of the region is being rebuilt through new systems of agriculture based on high-analysis phosphates which were developed and experimentally manufactured at Muscle Shoals, and which have been used on 53,000 test-demonstration farms, not only in the valley, but in 21 nonvalley States as well, under the supervision of the land-grant colleges of the States. In a small section of Alabama, near my home, I have seen a cotton country transformed in 5 years into a livestock and dairying region, with half a dozen cheese and butter plants in business where none had been before. Forest owners, from large operators to farm woodlots, are learning sustained-yield practices which will preserve the productiveness of forest lands in perpetuity.

New products, new machines, new knowledge of regional resources have resulted from research programs which TVA has stimulated and helped to carry on. Its staff members, technically trained, have aided farmers and businessmen in meeting their problems. TVA has acted as the technical adviser and servant of the people in achieving the objectives which they themselves desire. There is no overlordship, no superstate. Local agencies operate the power distribution systems in the Tennessee Valley. Farmers are still masters of their own acres down there, they are freer and more independent than ever before, because they are more prosperous. Business and industry are finding more opportunity for growth and expansion than ever before. As an Alabama editor, Mr. Barrett Shelton, of the Decatur Times, wrote, the people of the valley "have caught the vision of their own powers."

The story of TVA is a story of growth and development of a partnership between the people of a region and their Federal Government. It is a story of which every American can feel proud. By many leaders, both at home and in many foreign lands, it is regarded as an example of the best evidence that a democracy will work, an example of achievement within a framework of freedom.

This is the story which the Power Trust and its willing henchmen know they must suppress at all costs. To this end their mimeograph machines and presses have been busy—those of the Edison Electric Institute; the Chamber of Commerce of the United States; the National Association of Electric Companies; the Water Conservation Conference Continuing Committee; the 31 national and regional land and water organizations—which includes the Pittsburgh Coal Exchange and the Trinity Improvement Association; the Mississippi Valley Association; the Economic Research and Service Bureau; the National Reclamation Association; the National Tax Equality Association, and even a nationally known publishing firm. From these sources have spewed phony research reports, studies, memoranda, speeches, and even a novel containing undigested and recognizable lumps of Power Trust propaganda.

All this spew of words professes to discuss the TVA and what it means to the Nation or to various regions. But, when reading this material, one who knows the facts about TVA finds himself in a never-never land of unreality. He learns that TVA multiple-purpose dams, which are doing such a marvelous job today, cannot possibly work. He finds that the sole purpose for building them was to drown out farmer Jones' corn crop. He finds page after page of tables, charts, and text in which tax and financial figures are garbled into nonsense. He finds legal contentions solemnly advanced without reference to the fact that they have already been disposed of by the courts. He is told that TVA is a superstate, superstate, superstate, contrary to what the people of the valley know. He finds the smear words "Communist," "Socialist," "Fascist," "totalitarian," tossed recklessly about.

Big money is being spent to prepare, print, and distribute this balderdash. Where does it come from, and why? I propose to find out.

Let us analyze the origin of some of this fairy story stuff. Let me take first the Edison Electric Institute. The EEI was formed in 1933 in an atmosphere of penitence and piety to succeed the National Electric Light Association—Electrical World, January 14, 1934. The reasons for the demise of the NELA are to be found in the bulging reports of the Federal Trade Commission on its 6-year investigation of the utility industry and particularly its report on propaganda activities—Senate Document 92, part 71A, Seventieth Congress, first session, Report of the Federal Trade Commission on Efforts by Associations and Agencies of the Electric and Gas Utilities To Influence Public Opinion. These reports constitute a shocking story and I have time for only the briefest reference to it. Those who want a full account of those lush days can find it in the voluminous records and reports themselves.

THE UNLAMENTED NATIONAL ELECTRIC LIGHT ASSOCIATION

The NELA was the darling of the utilities in the twenties, with eight to ten thousand attending its conventions and hymning "the greatness of the industry and its service to the people."—Business Week, June 9, 1934, page 22. Behind the scenes, however, the investigation showed that NELA and its associated organizations subsidized college professors, influenced the presentation of utility propaganda material in college courses, exerted pressure and influence on textbook publishers and writers, prepared attractive booklets for school children, even down to kindergarten age, and got them into the schools, and exerted pressure on newspapers.

Enormous amounts of money were expended. From 1921 to 1932 NELA and its geographical divisions alone spent $1,500,000 a year—FTC Report, page 27—not counting the State associations which obtained their money locally. No expense was spared, apparently, for, as Mr. M. H. Aylesworth, managing director of NELA in 1924, expressed it:

> All the money being spent is worth while. * * * Don't be afraid of the expense. The public pays the expense. (Senate Document 92, pt. 71A, p. 60, 70th Cong., 1st sess.)

When the Federal Trade Commission dragged all this into the open air, NELA was quietly dispatched and laid away without mourning. In its place rose the Edison Electric Institute, whose early conventions were so mild and contrite that Business Week dubbed them "Quaker Meetings."—Business Week, June 9, 1934, page 22.

THE EDISON ELECTRIC INSTITUTE BEGINS

We were told the industry has reformed, that the practices exposed were to be abandoned with the passing of NELA. The EEI was to be different. Was the reformation complete? Had the industry and its organization hit the Glory Road? It appears not. The first president of Edison Institute was George B. Cortelyou, president of the American Gas Association, which the FTC showed was closely allied with NELA in propaganda activities. Bernard F. Weadock, who had been attorney for the NELA during its quarrels with the FTC at a reported $100,000 a year, became managing director of EEI. The leading members of the policy committee of NELA became trustees for EEI.—New Republic, February 7, 1934, page 363.

And in 1935, the late Senator Norris, of Nebraska, on the floor of the Senate exposed the fact that the Edison Electric Institute had secretly contributed $50,000 to the law firm pressing the so-called Ashwander suit for an injunction to prevent TVA from purchasing certain electric facilities from the Alabama Power Co.

So, Mr. President—

Senator Norris commented—

> little by little the truth comes out, and little by little, more and more, the power trust is smearing itself with falsehood and trickery. In this case it appears that the power trust paid $50,000 to have itself sued and to have itself enjoined from carrying out its own contract. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, July 26, 1935, pp. 11905–6.)

There are other evidences that the reformation of the private utilities was not, and is not, and never has been complete. In 1939 a joint congressional committee which investigated TVA found TVA's power and other operations sound and well conducted, but incidentally it revealed that the Commonwealth and Southern Corp. had secretly contributed $20,000 out of a total of $22,265 expended (according to its reports), by a supposedly spontaneous and independent Citizens and Taxpayers Association which violently opposed public ownership in Chattanooga, Tenn.—Senate Document 56, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, Report of the Joint Committee Investigating TVA, page 199.

The local utility, a subsidiary of the same holding company, likewise subsidized a local newspaper through advertising, reduced power bills, and other means.—Senate Document 56, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, Report of the Joint Committee Investigating TVA.

A year later, in 1940, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch disclosed that the Union Electric Co. of Missouri had accumulated and disbursed a slush fund of $600,000 which it paid, in part, to nearly 200 public officials and candidates for office. Some of it was used to pay the salary of a newspaper reporter on a St. Charles, Mo., paper who, though ostensibly a bona fide member of the staff, specialized in anti-public-ownership articles. "Not only members of the legislature were tampered with, but members of the county courts, and a judge of the circuit court was paid a larger salary than the salary paid him by the State," declared United States District Judge George H. Moore in sentencing one of the company officials for perjury.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch, August 4, 1940. This, Mr. President, was as late as 1940.

Only a few weeks ago the Senate of the State of Kentucky was obliged to undertake an investigation of reports of attempted bribery in connection with efforts to persuade the legislature to vote for a utility-written bill which would have made it impossible for Kentucky cities to obtain cheap TVA power.

These are some fragmentary evidences of the moral state of the industry which the Edison Electric Institute represents. It has not changed over the years. In the course of my own investigation of the question I found that a good many of the activities, disavowed when NELA was buried, are still continued.

Public Service Magazine, for example, was started in 1907 with Sam Insull as a principal stockholder, according to the FTC report, and was reorganized in 1916 to include a number of utility men as stockholders. Of its subscription list of 30,000, about 26,500 copies were paid for and distributed by utilities to, among others, state legislators, libraries, and school teachers.—Senate Document 92, part 71A, Seventieth Congress, First session, Report of the Federal Trade Commission on "Efforts by Associations and Agencies of the Electric and Gas Utilities to Influence Public Opinion," pages 98–100. What about this publication today? Although it has changed ownership, and utility men have disappeared from the list of stockholders, Public Service Magazine is still a purveyor of bitter propaganda against public ownership and particularly against the TVA, and it circulation is still about 30,000.

The Federal Trade Commission report likewise told how, in 1924, the utilities commenced subsidizing E. Hofer and Sons, of Portland, Oreg., to the tune of $85,000 a year, and how Hofer sent weekly batches of canned propaganda editorials to 14,500 newspapers all over the country to be used as expressions of the independent opinions of the independent editors. Senate Document 92, part 71A, Seventieth Congress, First session, Report of the Federal Trade Commission on "Efforts by Associations and Agencies of the Electric and Gas Utilities to Influence Public Opinion." pages 92–97. Considerable success was then reported in thus insinuating utility propaganda into the minds of readers without their knowledge of the source. What has happened to this practice? When I began to trace back the source of identical editorials appearing in papers as far apart as Utah and West Virginia, what did I find? I found they were initiated by E. Hofer and Sons. E. Hofer and Sons, admitting unobstrusively in small type on the sheets it distributes that it is "supported financially" by utilities—and by railroad, banking, chain store, mining, oil, and other special interests—is still sending out its weekly batch of propaganda. There has not been any change in this particular practice. All the way the reformation was skin deep.

The EEI itself has taken on some of NELA's discredited activities. For example, let me pick up a current propaganda thread from the EEI. See if it is not reminiscent of NELA days. In February 1944, the EEI put out a 56 page mimeographed tract called, "An Appraisal of Tennessee Valley Authority," ostensibly only for distribution to EEI members. Of course, it was not an "appraisal" but an attack.

It juggled figures. It discussed flood control in terms of the ancient testimony of power-company engineers, who claimed, in defiance of the records of more than 70 years, that major floods could occur in the Tennessee Valley at any time during the year—testimony which had already been weighed and discarded by the courts. It contained a table attempting to relate TVA payments in lieu of taxes to TVA's total investment, including flood control, navigation, chemical plant, general plant, and even construction in progress, although only its power investment was purportedly under discussion. The computation of the property taxes it claimed TVA should have paid on its facilities included part of the investment in navigation and flood control. To compare TVA taxes with those of utilities it devised a formula which was based on kilowatt-hour sales, ignoring the fact that almost all TVA power is sold at wholesale. Obviously it does not produce the same revenues per kilowatt-hour as do the sales of power by private utilities to ultimate consumers at high rates. After inflating TVA power investment by the inclusion of navigation and flood-control facilities, it calculated interest at 4 percent, in spite of the fact that utility companies were then refinancing at much less than that and that the cost of money to the Government was only half that amount. These were the devices EEI stooped to in order to charge TVA with a "loss" on power operations.

MR. RISING, OF IDAHO, TAKES UP THE THREAD

No two organizations, no two men, could compound so many errors independently. Yet early in 1945 comes one E. W. Rising, an attorney of Boise, Idaho, who prepared a 14-page TVA brief, ostensibly on his own initiative, from "information available to me," as he expressed it—TVA brief, by Rising. But where did the "information available" come from? We find that the Rising "brief" turns out to be based almost entirely upon the EEI tract "appraising" the TVA, even to the lifting of language verbatim. The same table appears attempting to relate TVA payments in lieu of taxes on power operations to its total fixed assets, including navigation and flood-control facilities, chemical plant, general plant, and construction in progress. The same misleading reference to the flood-control testimony of utility engineers is found in the Rising brief, and again TVA's experimental development and manufacture of high-analysis phosphates is described as a "loss." Tens of thousands of farmers and the leading agricultural specialists of the country would call that activity pure gain, but the private utilities have never betrayed any interest in farmers or the Nation's soil.

With variations, Rising applies the EEI formula for calculating the taxes the utilities would charge against the TVA, again ignoring the fact that TVA's power generating system is not comparable to the generating and distribution systems of private utilities. And finally, by such means having produced an illusory "deficit," Rising indulges in the priceless whimsy of adding to TVA's bill another $10,000,000 as an estimate of Federal income and excess-profits taxes which he says should be paid on an income that he claims does not exist. This rehash of power-trust propaganda was circulated in the West by the opponents of MVA, CVA, and other valley developments, notably by F. O. Hagie, secretary-manager of the National Reclamation Association—Pueblo (Colo.) Chieftain, February 16, 1945—an organization which is reported to be dominated by utility, railroad, and contracting interests.

Apparently encouraged by his local success, we find Rising packing his propaganda tracts in his brief case and heading East. In Chicago, in September 1944, there had been formed the Water Conservation Conference Continuing Committee, apparently at the suggestion of the National Reclamation Association, managed by Hagie—Peter Edson, NEA columnist, in Florence (Ala.) Times, July 19, 1945. In April 1945, another group appeared. A new joint "water lobby" to oppose creation of more valley authorities like TVA, consisting of 31 national and regional land and water organizations, announced its creation—Peter Edson, NEA, Washington (D. C.) News, July 16, 1945. One of the early exploits of this water lobby was to publish the Authority Issue, by Clifford F. Stone in collaboration with other national authorities on land and water subjects, a booklet which, after rehashing much of the propaganda against TVA, attempts to reopen the constitutional issue which was long ago settled by the courts.

These organizations have moved on Washington now, and here we find E. W. Rising, who got his start rewriting power-trust propaganda: Rising is both finance officer of the Water Conservation Conference Continuing Committee and member of the coordinating committee of the 31 national and regional land and water organizations—The Authority Issue, by Clifford F. Stone and others, published by 31 national and regional land and water organizations. Both these organizations are snuggled together in the same offices at 710 Atlantic Building, Washington, D. C. From these offices are distributed all sorts of misleading propaganda documents against TVA—This Is Your Job, biblography of Anti-TVA Propaganda, published by 31 national and regional land and water organizations, 710 Atlantic Building, Washington, D. C.—including Rising's original power trust brief, which was in itself a rewrite of the EEI's appraisal.

PROPAGANDA FROM 20 NORTH WACKER DRIVE, CHICAGO

Let me pick up another propaganda thread and follow its devious course. Twenty North Wacker Drive, Chicago, Ill., is an address which will live long and unhappily in the memories of the storied widows and orphans to whom the power trust solicitously sold its stock. Twenty North Wacker Drive was the headquarters from which the Insulls built up and ran their fragile and watery holding company empire, the Middle West Utilities, which collapsed so disastrously and with such tragic consequences to investors in the 1930's. It was from here that Insull urged the utility propagandist to "everything but skywriting," as one NELA official put it—George F. Oxley, NELA director of publicity, reported in Senate Document No. 92, part 71A, page 59.

Twenty North Wacker Drive today is the address of the successor to a major part of the Insull empire—the Middle West Corp., and its wholly owned subsidiary, the Middle West Service Co. From this address, in August 1943, 6 months before the EEI attack appeared, there issued a mimeographed propaganda document called The Case Against TVA, written by Edwin Vennard, vice president of the Middle West Service Co. It was obviously intended as a handbook of propaganda against the TVA, although its early use was somewhat obscure. But on April 12, 1945, it blossomed forth in printed form, with colored charts and illustrations, under the title "Dangers of the TVA Method of River Control." This time the Vennard publications purported to come from such Middle West subsidiaries as the Wisconsin Power & Light Co. and the Southwestern Gas & Electric Co.

This precious piece of propaganda, 96 pages in length, endeavored to show that TVA was the result of a Socialist or Communist plot. The only argument attempted consisted of a series of quotations from Norman Thomas, the Socialist; Carl D. Thompson, of the Public Ownership League; and H. S. Raushenbush, of the Department of the Interior, none of whom has now or ever has had any direct connection with TVA. The clincher was an alleged quotation, which turns out to be a misquotation from Lenin that "socialism is electricity plus bookkeeping." What Lenin appears to have said actually—New Republic, January 14, 1946, page 58, Review of Uncle Sam's Billion Dollar Baby, by A. J. Mezerik—was, "Communism is the Soviet power plus the electrification of the whole country, for without electrification, progress in industry is impossible." By such shoddy logic as this, it was intimated that because the Soviets realized the importance of electricity, George Norris, the Republican from Nebraska, was a tool of Moscow and the TVA a Socialist plot.

Doubting, perhaps, that the Communist charge would be impressive, this pamphlet in addition tries to prove, for the benefit of anyone not familiar with the facts, that the TVA multiple-purpose system cannot possibly work. This is done by a singular kind of reasoning. First it points to the single-purpose flood-control system on the Miami River, which is successful, for its purpose; then it compares that development with the Grand River Dam in Oklahoma, a single multiple-purpose structure, which failed to control one of the largest floods on the Grand River. Now it happens that neither the Miami nor the Grand River development has the remotest resemblance to the integrated system of the Tennessee. They neglected to use the TVA itself as an example of a multipurpose system which does work, although the facts are available to anyone in search of truth—even to these propagandists.

The reliability of this peculiar document may be further judged by such statements as this: "People with money to loan are asking, on the average, about 6 percent for the use of their money by electric companies." Anyone familiar with the financial pages must have known that utilities at the time the booklet appeared were refinancing for less than 3 percent. Surely that fact must have been known to Edwin Vennard, of the Middle West Service Co., of 20 North Wacker Drive, Chicago.

The Vennard booklet has had various propaganda uses since it saw the light of day as a privately circulated "study" and later had its first printing. A short version, in racier language, and copiously illustrated in color, was published by the Economic Research and Service Bureau, Milwaukee, Wis., and is listed for sale by that organization in a bibliography of anti-TVA material put out by the 31 national and regional water lobby organizations. So far as I have been able to gather, the distribution of this reprint of a rehash is the sole bit of economic research published by this organization, of which one John N. Cadby is president. And curiously enough, John N. Cadby, according to the disclosures of the FTC, was executive secretary of the Wisconsin Public Utilities Association and, among other duties, was active in seeing that the proper viewpoint got into a text written by a university professor—Senate Document 92, part 71A, page 165, Seventieth Congress, first session. This reprint of rehashed Vennard propaganda is apparently enjoying a brisk sale among power companies who want to spread the anti-TVA gospel. It has been reported as being distributed by a couple of Kansas utilities and by several others. The Southwestern Gas and Electric Co., having published and distributed the original Vennard booklet, has likewise distributed the shorter, expensive Cadby version. This is a fact which ought to interest the consumers of this company, who are apparently being called upon, through their electric bills, to pay for a double dose of the Vennard nostrum.

Undoubtedly the imitative pamphlets and booklets were satisfying, but Vennard, as a utility propagandist, must have felt he really hit the bull's eye when a book, half novel and half propaganda tract, called Uncle Sam's Billion Dollar Baby, by Frederick L. Collins, was published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. It was a bitter attack on TVA under the guise of folksy dialog between a taxpayer and his family. As a reviewer in one of the great papers in the South wrote, "This is a misleading and prejudicial book and, if you ask this reviewer, a thoroughly dishonest one"—Tarleton Collier in the Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal, September 23, 1945. However, the reputation of Collins the author might suffer, certainly the book's publication was a triumph for Vennard. For Collins' entire theses, practically speaking, was based upon Vennard's Dangers of the TVA Method of River Control, although it did draw upon other propaganda sources such as the United States Chamber of Commerce. The book not only uses Vennard's general argument, but appropriates his language practically verbatim. The cozy state of affairs existing between these propagandists no doubt accounts for the fact that there is no record that Collins and his publisher have been sued for plagiarism by Vennard.

Shades of Sam Insull and the NELA. Here again, in the unscrupulous tradition the Power Trust once claimed to have disavowed, we have utility propaganda insinuated into the public mind under the guise of the work of a supposedly independent writer and under the imprint of a well-known publishing firm.

It would be revealing indeed to find out a few things about this book. How did it come to be written? How was the writing of it financed? Who buys the book? How many have been sold over the bookstore counters? And how many have been purchased in block lots to be judiciously distributed by the Power Trust?

The Vennard booklet has done yeoman service for the Power Trust. Not only has it been distributed in its original version, used as the basis of a more spectacular pamphleteering job, and inspired a novel, but apparently it has been used as a handbook for misleading advertisements directed against the work of TVA, the unprincipled character of which was perhaps best described by George A. Davis, president of the Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co. This company ran an advertisement campaign reviling TVA which was in turn considered worthy of a full-dress article by Mr. Davis in Public Utilities Fortnightly, of November 8, 1945, under the title "Bug Under the Chip."

These ads sought to show TVA power operations were financially unsound by the shopworn methods I have described: Relating assumed interest and taxes to total, not power, investment, but including the cost of providing navigation and flood control, forgetting or ignoring that on other rivers—the Mississippi, the Ohio, for example—such developments have always been financed as general expenses of government, and are not assessed against the electric consumers. These ads referred to TVA's expenses in carrying on recognized governmental functions as losses, though they are in the same category as the expenses of carrying on similar activities of the Department of the Interior, the Department of Agriculture, or the United States Army Engineers. The advertisements themselves and the articles describing them are a tissue of falsehoods and adroit misrepresentations. In the article, for example, Mr. Davis declared that the Comptroller General is not given the privilege of auditing TVA accounts—a statement directly contrary to the fact. Under the TVA statute the Comptroller General has now and always has had not only the right, but the duty, to audit TVA accounts, and this right has never been challenged by TVA.

After shamelessly detailing this advertising campaign against the TVA, Davis well expressed the attitude of the Power Trust, when he declared in his article:

> We will not take time to defend our statements.

What did Davis mean? The only possible interpretation is that he and his company intend to continue to make misleading, distorted, and harmful statements against the TVA, whether these statements are true or not.

Though the Insulls are gone from 20 North Wacker Drive, their spirit lingers on, as the Vennard booklet and the ramifications of its use bear testimony. Middle West Utilities of the Insulls has been supplanted by the Middle West Corp., but the propaganda attitude and technique of the former apparently has been transferred with the other assets and liabilities. Its leadership has now been recognized by a large section of the Power Trust.

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ELECTRIC COMPANIES IS BORN

In July 1945 there was launched still another organization with offices in Washington. It is called the National Association of Electric Companies. I am told it claims to represent about half the utility industry, and as Business Week frankly stated, is organized "to some extent along the organizational pattern of the NELA." And as Business Week also explained, the new organization was to "perform the public relations functions which EEI has studiously shunned"—Business Week July 28, 1945. I make no comment on the "studious" way EEI appears to have shunned the old NELA activities; I have already described how it helped to finance the fights against TVA and how it was responsible for irresponsible anti-TVA propaganda.

And who heads this high-minded organization which will do what even EEI will not? He is Purcell L. Smith, president of the Middle West Corp., the successor to Insull's Middle West Utilities, and associate of writer Vennard. Mr. Smith has resigned his post as head of the Middle West holding company, to come to Washington to propagandize for the Power Trust at a reported salary of $65,000 a year, and with a guaranty, it is reported, that he will receive $50,000 a year for 3 years, even if his services should no longer be required—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 27, 1946, page 1750. How much is it worth to the Power Trust to mislead the public about TVA? This new propaganda and lobbying organization, quite aside from all the other activities which are being secretly promoted and carried on, pays its top man alone $65,000 a year. With this to start with, what is the total budget of the National Association of Electric Companies—$1,000,000 a year, $2,000,000, or $5,000,000? Or is the sky the limit?

I think the Congress and the public are entitled to know. I think we should take steps to find out. I want to know who is footing the bill. Of course, I know who foots the bill ultimately. The consumer of electricity pays it. But who are the people who decide to take this tribute from the consumer and use it to finance a private battle against the public interest? The consumers, the public, should know the answer.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES HAS A PART IN THIS PROPAGANDA SCHEME

Let us pick up still a third propaganda thread. This time we find it upon the marble doorstep of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which claims to be the sacrosanct repository for all the high principles and ideals of American business.

In May 1944 the Chamber of Commerce conducted a referendum, No. 81, on National Water Resources Policies, now become notorious for its unfairness and bias. This referendum submitted a number of propositions to the chamber membership for decision. To help its members decide, so-called information was provided, alleged facts prepared by the national resources department of the chamber were distributed. The national resources department is headed by one David J. Guy, who works apparently under the direction of a national resources department committee. This committee included, among others, Kinsey M. Robinson, of the Washington Water Power Co., who is well known for his lobbying activities here—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 27, 1946, page 1750—and it also included other power-company officials.

The committee membership also included Ralph L. Carr, attorney at law, of Denver, Colo., a former Governor of the State, to whom I shall return in a moment.

One would expect that such a referendum, in fairness to the members of the chamber, if for no other reason, would be based upon a dispassionate presentation of facts. But what do we find? We find that the members received as a basis on which to vote a long discussion of TVA that was about as far from truth as one could get. Flood control was barely mentioned, for example, and then without any indication of its benefits, either existing or prospective. Navigation was discussed in terms of the Army engineers' plan for a low-dam system for the Tennessee River, without mention of the fact that such a system was presented by the engineers as an alternative to the preferred high-dam development with which most of their 700 page report—House Document 328, Seventy-first Congress, second session, "Tennessee River and Tributaries"—was concerned. The chamber's presentation claimed "the TVA public utility business represents a billion-dollar investment." This distortion of more than 100 percent was produced by adding to the power investment of TVA, first, the investments of the municipal and cooperative distributors of TVA power, and then all of TVA's other fixed assets. The cost of the chemical plant was included, for example, as well as the cost of the general plant, construction in progress, and the investment in navigation and flood-control facilities. Finally, when this conglomerate mass failed to total sufficiently high, another $100,000,000 or so was thrown in for good luck—United States Chamber of Commerce Referendum 81.

I note with pain, Mr. President, that the businessmen of the United States have received from their most respected trade association almost the same false figures and the idiotic formulae that the members of EEI and the readers of Messrs. Rising and Vennard have been getting. Members of the chamber of commerce were even treated to some special misrepresentations which were later widely copied. In its "dispassionate" presentation of TVA activities, for example, the chamber included a list of 30 undertakings purporting to show the extent to which TVA was invading the fields of private enterprise. Among these, for example, were listed the operation of schools, of drug stores, grocery stores and commissaries, water systems. The chamber of commerce neglected to mention that such activities were undertaken by TVA only on a temperary basis, when it was necessary to provide such community services for construction workers at isolated sites. The businessmen need not have been frightened. They should not have been prejudiced by such a deceitful presentation.

In the same discussion, TVA research projects in themselves designed to provide the knowledge and stimulus for development of private business, were presented as "manufacturing" operations. It was claimed, for example, that TVA was "manufacturing" laminated wood. Actually, TVA has worked to develop a continuous glue press which would produce high-grade flooring from cull timber. The process, which has been carried through the pilot-plant stage, is soon to be tested in commercial operation by private industry. Private industry will eventually take it over. Private industry, and private industry alone, will use it commercially. It is the same kind of research as that which developed a small, low-cost threshing machine which for several years has been commercially and profitably manufactured by a firm in North Carolina, as a result of TVA research. There have been a number of such devolpments which have been of benefit to private business and private industry. Businessmen of the Valley States and men outside appreciate them highly, in spite of the researchers of the Chamber of Commerce.

I am glad to report this monstrous fraud was not entirely undetected by the membership of the Chamber of Commerce. I know personally that businessmen in my own State and in other States of the Tennessee Valley were shocked and indignant at this deliberate flouting of the facts, and that they advised the chamber of their feelings in no uncertain terms.

THE NATIONAL TAX EQUALITY ASSOCIATION MAKES ITS CONTRIBUTION

Nevertheless, damage was done—to the reputation of the United States Chamber of Commerce, if not to the TVA. The results of this rigid referendum were presented as the mature judgment of American business. The fraudulent data presented by the chamber were seized upon and disseminated as gospel by other propagandists, as, for example, the National Tax Equality Association, of Chicago, Ill., an organization of mysterious antecedents but obvious bias. In a recent tract, prepared by its research department, the NTEA presents as fact the spurious Chamber of Commerce-Vennard list of TVA activities. Likewise, table II in the NTEA research report, purporting to show the effect of interest on TVA power operations at an assumed rate of 2¼ percent, and calculated on total, rather than net investment, after depreciation, came bodily from appendix D of Vennard's Dangers of the TVA Method of River Control. Table III of the same report, purporting to show the effect of both interest and taxes on TVA power operations, stemmed back to the same source, appendix D of Vennard, with some minor variations. Here again, as in Vennard, we find comparisons of "apples and oranges"—the total taxes of utilities on both generation and distribution operations, including excess-profits taxes, used to support a propaganda calculation endeavoring to show the taxes TVA should pay—The Spurious Competition of Government Enterprise, National Tax Equality Association, Chicago, Ill., October 1945.

Here we have a sample of what passes for research by these organizations—the acceptance of material third hand or fourth hand or fifth hand without any original investigation, although original material is readily available. Obviously, the criterion is not the truth or validity of the material, but the simple question Will it, if believed, injure TVA? Will it support our bias?

The latest exploit of this National Tax Equality Association, one of the associations I mentioned earlier today, has been an assault upon the schools, right in the old NELA tradition. NTEA has offered prizes to students for essays upon the subject the Tax Privilege of Public Corporations and Cooperatives and Its Impact Upon Private Business. Prizes are $750, $300, and $100 to the winning students. But this is not all. No doubt in the interest of stimulating objective research, gratuities are provided also in the amounts of $100, $75, and $50 for the professors of the winning students—Business Week, December 22, 1945.

THE UNITED STATES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE CONTINUES ITS PROPAGANDA JOB

Let me go back now and bring the Senate up to date on the chamber of commerce. Although its fraudulent referendum was exposed by its own members in the Tennessee Valley, presumably the members best able to judge the facts, the chamber of commerce has continued its propaganda assault and its misrepresentation of TVA. It has taken some warning. It has become somewhat more careful, but no less misleading.

Early in 1945, about a year after its referendum, the natural resources department of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States retained one C. J. Green, an engineer-accountant, once employed by the Federal Power Commission, to make a study of TVA power operations.

We need not waste much time on analysis of the Green report. Its voluminous pages and tables are filled with bad engineering and accounting. As a single instance, like the others I have mentioned, Green compares TVA's power operations, which consist entirely of wholesale production of power, with the operations of privately owned public utilities which sell their power at retail. Upon such comparisons he draws his conclusions.

It is the genesis of this preposterous report, however, which is of real significance. Here we discover that the Green report resulted from the fact that "the board—of the Chamber of Commerce—in response to a statement by Ralph L. Carr, requested the natural resources department to prepare a report on TVA and its possible application to other regions"—D. J. Guy, manager, natural resources department, United States Chamber of Commerce, in Foreward to The Total Cost of TVA Power, by C. J. Green.

It appears, then, that Ralph L. Carr is primarily responsible for the Green report. And who is Ralph L. Carr? He is, as I have mentioned, an ex-governor of Colorado and an attorney. He is also, as is his right, a bitter opponent of TVA, so bitter that he has written that a Missouri Valley Authority—patterned after TVA—"would constitute an assumption of sovereignty greater than either the National Government or the States have ever claimed"—Modern Industry, March 15, 1945, page 113. We will leave it to Mr. Carr, who is a lawyer, to explain how Congress could, if it would, create an agency greater than itself. Mr. Carr is listed modestly in the 1946 Martindale-Hubbell Law Directory as attorney for water, transportation, and aviation supply interests. He is also listed as "Member, board of directors and chairman, natural resources committee, United States Chamber of Commerce since 1943."

But what else do we discover? On February 5, 1946, Mr. Carr appeared in a public forum over the radio on the question, "Do we want more TVA's?" And in the heat of this debate we find him, after considerable prodding by his opponents, admitting that he is also a lawyer for private utilities—"Shall We Have More TVA's?" American Forum of the Air, Mutual Network, February 5, 1946, page 9.

So what do we have with respect to the Green report?

We have Ralph L. Carr, the utility lawyer, asking the Chamber of Commerce to ask Ralph L. Carr, the chairman of the national resources committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce, for an unbiased report on the TVA.

That Mr. Carr's report was satisfactory to Mr. Carr is evident from the uses to which it has been put. Last November 15, D. J. Guy, manager of the natural resources department under Mr. Carr, used the Green-Carr report as the basis of a violent attack upon TVA in a speech made to a meeting of the National Reclamation Association in Denver. This is the organization managed by F. O. Hagie, who, as I previously noted, circulated the rehash of Edison Electric Institute propaganda prepared by E. W. Rising, who is now a leading light in the water lobby here in Washington.

Finally, the cycle is complete. We find the speech by Guy, based on the Green report prepared at the behest of Mr. Carr, the utility lawyer, being sent out as propaganda material by Purcell L. Smith, the $65,000 a year lobbyist and propagandist of the National Association of Electric Companies. The music goes round and round.

WHAT DOES IT ALL COST?

Money is being spent in this campaign like water. How much I do not pretend to know, nor do I think that even the fullest investigation could more than approximate the total. But we have the National Association of Electric Companies paying to one man alone $65,000 a year, or more than double the combined salaries of the TVA Board of Directors. In addition to paying other salaries, they pay for the maintenance of expensive suites of offices, pay printing bills, and make other expenditures the nature of which we can only surmise.

We have organizations like the Water Conservation Conference, and the 31 national and regional land and water organizations with expensive headquarters in Washington, D. C. We have costly advertising and publicity firms like Leon Bloch & Associates, of Washington, sending out antiregional authority propaganda and handling the publicity for such propagandists as E. W. Rising when they appear before congressional committees—National Union Farmer, October 15, 1945.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to say that Mr. Rising is from the State of Idaho. I am ashamed.

Mr. HILL. I thank the Senator for his contribution.

Mr. President, we have, as the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] pointed out—Appendix to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page A2354—reports of a New York advertising firm sending nine $1,000-a-month propagandists to invade the Missouri Valley and organize a campaign of misrepresentation against the MVA bill. And we know, as the St. Louis Post-Dispatch points out, that "expenses of such high-powered 'public relations' men usually far exceed their salaries. If no more than the nine men now employed are sent out the cost for a year would run into hundreds of thousands of dollars"—St. Louis, Mo., Post-Dispatch, May 12, 1945.

We have expensive streams of propaganda tracts, phoney research reports, and even a novel pouring from the printing presses and mimeograph machines, all aimed at discrediting the TVA and the development of natural resources along modern, sensible lines.

Let us not be mistaken. The power trust has not forgotten the adage of the Insull NELA days: "Do not mind the expense. The public pays the expense." The power companies expect to get the money back, with interest and profit compounded, if only they can maintain their vested stranglehold on the Nation's resources.

This is a desperate campaign against the public interest. It may, by its very vehemence, succeed in confusing the issues for a time and misleading those who do not know the facts. It may delay the development of our resources for the people's benefit. But there is one area of the country where it will never succeed. That is the Tennessee Valley.

THE PROPAGANDA IS WASTED WHERE THEY KNOW THE FACTS

In the Tennessee Valley the ridiculous claims of the propagandists are simply laughed out of court. The people of the Valley know that the TVA dams are producing vast amounts of power at low cost and are still earning a fair return. They know that floods are being controlled. They see the increasing number of barges on the new and modern waterway, carrying coal, gasoline, automobiles, timber, wheat, and corn. They see industries springing up to take advantage of the new sources of power and the new waterway. They see the farm fields becoming greener and more productive, less eroded, year by year. They know that these things are happening as a result of the changed systems of farming made possible by proper use of concentrated superphosphates manufactured by TVA at Muscle Shoals. They know that they are learning how to conserve their forests and to rebuild their woodlands into long-lived productiveness. Private enterprise in the Tennessee Valley knows that the program of TVA has helped, not hindered, its development.

And, above all, the people know that they are not the victims of a ruthless "superstate"; they know, in a region where "States' rights" is a watchword, that their State and local Governments are stronger, not weaker, since the advent of TVA. They know what has been achieved in the valley, and they know that it has been achieved in the best tradition of a progressive, grass roots democratic America. They are not fooled. Nor will the masses of people in other regions be fooled, once the facts about the TVA and its accomplishments become known. And become known they inevitably will.

The campaign of propaganda which seeks to obscure the facts will fail in the end. But let us not be misled into believing that it is not a danger today. I do not pretend to know the whole story or the full extent of this campaign, but I have presented what seems to me conclusive evidence of the main lines of attack in one of the best organized assaults upon the public interest ever conceived by a predatory band.

Pick up the threads where we will, they lead back to the same power interests, the same propaganda organizations, and the same practices which were a scandal 20 years ago. If we start with the Edison Electric Institute, the offspring of the old National Electric Light Association, we find ourselves led to supposedly independent land and water organizations lobbying here in Washington. If we start at Chicago's 20 North Wacker Drive, we can go straight to the offices of the National Association of Electric Companies here in Washington, or we can take a more devious route through the anterooms of a supposedly disinterested writer and his publisher. If we pick up the thread on the doorstep of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, we find one end leading back into the office of a utility lawyer, and the other leading inevitably into the sanctum of the NAEC.

It is the old, old story. The story we have heard since the 1920's, the story disclosed to the public by the investigations of the Federal Trade Commission, the story written in the reports of the Commission, the same old story continued today, in 1946. Once more the people's representatives, Senators of the United States, must act to protect the people by exposing the unscrupulous efforts of those who would exploit the people.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I have been unable to be in the Senate Chamber to hear all the Senator's remarks, but I have been told that he referred to former Gov. Ralph Carr of Colorado.

Mr. HILL. I did. I referred to him as a utility lawyer, which fact he admitted in a radio broadcast. If I had the report of my remarks I could cite the Senator to the RECORD. I referred to him also as Chairman of the Water Resources Committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Has the Senator from Alabama associated Governor Carr with the remarks he has made about corruption?

Mr. HILL. I did not hear the Senator's question.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I understood the Senator to be denouncing corruptionists.

Mr. HILL. I have been denouncing all the misleading propaganda the Power Trust has been engaged in against the TVA, and, for that matter, against public power developments.

Mr. MILLIKIN. May I ask, has the Senator attacked the legitimacy of any of Governor Carr's activities in these matters?

Mr. HILL. I said he was a public utility lawyer, and stated in my remarks that he had a right to be.

Mr. MILLIKIN. In the same way, I suggest to the Senator, that these men who have fine perquisites and jobs in the public power field have a right to advocate their causes without any implication of impropriety.

Mr. HILL. The propaganda carried on by the Power Trust against the TVA has been, in my opinion, a different kind of propaganda, if any has been carried on by any advocates of public power.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I do not know to what the Senator refers as a "power trust," but I know that former Governor Carr was twice Governor of Colorado. He is a very dear friend of mine; he is highly respected in the State of Colorado; he is one of the great, outstanding water experts of this country; he knows more about the power and water problems, so far as they affect the West, I suggest, than any other man in the United States, and if there is anyone in this country qualified to speak on these matters, it is former Gov. Ralph Carr.

Mr. HILL. I will say to the Senator that I do not know Governor Carr personally. The only way I know him is through my investigation of this matter. I ran into him both as a utility lawyer which, as I have said, he had a right to be, and as chairman of the water resources committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. MILLIKIN. As I understand, Governor Carr is strongly opposed to the duplication of TVA in the Missouri River Valley, and I should like to express my complete admiration and respect for his opposition, and a full concurrence with his views, so far as I know them to be. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HILL. The Senator has a right to his views, and Governor Carr has a right to his.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, former Governor Carr has also been out in the Northwest making speeches against the CVA.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I did not quite understand the Senator's remark.

Mr. TAYLOR. Former Governor Carr has been out in the Northwest making speeches against the proposed Columbia Valley Authority. He has not confined his reference to the Missouri Valley Authority, which affects Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Idaho that if he has irrigation rights to protect out there he will do well to heed Governor Carr's advice.

Mr. TAYLOR. We have irrigation rights to protect, and we also have land we want developed. He may be very well qualified, but I disagree with his point of view.

Mr. HILL. As one who believes in public power—not all projects, of course, to be public-power projects—I will say that I am not consulting a public-utility lawyer as to my rights.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The Senator might do better in consulting public-utility lawyers than some of the lawyers of the Government.

Mr. HILL. The Senator might be right about that, but at least Government lawyers are supposed to be in the service of the public, and not in the service of a private company which may have some selfish interest in the matter. Long ago we were told that no man could serve two masters.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The Government lawyers are often in the service of the perpetuation of their jobs and enlargement of their bureaucracies, and the fastening of fascism on the United States. The distinguished Senator with whom I am having this colloquy does not need advice from anyone, and I am not advising that he take it from either party.

Mr. HILL. Some of the Government lawyers may be guilty of what the Senator from Colorado imputes to them, but the fact remains that in working for the Government they work for far less compensation, far less reward, than do the lawyers who work for private selfish interests.

Mr. MILLIKIN. And I should also suggest that in many cases they are not worth as much.

Mr. HILL. That may be true, too, but I have seen some men in the Government service who are worth far more than many of the little lobbyists who are running around here in behalf of some selfish interest, trying to have something done against the public welfare.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I was not making a blanket indictment against Government lawyers.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I should not, perhaps, detain the Senate at all in reference to the controversy which has been suggested by the speech made by the able Senator from Alabama; I know the Senate is pressed for time, and is working toward an adjournment, and that we have some very important legislation now pending before the Senate for consideration, and other legislation equally important soon to be presented to us.

I regret that at this hour there should have been brought up for agitation a matter concerning which there is no measure now pending in the United States Senate or in the United States Congress. I would not detain the Senate at all were it not for the fact that the honorable Senator from Alabama refused to yield to me when I wanted to ask him a question.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERTON. I refuse to yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I will not yield to the Senator from Alabama; he refused to yield to me.

Mr. President, one of the questions I wanted to ask the able Senator from Alabama was that he should take home the lesson he was trying in his speech to give the Senate of the United States. He advocates the expansion of regional authorities throughout the United States. I was going to ask him if it would not be well if we should defer action on the Tennessee-Tombigbee Rivers, an item which is now contained in a report made by the Senate Committee on Commerce on the pending river and harbor bill. I was going to ask him if we should take the Tennessee-Tombigbee and convert it into an authority. The TVA constitutes a part of it; that is to say, the new project is going to utilize the Tennessee River, over which TVA now exercises supreme authority, and if we add to the Tennessee River the Tombigbee, the Alabama, and the Mobile Rivers, why should we not just make one glorious picture of the whole, as portrayed by the Senator from Alabama, and have one magnificent regional authority extending from the Ohio River on southward to the Gulf of Mexico.

But, Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose either of criticizing or of espousing TVA. No one is attacking TVA, and I take it that it is not the purpose of the Senator from Alabama to rescue TVA from any insidious attack outside, or from any open attack in, the Halls of the Congress.

Mr. President, I want to compliment the Senator on his magnificent, prodigious speech. It shows wonderful research and investigation. The able Senator must have spent hours and days in perusing all the literature and all the propaganda in order to present it in such a composite and broad view to the United States Senate. Certainly it was not the work of a few days. That speech represents a prolonged and tedious effort, and I do not think there is any other Senator in the Senate who could, with all the duties that a Senator has on his hands, have been able to take the time and prepare such a speech as this—except the able Senator from Alabama.

Mr. President, the main objection I have to TVA at the present time, or, rather, not to TVA but to TVA-ites, is that they are trying to TVA-ize the whole United States of America. Here is a project which is nothing else, after all, but a power project. It is situated in a river which is of comparatively short length. It has no irrigation in connection with it.

The Senator speaks of benefits which flow from flood control in the Tennessee Valley. There are no benefits that flow from flood control in the Tennessee Valley if one side of the scale be weighed against the other, because the mammoth dams and reservoirs that have been constructed and put in operation, in the Tennessee Valley, have inundated just as much land, equally as fertile land, too, equally as productive land as was ever overflowed periodically by the floods that came down the Tennessee Valley. That is the testimony which stands uncontradicted in a number of hearings before the Commerce Committee of the Senate. The flood protection of the Tennessee Valley is offset by inundation of equally as large quantities of land as were ever subjected to overflow in the Tennessee Valley.

There was no navigation to amount to anything in the Tennessee Valley until the Kentucky Dam was constructed and put into production. There is some navigation now. That navigation will be greatly enhanced when the Tennessee River is connected with the Tombigbee River. Then navigation will extend from the Gulf of Mexico to the Ohio, along the Ohio to the Mississippi River and her great tributaries.

The Senator complains of attacks being made against TVA by such men as the ex-governor of Colorado, to whom the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] referred, by such men as Mr. Rising, Mr. Hagie, and Judge Sloan. I know all three of these men because they have appeared before my committee. They are able men, every one of them, the testimony of the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] in reference to one of them to the contrary notwithstanding. So far as I know they are patriotic. So far as I know, what they are interested in is to prevent the TVA philosophy and authority being carried into the Missouri Valley Basin and the Columbia Valley Basin and other basins of the United States.

I must say that, notwithstanding the Senator's statement that there is a vast horde of lobbyists connected with the power companies in Washington, I have never been visited in my office by a single one of them in connection with TVA. But I dare say the fight that is being made is in order for the power companies to protect themselves from the evident purpose of some people to make one great Power Trust in the United States of America, and that is to put the Government in charge of power generation through hydroelectric plants throughout the United States and to distribute electric power throughout the United States. These private companies have millions and billions of dollars invested in the utility business, and they are acting for their own preservation.

I have no doubt that another reason for a fight that has arisen against TVA is because, according to common repute at least, Mr. Lilienthal is one of the spearheads back of this movement to convert all the valleys of the United States of America and their great basins into regional authorities. If the TVA-ites and Mr. Lilienthal would play and stay in their own backyard, I do not think they would be subjected to all this criticism.

As far as I am concerned, I have supported TVA ever since I have been in the Congress. I voted for every appropriation made for it. We have appropriated over $700,000,000 to TVA. It is not self-supporting—not by a long jump. We have appropriated over $700,000,000 to it, and we have permitted TVA to take all the income that is produced by the power that is generated through dams that were constructed by Federal money and use that money just as its management pleases without any accounting to the Congress of the United States. I am not fighting the TVA.

I have fought for REA. I am no special private power advocate. I have battled for REA in my State, and battled for REA throughout the United States, and have supported, I think, every appropriation made for and all legislation authorizing REA.

Mr. Lilienthal and the propagandists of TVA would do well if they would content themselves with their own valley, with which they seem to be so well satisfied, and not undertake to convert the great Missouri Basin into one great regional authority or the Columbia Basin or the Arkansas Basin or the Ohio Basin or the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

Mr. President, there is no resemblance whatsoever between the Tennessee Valley and these other great basins. TVA, as I said, is par excellence today a power project. But when we go into the Missouri Basin we go into a basin of vast resources, of diversified resources, of all kinds of interests of which the Tennessee Valley never dreamed or its inhabitants ever conceived. However, over this huge basin it is proposed to extend an authority like unto TVA, and that is largely in the interests of these propagandists for Government control of power production in the United States.

There is no irrigation in the TVA. There is no irrigation in the Tennessee Valley. Yet the arid and semiarid West depends upon irrigation for its fruitful crops, for the raising of its vast herds of cattle, for its beneficial uses of water.

There are certain laws and procedures in these Western States that provide for the use and control of water. Those laws, mostly embraced in what is known as the reclamation laws, have grown up through a large number of years and through the ripened experience of Congress. They are satisfactory to the people of the West and they are working splendidly. But the Missouri Valley Authority would, for the most part, repeal all those laws and set up an authority of three men to be appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate. They need not come from the Missouri Valley at all. These three men would exercise arbitrary power over the irrigation and control of the waters of the Missouri Basin.

Mr. President, the people in the Missouri Basin are undertaking to operate their own schools. They send their children to schools which are supported locally. But this Missouri Valley Authority gives to this three-board trusteeship autocratic control over the educational and cultural development of the great Missouri Basin.

The Senate Committee on Commerce held hearings which lasted for days in respect to the Missouri Valley Authority. They rose from the hearings and unanimously reported against the bill. Then the bill was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, composed largely of western Senators. That committee sat and heard the testimony pro and con with reference to the Missouri Valley Authority. I mention the Missouri Valley Authority because it is the only one which has been considered by any committee of Congress, although the effort is being made through pending bills to have such authorities created throughout the United States. The Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, after it had considered the bill, reported it unfavorably, with two exceptions. I think the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] and one other Senator voted for the bill.

I wish to read some of the things stated by the committee in its conclusions in reference to the Missouri Valley Authority bill. When I speak of the Missouri Valley Authority, it is just as though I were speaking of the Columbia Valley, the Arkansas Valley, and all the other valleys for which authorities are proposed, because very nearly the same problems are presented in each case and the same pattern of legislation is proposed for each.

A comprehensive plan has been proposed by the joint action of the Army Engineers of the Bureau of Reclamation with reference to the development of the Missouri Valley Basin. That plan had been adopted unanimously by the Congress. There had been no objection to it. Then all of a sudden the Missouri Valley Authority bill came along, to supplant the authority of the Bureau of Reclamation and the Army engineers, and to turn over this vast domain, with its almost limitless resources, to a group of neophytes and amateurs. It is proposed to get rid of the experienced men who have been dealing with these problems through years and generations, and turn them over to a three-man board. It is proposed to get rid of the Army engineers, with all their experience, and the engineers of the Bureau of Reclamation, and replace them with engineers of their own choosing. It is a great grasp for political power. Of course these two committees, composing over one-third of the membership of the United States Senate, rose as one man to condemn such nefarious legislation. I hope no such bill ever passes the Congress.

I was about to make a statement as to the conclusion reached by the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. Its conclusions are as follows:

(a) A comprehensive plan for the development of the resources of the Missouri River Basin has, after thorough consideration by the Congress, been adopted, and the initial stages thereof have been authorized for construction by the Bureau of Reclamation and the Army engineers. This plan provides a program of unified water and land resource development and control for the Missouri River Basin.

(b) Execution of the plan already approved by the Congress through existing Federal agencies, in cooperation with the States, assures proper emphasis on the primary needs of flood control and irrigation, and resolves conflicts between the uses of water. It assures, furthermore, that the plan will be carried out by experienced agencies.

(c) The existing laws and procedures provide for full integration of the activities of the established Federal agencies charged with the responsibility of prosecuting the several phases of water- and land-resource development. These policies and procedures protect States' rights and interests, State water law and provide full cooperation between the local, State, and Federal interests.

(d) The present organization of the Bureau of Reclamation affords the benefits of resource development on a regional basis without the objectionable features contained in S. 555.

That is the Missouri Valley Authority bill.

(e) Under S. 555, policies and laws respecting the use and control of water, heretofore established by the Congress, are in a large measure destroyed, and the State water laws and States' rights and interests in water and its utilization and control are not adequately preserved and protected. Provisions of S. 555, ostensibly designed for this purpose, are wholly inadequate.

(f) The Corps of Engineers of the United States Army and the Bureau of Reclamation would either be eliminated entirely from the Missouri Basin, or their activity curtailed at the will of the Authority. Other Federal land and water agencies operating in that basin would find it necessary in large measure to conform with the policies of the Authority. The laws under which these agencies now operate and basic provisions of the present reclamation law, would, so far as the Missouri Basin is concerned, be drastically changed by the repeal and other provisions of S. 555.

(g) Enactment of S. 555 would seriously delay the construction in the Missouri River Basin of works authorized to be constructed by the Bureau of Reclamation and by the Corps of Engineers—works that are badly needed in the area for reclamation and power development, for flood control and navigation.

(h) Enactment of S. 555 would create serious conflicts between existing agencies of the Government and the proposed MVA, conflicts between development in the Missouri Valley and development in adjoining river basins, and would make impossible the establishment and the carrying out of Nationwide policies and programs.

(i) S. 555 creates a Federal corporation with broad discretionary powers. The bill provides a means for the expansion of Government by Federal corporations. In essence, it is a proposal to create an instrument of government with questionable and irresponsible powers affecting the social, cultural, and economic welfare of the people in a large section of the United States. It is a proposal to create a corporation to plan and to establish for the people of the Missouri River Basin a physical, social, cultural, and economic pattern over which they would have little or no control.

That is what these Authority bills would do. The attempt is made to vest in the corporation to be created more powers than the Constitution of the United States vests in the Congress of the United States. To that extent it is unconstitutional; but it shows to what extent the propagandists of regional control go in their attempt to destroy the established agencies of the Government which have been dealing with these problems for years.

(j) The creation of authorities, along the lines proposed in S. 555, involves the surrender to Federal corporations of legislative powers that should be exercised by the Congress. It is contrary to democratic traditions and would do violence to accepted notions of constitutional government.

(k) Local autonomy is not assured by the enactment of measures such as S. 555. On the contrary, the people directly affected by the corporate form of government thus proposed would have no real control over its operations.

The report sums up as follows:

(l) The creation of an MVA would amount to the welding of economic and political powers resulting in nothing short of autocracy. It would mean the substitution of arbitrary power for democratic processes. It would means the creation of a superstate, neither Federal nor State, and not contemplated by our Constitution. It would subject the social, cultural, and economic welfare of the Missouri Basin to the dictates and whims of a three-man board, not responsible to the people and largely irresponsible to the Congress itself. It would constitute a virtual abdication by the Congress in favor of government by Federal corporations wielding autocratic powers. It would challenge State sovereignty and destroy systems of laws, both State and Federal, under which western agriculture has grown and prospered. It would throttle in the West the reclamation program which has been prosecuted through the years by an experienced agency and which has met with the approval of the Congress and of the people directly affected. It would permit a three-man board to avail itself of trust funds created for reclamation. It would be an excursion into an unchartered field of vast expenditures of public funds and of experimentation under a board unencumbered by the restraints that a democracy should erect against agencies of Government.

Mr. President, to repeat, I do not know why there was presented to the Senate at this time the speech by the able junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], followed by that of the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL]. There is no bill now pending in the Congress to do away with the TVA, or to modify or curtail its powers in any respect. I can only look upon it as a coordinated effort, such as the Senator from Alabama complains about, to create something to which the Senator from Alabama objects, namely a trust—not a private power trust, but a public power trust. I think that is the chief purpose behind the effort. The proponents of that philosophy wish the TVA theory extended throughout the United States, so as to exercise supreme control over the power development, water development, navigation, flood control, agriculture, industry, cultural education, and all the resources of the magnificent valleys of our land. I hope that no such action will ever be taken by the Congress of the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H. R. 2315. An act for the relief of Adele Nahas;

H. R. 3454. An act for the relief of William Clyde McKinney;

H. R. 4419. An act for the relief of Mrs. James Plumb;

H. R. 4997. An act for the relief of Ernest I. Wade and Alma Wade; and

H. R. 5071. An act for the relief of Mrs. Dora Foster.

The message also announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and joint resolution of the House:

H. R. 3185. An act for the relief of the estate of Senia Lassila, deceased;

H. R. 4160. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto;

H. R. 6601. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 307. Joint resolution to authorize the use of naval vessels to determine the effect of atomic weapons upon such vessels.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5244) to authorize the appointment of additional foreign-service officers in the classified grades; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. BLOOM, Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON, and Mr. EATON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3517) to authorize the admission into the United States of persons of races indigenous to India, to make them racially eligible for naturalization, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. LESINSKI, Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana, Mr. MCGEHEE, Mr. MASON, and Mr. REES of Kansas were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1654) to provide for the registration and protection of trade-marks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. BOYKIN, Mr. LANHAM, and Mr. HARTLEY were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 6335) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Office of the Secretary—Salaries," on page 2, line 2, after the word "elsewhere", to strike out "$1,243,063" and insert "$1,368,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 6, to insert:

WAR AGENCY LIQUIDATION

War Agency Liquidation: For all expenses necessary for liquidating the War Relocation Authority program provided for in Executive Order 9102 and in the President's message of June 12, 1944, to Congress (House Document 656, Seventy-eighth Congress), including personal services in the District of Columbia; travel expenses; printing and binding, $173,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, under the subhead "Office of Solicitor," on page 2, line 17, after the word "field", to strike out "$251,278" and insert "$267,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Division of Territories and Island Possessions," on page 2, line 20, after the name "District of Columbia", to strike out "$141,711" and insert "$167,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

CONTINUATION OF STANDING AND SELECT COMMITTEES

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, out of order, for the consideration of an original resolution which I report from the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. It merely deals with the continuation of standing and select committees, and it provides them the right to employ clerical assistance, hold hearings, and conduct investigations during the Seventy-ninth Congress, and continues that right until January 31, 1947. The resolution is offered because the Congress probably will adjourn sine die sometime during the coming month.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That all resolutions heretofore agreed to authorizing standing or select committees to employ clerical assistance, hold hearings, and conduct investigations during the Seventy-ninth Congress hereby are continued in full force and effect until January 31, 1947.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the resolution would prolong, would it not, the life of the committees until the next Congress?

Mr. LUCAS. It would prolong the life of any special or standing committees until January 31. It is the usual resolution which we adopt prior to adjourning sine die.

Mr. WHITE. The only thing that gives me hesitation is that I do not know whether we have any right to give authority to committees which will serve during the next Congress. I had supposed that the practice was to continue committees during the present Congress, and perhaps up to the beginning of a new Congress. But it is a new idea to me to undertake to extend the life of committees into the next Congress.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask that the Clerk read again the part of the resolution giving the date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Hereby are continued in full force and effect until January 31, 1947.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I may say to the able minority leader that that practice has been followed in the past. It merely keeps the committees in operation until such time as the new Congress can determine whether it wishes to continue them or to do away with them. In other words, the resolution covers both the standing committees and select committees, and it gives them the right to continue to operate when we return for the next session of Congress.

There is nothing irregular about the resolution. It is in the customary form, and it proposes what has been done for years.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think what the Senator from Illinois has said about standing committees is so, and he may be correct insofar as the other committees are concerned. The question arose in my mind as to whether we would be taking in a little more territory than perhaps we are authorized to take in.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to say to the Senator that I am only following the language of resolutions which heretofore have been approved by the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, for the purpose of continuing standing and special committees so that they will have continuity of life until the next session commences.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. We are still a long way from adjourning sine die; and there is no particular need to rush this measure through today, is there?

Mr. LUCAS. There is no particular need. If the Senator does not wish it to go through at this time, I shall withdraw it, so as to give him an opportunity to study the situation.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should like to study it, and I know there are a few Senators who are not present today who would like to have a similar opportunity.

Mr. LUCAS. I assume that the Senator does not wish to discontinue the right and power of a standing or select committee to meet and hold hearings after the Senate adjourns; does he?

Mr. BRIDGES. No. But there are a number of Senators who would like to have an opportunity to study the matter.

Mr. LUCAS. Very well; I shall withdraw the resolution. It is the customary, usual one. However, it seems a little difficult to have such resolutions adopted. I find that it is easy enough to have unusual resolutions adopted, but it seems a little difficult to get usual ones adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois withdraw the resolution?

Mr. LUCAS. I do.

COMPOSITION OF THE SUPREME COURT—PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which is introduced on behalf of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and myself. I request that the joint resolution be appropriately referred and printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 167) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, relating to the composition of the Supreme Court, introduced by Mr. EASTLAND (for himself and Mr. BRIDGES), was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc. (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The Supreme Court shall be composed of one chief justice and such number of associate justices, not fewer than 6 and not more than 10, as the Congress shall by law provide. Except as provided in section 2 of this article, such justices shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and shall hold office during good behavior.

"SEC. 2. Not more than three justices of the Supreme Court shall be appointed by any President. Should any vacancies in excess of three occur during the tenure of any President, such vacancies shall be filled by the House of Representatives from among persons holding office as judges of the inferior courts of the United States or of the courts of last resort of the several States, and who do not reside in a judicial circuit, as constituted at the date of ratification of this amendment, in which any other person holding office as a justice of the Supreme Court resided at the date of taking such office. In the filling of any such vacancy by the House of Representatives, the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote. A quorum for such purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. A person chosen by the House of Representatives to fill any such vacancy shall hold office as a justice of the Supreme Court only until another President takes office. Any such person who held office as a judge of an inferior court of the United States at the time he shall have been chosen as a justice of the Supreme Court shall, when he ceases to hold office as a justice of the Supreme Court, be restored to his former office as a judge of such inferior court; and any such person who held office as a judge of the court of last resort of any State at the time he shall have been chosen as a justice of the Supreme Court, shall, when he ceases to hold office as a justice of the Supreme Court, be entitled to such retirement pay as the Congress shall by law provide.

"SEC. 3. If more than three persons holding office as justices of the Supreme Court on the date of ratification of this article shall have been appointed by the same President, all persons holding such office who were appointed by such President, except the three first appointed, shall be retired and, regardless of age, shall be entitled to retirement pay in accordance with the laws relating to retirement in effect on such date.

"SEC. 4. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within 7 years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress."

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, a few days ago in a public statement addressed to the Judiciary Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, Mr. Justice Jackson, who is currently engaged in a controversy with Mr. Justice Black, stated, "The controversy goes to the reputation of the Court for nonpartisan and unbiased decision." I know nothing about the facts. However, Mr. Justice Jackson's charges are very serious, and I hope they will be thoroughly investigated by the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, no matter how this controversy terminates, it will not settle the deplorable condition in which the American people find themselves with their present Supreme Court. There are some able men on the bench, and what I have to say does not apply to all of them. More largely it applies to the condition of confusion, perplexity, and bewilderment in which the people of America find themselves as a result of indescribable and inexcusable chaos which exists within the Supreme Court, and does not apply to individuals as such. However, Mr. President, a number of men who now sit upon the Court do not have the proper legal background, judicial temperament, or the ability to sit upon the world's greatest legal tribunal and to decide fundamental questions upon which the very system of our Government, as we know it, depends. There have been many explanations of the cause of this condition, and some students of government have expressed the opinion that these men were appointed because of their economic and social ideologies and their zest for crusading, rather than for their judicial knowledge and legal acumen. It is further the opinion of the bench and bar, Mr. President, that some of the members of the present Court are mediocre and do not measure up to the high traditions of the Court. It has likewise been widely commented upon in the press that some of them came from the classroom, some came from legislative chambers, and some came from out of the whirls of political exigencies. Few of them came, as they should have, from a high position in the legal profession or an eminent place upon the bench.

Mr. President, what is the present situation in which this Court has placed the American people? In the history of the Republic, the Supreme Court of the United States has rendered decisions in 35 cases overruling earlier decisions which expressed controlling principles of law which governed the liberties of the citizens and the rights and powers of the States. In other words, in the entire history of the country, the Supreme Court has rendered 35 important decisions which have overruled former fundamental decisions of the Court. Of this number of cases, the present Court, since January 1, 1939, has rendered 13 decisions which directly and pointedly overruled earlier decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. Thus we find that in the short space of 7 years the present Court has rendered approximately 40 percent of all the decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States in the history of the Republic overruling previous fundamental decisions. These decisions were the basic law of the land. Upon them the rights and liberties of the American people depend. While no one contends that law is or should be static, for on the contrary it is a living, breathing thing, yet it nonetheless depends upon stability for its very life; and established principles should be overturned with great reluctance. We find ourselves with a Court, which often is charged with being the weakest in the history of the Republic, a Court which now is engaged in changing the fundamental law of the United States and overruling the considered opinions of their great and illustrious predecessors whom the American people know were learned in the law. It is inherent in our system of government that there must be permanency and consistency in the laws of the land and in the rights of the people under those laws; but this necessary consistency, Mr. President, has been destroyed. The inferior courts and the people of this country do not know what the law is or what their rights are, because of the confusion created by the present Supreme Court. I said the present Court has directly made approximately 40 percent of all decisions which have overruled previous fundamental decisions by the Supreme Court. Mr. President, the decisions constituting that 40 percent do not include the numerous decisions rendered by the present Court which by implication overrule or partially overrule other decisions, with the result that today there is chaos in the jurisprudence of the United States.

Mr. President, to add to the confusion resulting from the overruling of former opinions, the present Court, from January 12, 1942, to June 10, 1946—a period of 4 years—has affirmed 306 cases and reversed 336. Let us contrast the record of the present Court with the record of the Supreme Court from 1916 to 1920. During that 4-year period the United States Supreme Court affirmed 575 cases from the lower courts and reversed 304 cases.

Mr. President, this is the first time in the history of the Republic when any appellate court, over a period of years, has reversed and remanded more cases from inferior courts than it has affirmed.

Do these contrasted epochs imply that the inferior courts and State supreme courts have declined in prestige and learning, and that the United States Supreme Court has increased in capacity? I do not think so. It rather implies, I think, that the United States Supreme Court has dwindled in influence and prestige. I will show why.

Let us contrast the record of the Supreme Court in the past 4 years of 306 cases affirmed and 336 cases reversed and compare this record of reversals with that of three States selected by the Library of Congress at random upon being asked for one eastern State, one western State, and one southern State. The Library of Congress selected Connecticut, Colorado, and Virginia.

For the 4-year period the Supreme Court of Connecticut affirmed 294 cases and reversed 156. The Supreme Court of Colorado affirmed 287 cases and reversed 179. The Supreme Court of Virginia affirmed 262 and reversed 240, but in the State of Virginia the writs dismissed which constitute affirmances of the lower courts were under a different procedure from that which obtains in the other two States. As a matter of fact, the reversals in Virginia were not so great as in the other States which I have named. It can be argued that the poor record of the Supreme Court of the United States may be accounted for by the chaos which exists in the opinions rendered by the Supreme Court itself. Let us examine this feature.

To compound the confusion still further, this Court has plagued the people with an abnormally high number of split decisions. For a 4-year period, from 1941 to 1945, the present Court, according to figures which appeared in the Washington Star under date of June 16, 1946, rendered 850 split decisions, and a goodly percentage of them were decided by one vote. Again let us contrast these figures with the decisions of the Court from 1916 to 1920. Let us remember that this was the period made famous by the dissents of Brandeis and Holmes. During this period of time the Supreme Court, out of 1,021 cases, had only 196 split decisions and a mere 27 were decided by one vote. Mr. President, it is utterly inexcusable that hundreds of cases should be decided by a split decision of any court, and the fact that such a situation has been associated with the United States Supreme Court demonstrates nothing but incompetence on the part of the Court.

Mr. President, the facts to which I have referred are startling. A 5 to 4 decision is not persuasive of the righteousness of any decision, and it does not settle and set at rest the doubts of litigants, or effect the clarification of the law. Moreover, these decisions create grave doubts as to the competency of the Court as a whole.

Mr. President, the people of this country are sick of the bickering, the internal schism, and the floating of rumors and petty factionalism in their highest judicial tribunal. The people desire a Court which is above such things and emblematic of the great traditions of the Nation. In view of the internal schisms of the present Court, its dissension and the temperament of its members are a reflection not only upon the membership of the Court but upon the Congress which permits such a situation to exist.

There is no doubt in my mind that the present Court does not hesitate to legislate but has, in many instances, usurped the power and prerogatives of the Congress, and upon occasions, has actually argued that the plain words of the statutes do not mean what they state. If I recall correctly Mr. Justice Frankfurter's famous statement, that is exactly what he said. There is no doubt in my mind that this legislaiton by the Court is to favor particular groups whose claims have in due course been presented and failed of enactment in Congress. In fact, there appears to be the purpose of the Court to bring about by judicial decisions a social and economic revolution to suit the predilection of its members. Mr. President, what American institution is safe with such a Court and where, Mr. President, does it leave the power of Congress?

Mr. President, it is necessary that the Justices of the Supreme Bench possess judicial temperament, and that in their decisions they shall announce the law regardless of their economic and social beliefs; and, further, that their judgment be not colored by their personal feelings in any matter. According to Justice Jackson, in his message to the Judiciary Committee of Congress, an attempt was made by one of the Justices to rush a decision in order to influence a collective-bargaining agreement which was at that time under negotiation. This is a very serious charge. I do not know whether it is true or not. It involves only one Justice. But, Mr. President, I am of the opinion that the present Court often plays sociological favorites, and that all men do not stand before it upon the same plane of equality before the law. Further, Mr. President, I do not believe that in its decisions the Court grants the same fair, even-handed justice to which all litigants are entitled. This is my personal opinion, and I believe it is likewise the opinion of the overwhelming numbers of the bench and bar of America.

I do not level this charge against every member of the Court, but take the case of the United States v. Local 807 (315 U. S. 521), wherein the Court held the law of robbery and extortion does not apply to a labor organization which interferes with the movement of goods in interstate commerce. This was an outrageous decision which prostituted an act of Congress. In his dissenting opinion Chief Justice Stone stated that this decision would make the crime of robbery an innocent pastime. Mr. President, the present Court, in my judgment, does not possess, with the bar, with the judiciary, or with the American people the reputation for nonpartisan, unbiased decisions. In public esteem it today is at the lowest point of any branch of our Government in the history of the country. Throughout the history of this country the Supreme Court, as a rule, has been composed of outstanding members of the bar. It has been composed of great lawyers whose judicial integrity and competence were above reproach. Until the present time the Court has held the esteem, the confidence, and the respect of the American people as has no other branch of our Government. It has been the balance wheel, Mr. President, which through stress and storm, through partisanship and through the whims of the moment, has kept America anchored to the fundamental principles of freedom, human liberty, and the rights of man upon which this Government was founded. The very strongest safeguard of liberty, the very bedrock of the American Republic in public respect, esteem, and confidence in the courts of this Nation. The people of the country discount many acts of the Congress as being dictated by expediency and the politics of the moment. Many acts of the executive branch of the Government have also been discounted for the same reasons by the American people. But the belief that the Supreme Court was a fair, unbiased guardian of the rights, liberties, and privileges of the individual citizen was the most important and sacred thing in our system. The Court has so acted in the past, it has been a tribunal which has zealously protected the rights of the weak against the strong, the liberties of the individual against the impulses of the moment, and the rights of the States against the encroachments, trespasses, and transgressions of Federal power. All this, Mr. President, is a thing of the past and the American people today look upon their highest judicial tribunal as bereft of unity, spent by dissension, and torn by the bickerings of factions. In fact, they discount its avowed high motives and judge it with distrust and suspicion. It is a sad day for America that this last great citadel of human freedom has been thus compromised. To say the very least, the high pedestal on which the Court formerly rested has been brought low and its effectiveness has been destroyed.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I wonder if the Senator does not realize that the Supreme Court has been dealing with questions which were most keenly controversial, upon which opinion among the public of the United States itself, and, indeed, in the Congress, has been sharply divided. Is it not more or less natural that in matters which are so controversial there should be sharp differences of opinion, and that when such opinions, amounting to deep-rooted convictions, are held, there should be even some exhibition of intensity in the expression of those opinions and convictions?

Mr. EASTLAND. The distinguished Senator from Florida was not present when I gave the figures on the reversals, the split decisions, the compromises, the 5 to 4 decisions, and when I stated that there is utterly no excuse for competent judges to be so divided on the law. It is something which not only has never happened on the Supreme Bench before in our history, but it is a condition which is not present in the courts of last resort in the States. I gave figures as to an eastern State, a western State, and a southern State.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. But does not the able Senator recognize that there is some distinction to be made between the United States Supreme Court and the highest appellate courts of the several States?

Mr. EASTLAND. There is certainly a great distinction to be made between the present United States Supreme Court, which has sunk so low in public esteem and confidence, and the great Court which we have had throughout the history of this Republic until the present time. I have drawn that distinction in my remarks.

Mr. PEPPER. I was not asking the Senator to express his opinion of which one deserves the higher commendation, but I meant to ask if there was not in the Senator's opinion some difference in the nature of the questions which were to be decided, and is not something to be said for the more controversial character of the decisions the United States Supreme Court has to render as against the decisions of the several State courts?

Mr. EASTLAND. I do not think so.

Mr. PEPPER. For example, I remind the Senator that many times the United States Supreme Court is called upon to pass on such questions as the meaning of the due-process clause, for which there is no definition laid down in the United States Constitution. It is largely a matter of interpretation, and to a considerable extent it is the opinion of the Court itself which gives meaning to the language, general in character as it is in the Federal Constitution, whereas there are not many instances of that kind found in State decisions.

Mr. EASTLAND. The split decisions have been so many as to outrage reason, and there is no possible excuse for great lawyers so to divide.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator will yield one more time, when there is a split court, I am not sure there is anyone who is capable of being the arbiter as to which side is right. The very intensity of the convictions of the judges upon these controversial questions, I dare say, is what gives rise to the 5 to 4 decisions, or split decisions, but surely the Senator is not suggesting that that has not happened in the past.

Mr. EASTLAND. I do not think the decisions which face the Court today are greater in difficulty than the decisions which faced the Supreme Court of the United States in the past, and we certainly have not had this condition, we certainly have not had this great number of split decisions, which today run into the hundreds, when there was a very low percentage heretofore.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and I have drawn a joint resolution for amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which we ask the Congress to submit to the States, which I shall discuss now, and which I think will cure the situation.

Mr. PEPPER. I merely wanted to submit that there are some of us who regretted before that there was such unfortunate unanimity in the court in an older day, in the wrong direction.

Mr. EASTLAND. I do not think it was in the wrong direction. I think the people of this country had confidence in their Supreme Court, and in their judiciary at that time, and I do not think such public confidence among all classes of people exists today.

Mr. President, the American people and Congress cannot permit this condition to continue. There must be action to remedy the situation, and I have this day, in conjunction with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, the amendment provides that the Supreme Court shall be composed of one Chief Justice and such number of Associate Justices, from 6 to 10, as the Congress shall by law provide. The number was limited to 10 to prevent some future President and Congress from packing the Supreme Court. The Justices are to be appointed by the President, as now provided by the Constitution. But the amendment provides further that not more than three of the Justices shall be appointed by any one President, and should any vacancies in excess of three occur during the tenure of any President, such vacancies shall be filled by the House of Representatives from among persons holding offices as judges of the inferior courts of the United States, or from the appellate courts of the last resort of the several States.

The amendment provides further that no one shall be so elected an interim Justice of the Supreme Court who comes from a judicial circuit as constituted at the date of ratification of the amendment when any of the Justices of the Supreme Court are residents of that circuit. This is to give the proper geographical balance to the Court.

In electing such Justices, Mr. President, the votes of the House of Representatives shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote. This is the identical system which is provided in the Constitution for the election of the President of the United States by the House of Representatives. A Justice so elected to fill any such vacancy shall hold office as a Justice of the Supreme Court only until another President shall take office. The other President can then fill the vacancy as provided originally by the Constitution. Then the Justice shall go back to his former position as a judge of an inferior court or of the court of last resort of one of the States.

Section 3 of the amendment, Mr. President, is very important, and is aimed at the present situation which confronts the country. It provides:

> If more than three persons holding office as Justices of the Supreme Court on the date of ratification of this article shall have been appointed by the same President, all persons holding such office who were appointed by such President, except the three first appointed, shall be retired and, regardless of age, shall be entitled to retirement pay in accordance with the laws relating to retirement in effect on such date.

Under this section all members of the present Court who were appointed by President Roosevelt, with the exception of the first three appointees, shall be retired from the Bench, and shall be entitled to retirement pay in accordance with the laws relating to retirement in effect on the date of the ratification of the amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Did I understand the Senator to say that under the proposed amendment there would be an alteration in the present personnel of the Supreme Bench?

Mr. EASTLAND. I did.

Mr. PEPPER. I recall that there was a great hue and cry when it was proposed that the personnel of that Bench be altered, as was proposed a few years ago by President Roosevelt, the suggestion being that that was a Presidential packing of the Court. Would not this be called congressional packing of the Court?

Mr. EASTLAND. Certainly not, because it would be a matter submitted to the States and ratified by the people of this country.

Mr. PEPPER. But it would be for the purpose of changing the present personnel of the Court?

Mr. EASTLAND. It would be for the purpose of getting a competent Supreme Court.

Mr. PEPPER. But it would be for the purpose of changing the present personnel of the Court?

Mr. EASTLAND. Four of the present Justices; yes. I think it is something which the people of America generally, the people of the South, and the people of the State of Florida all favor.

Mr. PEPPER. I am sorry; I did not hear the last statement of the Senator.

Mr. EASTLAND. I say, I am sure it is something the people of the country, of the South, and of the Senator's State of Florida, would favor.

Mr. PEPPER. I would hope not, Mr. President, because I am afraid that if the Congress were to lend its efforts to the changing of the present personnel of the Court, it never could in history attack anybody else for packing the Court and getting the kind of Court he wanted.

Mr. EASTLAND. This is certainly not packing the Court. It is submitting a measure to the people of the country in the constitutional way, as the Constitution provides shall be done. It is unpacking the Court.

Except that President Truman would have another appointment to make out his list of three, all other vacancies would then be filled by the House of Representatives under the identical system by which the President is elected. These men would be interim appointees, serving until their places were filled by a new President, as provided by law.

Why are these interim Justices not appointed for life, Mr. President? It is because we desire to maintain the appointment of the Justices by the President in the same manner as provided by the "founding fathers" in the Constitution. We simply desire to correct the abuse of permitting any one President to have complete control of the Court and to correct the present deplorable situation which now confronts the country by the forced retirement of four Justices out of eight who were appointed in the Roosevelt administration. Not only does the plan prevent one President from gaining dominance of the Court, but it fits in with our two-party system of the Government. Not since the Civil War has one party ever had control of the Presidency for a longer term than 16 years. Granting that a President is renominated by his party, there have been only two instances, unless death intervened, where Presidents of one party under this plan could appoint more than six Justices to the Supreme Court. The other vacancies would be appointed by the House of Representatives. Under our system of Government the legislative, executive, and judicial branches are equal and independent of the other.

When any President of the United States, regardless of who he is, appoints a majority of the membership of the Supreme Court, then that President dominates the Court and the independence of the judiciary as contemplated in the Constitution is destroyed. No other President, since Grover Cleveland, has appointed anything like enough judges to control the Court except in two instances, and because of this our Supreme Court has been free and independent of the Executive. There have been two glaring examples of what happens when a President appoints a majority of the Supreme Court. William Howard Taft in one Presidential term named five Justices. The Court, as appointed by President Taft and his predecessors, was often criticized as being too conservative. President Franklin Roosevelt was the other example and the Court which he appointed has taken the other extreme.

We can thus see, Mr. President, that when any President of the United States has appointed more than three Justices to the Supreme Court, the Court has been subject to criticism of the bitterest kind. Under this plan no President, regardless of how many terms he may serve as President, can ever appoint a majority of the Supreme Court and he cannot, therefore, dominate that Court. The advantages under this system of promoting an interim judge from an inferior court will also assure the Court, as a rule, of a judge of judicial temperament and an experienced jurist.

This amendment is not an assault upon the judiciary. It is not an assault by the legislative branch upon the judicial branch of the Government. By this proposal the legislative branch of the Government merely proposes that the Constitution be amended in a lawful way to prohibit an abuse which experience has proven is inimicable to our constitutional system. We merely seek a reform of the present conditions according to constitutional processes. It is done by the people themselves.

This reform is imperative, Mr. President. This country cannot go on as it is. We must have an independent, competent Court of Judges with no special ends to serve. We cannot permit the judiciary of America to be brought further into disrepute. We cannot permit the rights of our citizens to be swept away by a Court bent upon legislating social reforms which have failed of passage in Congress. There must be fixed values and responsibilities in America. There must be a competent unbiased Court to interpret them.

The system of interim Judges will not be abused for the reason that experience over the past half century has shown that few Presidents have ever appointed more than three Judges of the Supreme Court. I place in the RECORD, Mr. President, the number of Justices and Chief Justices appointed by President Truman and by seven of his predecessors.

If the Congress of the United States does not speedily submit this amendment to the States, then I shall propose to the several States, Mr. President, that they initiate this amendment to the Constitution and directly bring about this much-needed correction of the difficulties in which we find ourselves. It is our high duty to give to the American people outstanding Judges whose judicial integrity and ability is recognized by all. We must return to the people a Court undominated by any group, the fearless, independent, impartial arbiter, and the guardian of the indestructible rights of man.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator referred to the appointment by my father of five Justices of the Supreme Court, and spoke of those Justices as particularly being considered to be conservative. I may say that my father appointed six judges, if we include the promotion of Justice White from Associate Justice to be Chief Justice. Of the six he appointed, three were Democrats. White himself was a Democrat from Louisiana, Lurton was a Democrat from Tennessee, and Lamar was a Democrat from Georgia. Those gentlemen, I think, were in no case particularly conservative. The other three were Republicans.

Mr. EASTLAND. I agree entirely with the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. I merely wanted to make that statement for the RECORD.

Mr. EASTLAND. It is my personal opinion that the Justices appointed by the Senator's father were great Justices. I merely stated that the Court was criticized as being too conservative. I believe that to be an accurate statement.

Mr. TAFT. I think the criticism of the Court for being conservative came a good deal later. The three Republicans appointed were Hughes, Pitney, and Van Devanter. The only one of the six who, I think, was considered to be unduly conservative was Van Devanter. As a matter of fact Lurton, Lamar, and Pitney died rather shortly after they were appointed, so that their particular predilections did not materially affect the general character of the Court for many years.

DECREASE OF LIMIT OF THE NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that the Chair lay down a bill coming over from the House of Representatives respecting the limitation of the national debt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 6699) to decrease the amount of obligations issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act outstanding at any one time, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it will be remembered that the Senate has passed a bill, S. 1760, limiting the national debt to $275,000,000,000. The bill was duly reported from the Committee on Finance and was passed by the Senate. The House has passed a different measure, but in effect the same, that is limiting the debt to $275,000,000,000. The House has taken the view that it was a revenue matter and affected the revenue, and ought to have originated in the House. The distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is the author of the bill, and I think under the circumstances the Senate would be willing immediately to consider the House bill without reference to a committee, since we have already passed a similar bill.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Do I understand that the House has now taken the position which certain Senators on this side took on the British loan, that anything dealing with the bond limit should originate in the House of Representatives?

Mr. GEORGE. At least the House said that this limitation of the national debt to $275,000,000,000 under the Second Liberty Loan Act was a measure affecting revenue and should have originated in the House. So the House proceeded to pass a similar bill with some slight, trivial changes, and sent it back to the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. The House seems to have supported the position of the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] that a bill which authorized an increase of the national debt, as the British loan bill did, should originate in the House of Representatives. Is that not correct?

Mr. GEORGE. That may be, but the Ways and Means Committee of the House did not have jurisdiction of the British loan.

Mr. President, I now ask for the immediate consideration and passage of the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill H. R. 6699, to decrease the amount of obligations issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act which may be outstanding at any one time, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 6335) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, we now have under consideration House bill 6335, making appropriations for the Department of the Interior. I wish to make a few brief remarks in connection with a portion of that bill. The appropriation included in the bill for the Missouri Valley Basin and other items for the Bureau of Reclamation might well be entitled "A bill to insure the future food supply of the East." It is primarily the great eastern cities that will benefit from this bill, for it is their food supply which is at stake.

Mr. President, peace and food are the two most important items in the world at the present time. They have always been so. We have seldom had less of either. We can accept as an axiom, also, that we will not have peace until we have food for all the peoples of the earth. War, drouth, or flood, with all of the attendant miseries of each of them, would each constitute a world disaster. We have all three of them present in international proportions.

It is a fallacy in our thinking, however, to believe that hunger is something that concerns only Europe and Asia. The fact is that hunger stalks here at home. Our food shelves are getting bare, and butter and meat are practically unobtainable. This is not due to shipments abroad. Wheat is the only major food that we are exporting in large quantities. We are short of other foods because we simply do not produce enough to feed our own people.

It is true we used to think we had too much of some crops, but that was never really the case. At times the farmer has produced more than he could sell profitably, but never more than was really needed. Now that most of our citizens are employed at good wages and salaries, we can see clearly that we do not have too much. We do not have enough. Furthermore, our consuming population is increasing slowly but steadily—a million a year. Mr. President, our food problem of the future will be one of shortage, not surplus.

Where shal' we get our food supply of the future?

Mr. President, this appropriation bill is, I believe, only the first step in a gigantic program to assure our future food supply, by increasing food production in the only way that it can be increased—by expanding our acreage of irrigated land in the West.

Let me make a few comparisons to show how dependent is the industrial East on the agricultural West for its food supply. I have had compiled some figures on the per capita food production of the nine Northeastern States, namely, New England, plus New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey, compared with the nine States of our Missouri Valley—Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, North Dakota, Colorado, Wyoming, and Montana.

This industrial area produces only 3 bushels of corn per capita, while the Missouri Valley States produce 112, and Nebraska, 250.

The Northeastern States produced less than 1 bushel of wheat per capita. In the Missouri Valley, the production was 44; in Nebraska, 27 per capita.

The industrial area produced only 1 pound of creamery butter per capita; the Missouri Valley, 44; and Nebraska, 61; and that does not include the butter churned on the farm.

The industrial areas produced 24 pounds of beef per capita; the Missouri Valley, 722; Nebraska, 967. The industrial areas produced 8 pounds of pork, the Missouri Valley, 717; Nebraska, 907; with respect to mutton the industrial areas did not register at all, although they eat most of it; the States of the Missouri Valley produced 101 per capita; Nebraska, 99 pounds per capita.

In fact, the Missouri Valley is the best provider in the Nation, and one of the few places capable of producing more food. As it is we produce one-half of the bread of this country, one-fifth of the butter, one-sixth of the pork, one-fifth of the beef, one-fourth of the mutton, and one-third of the wool. Nebraska alone makes twice as much butter as New York, New Jersey, and Delaware, or twice as much as all six of the New England States.

Still we are not producing enough, even on this prolific scale. The indisputable fact is that we do not have enough to go around, and it appears we are going to have less.

This brings the problem right back to the question: Where can we produce more food? There is only one answer—reclamation of the acreage that is now lying idle and power development—to help finance these projects and make life more livable on the farm.

Under the present plans for the Missouri Valley alone, the Pick-Sloan plan contemplates the irrigation of 5,000,000 additional acres by surface or gravity irrigation. This does not include many small projects which will ultimately be developed. Nearly 1,000,000 acres of this development are in Nabraska alone, and we can irrigate probably another million acres by the use of subsurface water—that is, by pump irrigation. Every acre irrigated supplements 3 to 4 acres of grazing land. This adds up to between twenty and thirty million additional acres to be benefited, and would save us from slaughtering our herds in the dry years. This area is the source of our future food supply.

The bill we are now considering will take the first steps toward realization of this program. I would like to emphasize that we cannot wait. Our people are leaving the farm. About 200,000 left the valley during the drought years. Nine and seven-tenths percent more left during the war years, and once they have left it is hard to get them back. Figures compiled by the Federal land bank of our area show that less than 50 percent of the veterans from the farm are returning to the farm. This is immediately reflected in less food for the Nation. Unless these population trends are reversed, there will not be enough people left on the farms to grow the crops. We must make farming more profitable and more stable and take away some of the drudgery by expanding the use of electricity. This bill is a good step in that direction.

Mr. President, the action of our Appropriations Committee in restoring the drastic reductions made by the House is very gratifying to me. I have no doubt that these appropriations will be approved by the Senate. But I hope our colleagues representing us in the conference committee will not now rest on their oars and permit these appropriations to be whittled away in conference. I feel sure they will not. I feel sure they realize as well as I that our future food supply is at stake.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD at this point some statistical tables furnished me by the secretary of the Nebraska Reclamation Association. All the figures are drawn from official sources. The crop and meat statistics were prepared under the direction of A. E. Anderson, Nebraska State crop statistician, who is also associated with the Department of Agriculture. Other figures were from the Bureau of Reclamation.

These statements showing the production of beef, pork, and mutton, also the production of corn, wheat, and butter, on a per capita basis, by States, will be interesting as well as profitable to all who are interested in solving our food problems.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 20, to strike out:

PETROLEUM CONSERVATION DIVISION

For all salaries and expenses necessary for administering and enforcing the provisions of the act of February 22, 1935, as amended (15 U. S. C., ch. 15A), and for cooperation with Federal and State authorities in the production and conservation of oil and gas, including personal services in the District of Columbia; travel expenses; contract stenographic reporting services; stationery and office supplies; not to exceed $2,500 for printing and binding; and the maintenance, operation, and repair of passenger-carrying vehicles, $216,908.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

OIL AND GAS DIVISION

Oil and Gas Division: For all expenses necessary for coordinating and unifying policies and administration of Federal activities relative to oil, gas, and synthetic fuels, including cooperation with the petroleum industry and State authorities in the production, processing, and utilization of petroleum and petroleum products, natural gas, and synthetic fuels and the compilation of technical reports thereon, for administering and enforcing the provisions of the act of February 22, 1935, as amended (15 U. S. C., ch. 15A); and for the liquidation of the Petroleum Administration for War; including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; not to exceed $10,000 for employment of a director without regard to the civil service and classification laws; travel expenses; contract stenographic reporting services; printing and binding; and the purchase (not to exceed five), maintenance, operation, and repair of passenger automobiles; $449,516.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 4, to insert:

DIVISION OF GEOGRAPHY

Salaries and expenses: For all necessary expenses of the Division of Geography, in performing the duties imposed upon the Secretary by Executive Order 6680, dated April 17, 1934, relating to uniform usage in regard to geographic nomenclature and orthography throughout the Federal Government, including personal services in the District of Columbia, stationery and office supplies, and printing and binding, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses, Department of the Interior," page 5, line 18, after the word "automobiles", to insert "hire of aircraft"; on page 6, line 1, after the word "binding", to strike out "$224,460" and insert "$263,500"; and in line 8, after the words "Grazing Service", to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$4,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Commission of Fine Arts," on page 6, line 21, after the word "Commission", to strike out "$7,926" and insert "$11,900."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bonneville Power Administration," on page 6, line 24, after the word "system", to strike out "For" and insert "To enable the Bonneville Power Administrator to carry out the duties imposed upon him pursuant to law, including the."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, this is an important appropriation bill, and there is a difference of opinion on the question. I am therefore inclined to suggest the absence of a quorum, but shall not do so at the moment.

Mr. President, the House Appropriations Committee made a record-breaking cut in the Interior Department appropriation bill for 1947 (H. R. 6335) before reporting it to the House, and the House accepted most of the recommendations of its committee. The Budget estimate totaled $346,765,830 and the amount voted by the House totalled only $179,426,846—a cut of nearly one-half. But during the debate in the House some skeptical Members expressed the thought that "in another place" an effort would be made to restore the cuts. This skepticism was, it appears, more than justified. The bill now submitted to the Senate by the Senate Appropriations Committee recommends appropriations totaling $329,337,438, which means that a net restoration totaling $149,910,561 is recommended.

If the bill as recommended by the Senate Appropriations Committee becomes a law, then the effort of the House Committee to curb what it called "inefficient and gross extravagance in certain agencies in the Department of the Interior" will fail. The Department of the Interior will be given appropriations for 1947 exceeding those of 1946 by $125,811,025. Practically without exception, every bureau and office in the Department will have more to spend than ever before, and during the war the appropriations of most of these bureaus and offices swelled enormously. The point I am making is very simple. The Senate, by approving the recommendations of its Appropriations Committee, will be throwing its weight against a sincere attempt at economy by the House. I intend, therefore, to offer amendments which will give those Members of the Senate who favor economy a chance to go on record as disapproving certain of the recommendations of the Appropriations Committee.

I am, of course, ready to admit that the cut made by the House was severe and that, in some respects, it may have been too severe. For example, the appropriation provided for the Grazing Service was inadequate. I believe also that the House was too severe toward the National Park Service, the Fish and Wild Life Service, and the Bureau of Indian Affairs. But it was not too severe toward many other bureaus. Take, for example, the Geological Survey. The House subcommittee called attention to the "skyrocketing appropriations" for this Bureau. In 1939 and 1940 it had appropriations of approximately $3,000,000; in 1946 it had $7,816,900; and for 1947 it asked for $13,166,000. The House cut this request to $7,993,445—an appropriation slightly in excess of that for 1946—and in doing so expressed the opinion that it was being "extremely generous."

Mr. President, at this time I should like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee a question. I previously raised the point of having a quorum call because, frankly, I disagree with some of the amendments, and I should like to have them discussed and have a record vote taken on them.

But if it would suit the purpose of the Senator from Arizona to have the Senate act on the amendments as to which there is no objection or question, I should be perfectly willing to have that done. Then tomorrow the Senate could go into the details of the controversial admendments.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, that arrangement will be satisfactory and it will expedite the final consideration of the bill. If there are any items which the Senator from New Hampshire feels should be passed over, I shall be glad to have him point them out. I know of two or three matters which certain Senators would like to have passed over.

Mr. BRIDGES. I shall offer some amendments to the portions of the bill dealing with the Bureau of Reclamation, the general fund, construction, the Geological Survey, the Bureau of Mines, and the Government in the Territories. So, cannot we take up the other amendments and act upon them, and then tomorrow begin to consider the ones as to which I and other Senators propose to offer amendments?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. Under that arrangement we can now proceed with the amendments; and whenever we reach an amendment which the Senator wishes to have passed over, perhaps he will indicate it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will proceed to state the amendments of the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, in line 24——

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I did not understand that we had reached that point.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; we have.

Mr. MOORE. I wish to call attention to an item on page 3.

Mr. HAYDEN. I assume that the Senator from Oklahoma refers to the Oil and Gas Division amendment on page 3. In order that the Senator may inquire about it, Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the committee amendment on page 3, in lines 8 to 24, was agreed to, be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment on page 3, lines 8 to 24, was agreed to, is reconsidered, and the amendment is before the Senate.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, now that the matter is before the Senate again, let me ask what the Senator's inquiry is.

Mr. MOORE. I am glad the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is in the Chamber, because I have talked with him about this matter, and probably he knows more about the purpose than I do and is better able to explain.

It seems to me that the amendment would increase the appropriation by approximately $240,000. The reason for that is set out under a proposal to strike out the Petroleum Conservation Division and to substitute for it an Oil and Gas Division.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. Let me explain to the Senator that this item is based upon a supplemental estimate submitted after the bill passed the House. In the estimate it is stated that the Petroleum Conservation Division has been abolished. The Oil and Gas Division has been created in its place. It has the purpose of coordinating under one head the entire activities of the Department of the Interior relating to petroleum or oil and gas.

The Senator's colleague from Oklahom [Mr. THOMAS] was present at the hearings. We had Mr. Ralph K. Davies before us.

Mr. MOORE. I think I can obviate any further explanation, because I myself heard some explanation at the hearing which was held before the Special Committee of which the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is chairman. There Mr. Davies and others gave the reason for the substitution. As I understand the matter, the creation of this new agency is done by means of nothing but an Executive order, evidently in contemplation of a proposal under the reorganization plan to set up this bureau. Of course, that proposal has not been made. So at this time, prior to a proposal for such a consolidation, I see no reason whatever for creating a new agency. If that is to be done under the reorganization bill, why should we now proceed to create this agency, which could be nothing more than a temporary one?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, let me say that it seemed to me it was made clear yesterday, at the meeting of Special Committee to Investigate Petroleum Resources, at which the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE] was present, that the purpose of the appropriation which is added by this item to the regular appropriation for the administration of the Petroleum Conservation Division, which administers the so-called Connally "Hot Oil" Act, is to enable a new Oil and Gas Division to make a survey of the activities of other executive agencies and departments having to do with petroleum, and thereby make a recommendation to the President for the exercise of his authority under the Reorganization Act. If we do not allow the two-hundred-thousand-odd dollars which will be necessary to enable Mr. Davies to have the staff he will need, then it will be impossible for the executive branch of the Government to study what is being done in the Commerce Department with respect to oil, what is being done in the State Department with respect to oil, what is being done in the OPA or any other emergency agency with respect to oil, and to make a recommendation for the coordination of all such activities.

At the hearing yesterday, Mr. President, it was made clear that it will be the purpose of the Oil and Gas Division to consult with Congress, with the committees of Congress, in preparing any recommendations which are to be made.

As a result of the very complete inquiry which we had yesterday, I feel that it is in the interest of coordinating the activities of some 27 different Federal agencies that this appropriation be provided.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, it seems to me that the appropriation is premature. It would be perfectly proper for the President to make a recommendation or to submit a plan under the Reorganization Act. At that time a plan for the consolidation of the various agencies which have to do with oil could be thoroughly explored. But for the time being to put in a new man, in the person of Mr. Davies, who himself would be the head of a temporary agency for that purpose, would be entirely futile and would not be in accordance with the procedure we usually follow.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will bear with me, I think he will see that the contrary is the fact. There is now pending before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate a reorganization order which was issued by the President in compliance with the Reorganization Act.

Mr. MOORE. And it is having a thorough hearing.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let me say to the Senator that that reorganization order was prepared in secret by the Bureau of the Budget.

Here we have an opportunity to have a reorganization order prepared after consultation with the Members of the Senate, the members of the appropriate Senate committees, and the members of an advisory council for the oil industry. I think such a procedure is much superior. The examination which is being made in the Judiciary Committee, under the Reorganization Act, is likely to prove futile, even though we should desire to change the order, because under the Reorganization Act unless both Houses of Congress act, there is no possible way to kill a reorganization order.

Under this method, the Senator from Oklahoma, the members of the Senate special committee dealing with petroleum, the members of the Public Lands and Surveys Committee, and the members of the Appropriations Committee will have an opportunity in advance to know what is being done. I think such a method is much superior, because it brings the matter out into the open. I feel certain that it is the Senator's own desire to make sure that any reorganization which is made will not be in camera reorganization of executive agencies, but will be a reorganization by which the legislative body can proceed. Such a system or procedure is served by this amendment.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I am impelled to make this objection, for the reason that the amendment contemplates the setting up of an industry advisory committee which is to concur with reference to the policy or with reference to the administration of the new agency which is to be created; and, of course, it is to be created through the action of Congress. The membership of that committee, which already has been created from the industry, has never been disclosed, as far as I know. A secret list has been prepared. I simply cannot feel that that is the way to handle this matter. I cannot agree with the Senator from Wyoming that this method will expedite the matter and will bring it out into the open, where we shall have any better opportunity to consider it than we shall have if it comes up under a reorganization plan and then goes before a committee, where we can call witnesses and can discuss the matter properly and can have all of it out in the open. To my mind, the procedure proposed by the amendment is a rather peculiar one.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator will realize, I am sure, that under the Reorganization Act the action of one House of the Congress cannot prevent the carrying out of the reorganization. But under the provisions of this amendment and as a result of the hearings which we had yesterday, the action of the Senate committee alone would, in my judgment, be sufficient to prevent a reorganization which would be unsatisfactory.

Mr. MOORE. The opposition of either the House or the Senate alone would not affect the reorganization proposal, would it?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The opposition of one House acting alone would not affect a reorganization order.

Mr. MOORE. Very well.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There would have to be a united action, which would be an almost impossible thing to secure.

Mr. HAYDEN. It was clearly understood by the committee that this matter would be temporary, and only for 1 year. We would provide this amount of money——

Mr. MOORE. It is almost a quarter of a million dollars.

Mr. HAYDEN. I consider the oil industry, from a tax point of view, to be about the greatest industry in America. So, the amount of money is not large. It was understood distinctly that the money would be spent in coordinating various agencies of the Government which now have their fingers in the oil business.

Mr. MOORE. The problem is one of consolidating them under one agency?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. The question arises, How shall it be done? The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] was very careful in his questioning of Mr. Davies. The testimony begins on page 1292 of the hearings, and reads in part as follows:

> Senator THOMAS. If this appropriation is increased as here requested, would that offer you sufficient money to enable you to give thought and attention to a permanent program which you would consider adequate to submit to this committee or some committee say within the next 10 or 12 months?
> Mr. DAVIES. Yes; it would, Senator, and that is precisely what we should do. That is precisely what we want to do here.
>
> Senator THOMAS. Would this money, made available to you, make it possible for you to do that?
> Mr. DAVIES. Yes; it is sufficient to enable us to do that. As to the money amounts involved, I would like to say this: While this is additional money, the purpose here is finally to develop a more efficient administration, to eliminate duplication, and to do a better job. The expenditure should be returned severalfold if the idea is any good.

So it is understood just what the money is for, and that it is for no other purpose than to effect a proper reorganization and eliminate duplication of effort.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I ask that the committee amendment, on page

2, beginning in line 21, ending on page 3, in line 24, go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask that the committee amendments, under the heading "Bonneville Power Administration," beginning on page 6, in line 23, and ending on page 7, in line 16, be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be passed over.

The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Grazing Service", on page 8, line 15, after the word "reports", to strike out "fighting fires"; in line 22, after the word "binding", to strike out "$212,500" and insert "$689,000; for payment of a salary of $6 per diem while actually employed and for the payment of necessary travel expenses, exclusive of subsistence, of members of advisory committees of local stockmen, $40,000; in all, $729,000"; on page 9, line 12, after the word "equipment", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That $100,000 of this appropriation shall be available only for the payment to employees for accumulated or accrued annual leave due upon their separation from Government service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 16, to insert:

Fire fighting: For fighting fires on or threatening lands under Grazing Service administration, $50,000, which amount shall also be available for meeting obligations of the preceding fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 13, after the words "Salaries and expenses", to strike out "and"; and in the same line, after the words "Range improvements", to insert "and fire fighting."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "General Land Office," on page 10, line 25, after the word "proceedings", to strike out "$950,000" and insert "$1,075,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 9, after the name "Secretary", to strike out "$494,602" and insert "$750,000"; and in line 10, after the word "exceed", to strike out "one" and insert "three."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 23, after the word "of", to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty-five"; and in line 24, after the word "automobiles", to strike out "$387,000" and insert "$397,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 5, after the word "vehicles", to strike out "$277,126" and insert "$293,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 1, after the word "vehicles", to strike out "$310,191" and insert "$429,240."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 16, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$23,500"; and in line 17, after the name "District of Columbia", to strike out "$433,455" and insert "$474,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 21, after the name "Alaska", to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Indian Affairs," on page 15, line 9, after the word "journals", to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$1,128,675."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 13, after the word "binding", to strike out "$900,000" and insert "$985,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 18, after the word "provisions", to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$3,274,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 1, after the word "service", to strike out "$3,084,008" and insert "$3,609,400."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 17, after the word "systems", to strike out "$800,000" and insert "$838,100."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 6, after the name "Arizona", to strike out "$9,600,000" and insert "$10,317,450."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 2, after the word "binding", to strike "$5,930,570" and insert "$6,769,570."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 8, after the word "festivals", to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$750,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 21, after "(16 U. S. C. 583)", to strike out "$704,728" and insert "$960,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 18, after the word "exhibits", to insert "the control and eradication of fever ticks among livestock of Indians under the jurisdiction of the Seminole Agency, Florida"; and in line 22, after the word "facilities", to strike out "$808,336" and insert "$986,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 5, after "(57 Stat. 459)", to strike out "$350,000" and insert "$1,500,000"; and in line 9, after the word "to", to strike out "$925,000" and insert "$1,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the committee amendments beginning in the third paragraph on page 20, and ending on page 21 in line 17, should be passed over. Some Senators wish to offer amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be passed over.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, does the Senator refer to the paragraph beginning in line 18, on page 20?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. The Senator from Montana wishes to have the word "Montana" included among the States listed, and the Senator from Oregon also wishes to amend the language in respect to his State.

Mr. MURDOCK. Would it be in order for me now to offer an amendment to the committee amendment? I should like to have the word "Utah" inserted before the words "and Wyoming" on page 20, in line 25.

Mr. HAYDEN. That may be done.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, on page 20, in line 25, before the words "and Wyoming," I move to insert "Utah."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the Senator from Arizona, the committee amendments in the paragraph beginning on line 18, page 20, down to and including line 17 on page 21 will be passed over.

The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, for many years Members of Congress have been seeking to reduce the expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The amount of money appropriated for the Bureau has increased year by year. This year it is proposed to increase the appropriation over last year by about $12,000,000. Actually, the appropriations for the Bureau of Indian Affairs amount to nearly as much as the entire cost of the Congress. It seems to me that it is a matter which should be given serious consideration by all Members of Congress.

At the present time a new plan is being proposed under which certain matters would be frozen in the control of the Bureau of Indian Affairs practically forever. The Bureau plans eventually to take over 7,000,000 acres of Indian land, and I should like to know what is to become of it in the future. If this bill is passed, the Bureau expects to use this year, in starting the program, approximately $1,000,000 of which $350,000 is to be taken out of tribal funds belonging to the Indians themselves.

Mr. President, I am concerned with, but I am not particularly interested in, the general picture. I wish to offer an amendment to include the State of South Dakota. On page 20, in line 25, after the word "Oregon," I move to insert the words "South Dakota."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 10, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$35,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 24, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$1,600,000" and insert "$1,648,000"; in the same line, after the word "which", to strike out "$290,000" and insert "$299,631"; and on page 23, line 1, after the word "and", to strike out "$1,250,000" and insert "$1,284,157."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 8, to insert:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation contained in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1946, for settlement of claims to water rights in the Gila River, Arizona, is hereby continued available for the same purposes until June 30, 1947.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 25, after the word "River", to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$500,000"; on page 24, line 1, after the name "New Mexico", to strike out "$45,000" and insert "$50,000"; in line 2, after the name "Papago", to strike out "$18,000" and insert "$20,000"; and in the same line, after the name "Salt River", to strike out "$27,000" and insert "$30,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 3, after the name "Mission", to strike out "$9,000" and insert "$10,000"; and in line 4, after the name "Sacramento", to strike out "$13,500" and insert "$15,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 5, after the name "Southern Ute", to strike out "$13,500" and insert "$15,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 6, after the name "Fort Belknap", to strike out "$5,625" and insert "$6,250"; and in line 7, after the name "Fort Peck", to strike out "$40,500" and insert "$45,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 8, after the name "Carson", to strike out "$13,950" and insert "$15,500"; in line 9, after the name "Pyramid Lake", to strike out "$22,500" and insert "$25,000"; and in the same line, after the name "Western Shoshone", to strike out "$24,750" and insert "$27,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 10, after the name "United Pueblos", to strike out "$13,500" and insert "$15,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 11, after the name "Warm Springs", to strike out "$9,000" and insert "$10,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 12, after the name "Wind River", to strike out "$18,000" and insert "$20,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 13, after the word "tracts", to strike out "$45,000" and insert "$50,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 14, after the word "investigations", to strike out "$225,000" and insert "$250,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 15, after the words "In all", to strike out "$743,825" and insert "$1,104,250"; and in line 18, after the word "the" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "Secretary" and insert "Commissioner of Indian Affairs."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 2, after the word "equipment", to insert a semicolon and "private architectural and engineering services."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 4, after the word "quarters", to strike out "$113,300" and insert "$1,359,700."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 13, to insert:

Fort Apache, Ariz.: for the purpose of cooperating with McNary school district, Apache County, Ariz., for the construction and improvement of public-school buildings, for which the Indian Service may furnish plans, $25,000: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so appropriated shall be subject to the condition that the schools maintained by said district shall be available to all Indian children of the school district on the same terms as other children of said school district: Provided further, That the amount expended on this project shall be recouped by the United States within a period of 30 years, commencing with the date of occupancy of the project, by the acceptance of Indian pupils in this school without cost to the United States; and, in computing the amount of recoupment of the project, interest at 3 percent per annum shall be included on unrecouped balances: Provided further, That with the consent of the Tribal Council of the White Mountain Apache Tribe of the Fort Apache Indian Reservation, Ariz., the Secretary may set aside tribal land at McNary, Ariz., as a school reserve so long as such land is needed for school purposes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 31, line 8, and I wish to ask to have the amendment changing the amount to $224,000 in the item for the Klamath Tribe of Indians go over until tomorrow, until I can have an opportunity to confer with my colleague. I make the request because I am not fully informed as to the facts, and certain representations have been made to me this afternoon by a member of the council of the Klamath Tribe for further consideration of the item. I told him I would not request any modification until I had had an opportunity to confer both with the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and my colleague from Oregon [Mr. CORDON].

I ask permission to insert in the RECORD at this point a financial statement of the affairs of the Klamath Tribe which this representative of the council filed with me this afternoon.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Klamath funds

Treasury balances:
Proceeds of labor, Klamath Indians, Oregon	$149,803.77
Interest on proceeds of labor, etc	5,828.23
Klamath Indians, Oregon, revolving loan fund	100,335.62
Interest on Klamath Indians, Oregon, revolving loan fund	39,964.71
Klamath Indians, Oregon, capital reserve fund	2,248,472.70
Interest on Klamath Indians, capital reserve fund	311.59
Klamath fund	3,872.21
Interest on Klamath fund	5,743.66
Payment to Indians of Klamath Agency, Oreg., from lands conveyed to California and Oregon	564.05
Interest on payments to Indians of Klamath Agency, Oreg., etc	170.86
Payment to Indians, Klamath Agency, Oreg. (34 Stat. 367-368)	3,486.04
Total	2,558,553.44

I submit for the record that among the above Treasury balances there are funds which cannot be used for administration without special act of Congress, namely:

Klamath Indians, Oregon, revolving loan fund	$100,335.62
Interest on Klamath Indians, Oregon, revolving loan fund	39,964.71
Klamath Indians, Oregon, capital reserve fund	2,248,472.70
Total	2,388,772.33

I submit for the record also, the fact, that out of the above capital reserve fund, $1,125,000 are minor's funds, $1,500 in lieu of allotment. Just imagine the Commissioner of Indian Affairs continuing to spend the interest on children's funds to support the Indian Bureau employees. He is not satisfied with using the interest on the capital reserve fund where the children's funds are deposited, he uses the funds as a Treasury balance to obtain appropriations for Indian Bureau support.

According to Mr. Province's figures we have:

Total Klamath funds	$2,558,553.44
I offer for the RECORD, funds obligated and funds which cannot be used	2,388,772.33
Balance	169,781.11

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment on page 31, line 8, was agreed to be reconsidered, and that the amendment go over until tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 17, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$75,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 13, to insert:

The Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War are hereby authorized to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior for the use of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, without compensation therefor, the entire Sitka naval base on Japonski Island and the entire Army installations on the adjacent Charcoal and Alice Islands, located in Alaska, including the land, buildings, and utilities, with the drawings pertaining thereto, and all materials and equipment on both installations, and in addition, the said Secretaries and the War Assets Administrator are authorized to transfer to the Department of the Interior for the use of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, without compensation therefor, any other surplus materials, supplies, and equipment needed to equip and operate these facilities for school and hospital purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 10, after the word "exceed", to strike out "one hundred" and insert "two hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 8, to insert:

The Bureau of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized to acquire by transfer without exchange of funds (for three years beginning July 1, 1946), from the War Department, the Navy Department, the Department of Agriculture, or the War Assets Administration, equipment, materials, and supplies of all kinds, with an appraised value of not to exceed $6,300,000 from the surplus stores of these agencies, for use in the schools, hospitals, and agencies, or by any operating division of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in the United States and Alaska: Provided, That the authorization in this paragraph for transfer of surplus property to the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall not be construed to deny to veterans the priority accorded to them in obtaining surplus property under Public Law 375, approved May 3, 1946.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Reclamation," on page 42, line 22, after the word "exceed", to strike out "three hundred and eighty" and insert "one thousand one hundred and sixty-eight"; and on page 43, line 3, after the word "aircraft", to strike out "with funds provided for 'General investigations' and the 'Missouri River Basin', and all sums appropriated in this act to such Bureau shall be available for such hire, maintenance, and operation to meet unforeseen emergencies due to fire, flood, or storm."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General offices," on page 44, line 17, after the word "functions", to strike out "$4,000,000" and insert "$5,500,000"; and on page 45, line 4, after the word "exceeding", to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$200,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General investigations," on page 45, line 17, after the word "Commission", to strike out "$3,250,000" and insert "$11,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President——

Mr. HAYDEN. Is this where the Senator from New Hampshire wanted us to stop in the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. I think we have made fairly good progress, and if there is no further business to be transacted I shall move that the Senate take a recess.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL FOREIGN-SERVICE OFFICERS IN THE CLASSIFIED GRADES

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5244) to authorize the appointment of additional foreign-service officers in the classified grades, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 18, 1946

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, we rejoice that we are all Thy children—fathers and mothers, the fearless and the fearful, those in light and those in darkness, in affluence and in want, the eager and the discouraged; to all of these Thou hast promised as our day, so shall our strength be. For as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God.

Unshadowed and unchanging, preserve our Republic with all its humanities and philanthropies, and keep it free from the corroding influences of frivolities and intemperance. What a land Thou hast given us! So many to care for us and to share our love. O teach us how to use Thy gifts, and in the place of contention and query give restful minds and hearts to all troubled spirits. Take away our distempered imaginings, and as we walk with Thee may we be unmindful of our pain and folly and limitations and breathe the stimulating air of a fellowship which binds us to a high common purpose. Clothe us, we pray Thee, with that deep wisdom that never fails to bear fruits of happiness and good will, and Thine shall be the glory. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 3517. An act to authorize the admission into the United States of persons of races indigenous to India, to make them racially eligible for naturalization, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 4160. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 763. An act to provide for the leasing of allotted lands on the Crow Indian Reservation;

S. 1253. An act to enable debtor railroad corporations expeditiously to effectuate reorganizations of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations; and for other purposes;

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5990. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. HOEY, Mr. BALL, Mr. WILLIS, and Mr. FERGUSON to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

TRADE-MARKS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 1654) to provide for the registration and protection of trade-marks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, agree to the conference asked by the Senate and appoint conferees.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. BOYKIN, LANHAM, and HARTLEY.

AUTHORIZING ADMISSION INTO THE UNITED STATES OF PERSONS INDIGENOUS TO INDIA

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 3517) to authorize the admission into the United States of persons of races indigenous to India, to make them racially eligible for naturalization, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. LESINSKI, ALLEN of Louisiana, MCGEHEE, MASON, and REES of Kansas.

AUTHORIZING CITY OF ANCHORAGE, ALASKA, TO ISSUE BONDS IN A SUM NOT TO EXCEED $5,000,000

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 5112) to authorize the city of Anchorage, Alaska, to issue bonds in a sum not to exceed $7,500,000 for the purpose of constructing, reconstructing, improving, extending, bettering, repairing, equipping, or acquiring public works of a permanent character, and to provide for the payment thereof, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alaska.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Anchorage, Alaska, is hereby authorized to issue and sell its bonds in an amount not to exceed $7,500,000, for the purpose of constructing, reconstructing, improving, extending, bettering, repairing, equipping, or acquiring public works of permanent character for said city.

SEC. 2. Such public works shall include but not be limited to water facilities, sewers and sewage-disposal facilities, heating plants and distribution facilities, electric and steam power and light plants and distribution facilities, telephone plants and distribution facilities, stadia, gymnasia, auditoria and athletic fields, streets and steet improvements, corporation or equipment yards, city-hall additions, and school buildings.

SEC. 3. Before said bonds shall be issued, a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the city of Anchorage, Alaska, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued, in an amount not exceeding the amount above specified and for the purposes hereinbefore set forth, shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said city of Anchorage, Alaska, whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said city for purposes of municipal taxation. The form of the ballot shall be such that the electors may vote for or against the issuance of bonds for the purposes herein specified up to the amount herein authorized. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given to the public by posting notices of same in three conspicuous places within the corporate limits of the city of Anchorage, Alaska, one of which shall be on a bulletin board in the public lobby of the United States post office at Anchorage, Alaska. The election notice shall specifically state the amount of bonds proposed to be issued and the purposes for which said bonds are to be issued. The registration of such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of such election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law for general and special elections in said municipality; and such bonds shall be issued for the purposes herein authorized only upon the condition that not less than 51 percent of the votes cast at such election shall be in favor of the issuance of said bonds for such purposes.

SEC. 4. Said bonds shall be authorized by resolution or ordinance of the common council, and may be issued in coupon form, and may be made registrable as to principal alone or as to both principal and interest under such terms and conditions as the common council shall provide. Said bonds shall be dated and shall be in such denomination or denominations, and may mature in such amounts and at such time or times not exceeding 20 years from the date thereof, and may be payable at such place or places as the common council shall determine. The said bonds may be made redeemable, either with or without premium, in the discretion of the common council, and may be sold at public or private sale. Said bonds shall be signed by the mayor and clerk of the city of Anchorage, Alaska, and shall have impressed thereon the official seal of said municipality, and the coupons annexed to said bonds representing interest to be payable thereon shall be signed with the facsimile signatures of said mayor and clerk. Said bonds shall bear such rate or rates of interest as the common council shall determine, not to exceed 5 percent per annum, payable annually or semiannually, and shall be sold for not less than the principal amount thereof and accrued interest, and with or without premium. In the event any of the officers whose signatures or countersignatures appear on said bonds or coupons shall cease to be such officers before delivery of such bonds, said signatures or countersignatures, whether manual or facsimile, shall nevertheless be valid and sufficient for all purposes the same as if said officers had remained in office until such delivery.

SEC. 5. The bonds herein authorized shall be general obligations of the city of Anchorage, Alaska, and the mayor and common council of the city of Anchorage are hereby authorized and directed, in the resolution or ordinance authorizing the issuance of said bonds, to pledge to the payment of the principal and interest thereof the full faith and credit of the city of Anchorage and to obligate the city, if necessary, to levy taxes upon all the taxable property within said city for the payment of the principal and interest of said bonds as and when the same become due and payable, without limitations as to rate or amount.

SEC. 6. In addition to the pledge of the taxing power contained in section 5 hereof, the mayor and common council are hereby authorized in the resolution or ordinance authorizing said bonds, to pledge to the payment of said bonds and the interest thereon the revenues, income, receipts, and profits derived by the city of Anchorage from the ownership, management, and operation by said city of the electric light, power, water, and telephone properties and all additions and betterments to and extensions thereof remaining after the payment of the expenses of operation and maintenance of said properties and reserve for depreciation and prior pledges of such revenues. In the resolution or ordinance authorizing the issuance of said bonds the common council of the city of Anchorage is authorized to covenant with the holders from time to time of the bonds issued hereunder as follows:

(a) That the city will maintain and operate the public-utility properties of the city hereinbefore mentioned in an efficient and economical manner;

(b) That the city will fix, establish, and collect rates, tolls, rents, and other charges for all commodities, services, or facilities, sold, furnished, or supplied by the city through said public-utility properties adequate to provide revenues, income, receipts, and profits sufficient to pay the expenses of operation and maintenance of said properties and to provide reasonable reserves for depreciation and for the payment of the principal of and interest on all bonds payable from such revenues and all other charges and expenses whatsoever which may be or become a charge on such revenues;

(c) That the city will keep all the revenues, income, receipts, and profits arising from the ownership, management, and operations of the public-utility properties by the city in a fund separate and apart from all other funds of the city to be collected, held, and disbursed in such manner as the city may provide in the resolution or ordinance authorizing the issuance of bonds hereunder;

(d) That the city will not thereafter issue any bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness payable from such revenues, except within such limitations as may be prescribed in such resolution or ordinance;

(e) That the city will not thereafter issue any bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness payable from such revenues which would be a prior lien or charge upon said revenues over the bonds issued pursuant to such resolution or ordinance;

(f) That the city will provide a special fund for renewals and replacements to the public-utility properties into which fund the city shall pay sums from the revenues of said properties in such amounts as may be specified in said resolution or ordinance;

(g) That the city will not sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of any or all of said public-utility properties without then or theretofore making provision for the payment of the bonds authorized by this act;

(h) That the city will keep books and accounts with respect to the operation of said public-utility properties in such manner as prescribed by the Federal Power Commission governing municipal licenses and provide for the periodic audit of such books by certified public accountants who shall report on such operations;

(i) That the city will provide for periodic examinations of the public-utility properties of the city by an engineer or firm of engineers who shall report thereon at such times as shall be prescribed in said resolution or ordinance; and

(j) That the city will do and perform such other acts and take such other proceedings as may be necessary to more fully secure the payment of the bonds authorized by said resolution or ordinance as shall be deemed advisable by the common council.

SEC. 7. Upon the sale of any bonds authorized by this act, the city of Anchorage shall provide for the payment of the proceeds thereof into a special fund which shall be used for no other purpose except as specified in this act, and said bonds may be sold all at once or from time to time, and with such rate of interest not exceeding 5 percent per annum, as the common council of the city of Anchorage shall direct.

SEC. 8. The city of Anchorage is hereby authorized to enter into contracts with the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof to obtain a grant or loan of money funds to aid in the construction of water facilities, sewers and sewage-disposal facilities, heating plants and distribution facilities, electric and steam power and light plants and distribution facilities, telephone plants and distribution facilities, stadia, gymnasia, auditoria and athletic fields, streets and street improvements, corporation or equipment yards, city-hall additions, and school buildings, and is further authorized to expend surplus moneys in the treasury of the city from the revenues of said public-utility properties for such purpose.

SEC. 9. The provisions of this act and of any resolution or ordinance authorizing the issuance of bonds hereunder shall constitute a contract with the holders of such bonds from time to time, and the provisions thereof and hereof shall be enforceable by any owner or holder of said bonds by mandamus or by any other appropriate suit, action, or proceeding at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 10. This act shall be complete authority for the issuance of the bonds herein authorized, and shall be liberally construed to accomplish its purposes. Any restrictions, limitations, or regulations relative to the issuance of bonds by the city of Anchorage, Alaska, contained in any other act shall not apply to bonds issued under this act, and any act inconsistent herewith shall be deemed modified to conform with the provisions of this act for the purposes of this act only.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a series of amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk House Joint Resolution 307, to authorize the use of naval vessels to determine the effect of atomic weapons upon such vessels, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, strike out lines 5 to 9, inclusive, and insert:

"SEC. 3. The number of combatant vessels, exclusive of those received from foreign governments, which may be employed as targets for the purposes set forth in section 1 of this joint resolution, is limited to 33. The term 'combatant vessels' for purposes of this section is defined as naval vessels of the following categories: Battleships, cruisers, aircraft carriers, destroyers, and submarines."

Page 2, line 17, strike out "is authorized to" and insert "in his discretion may."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman conferred with his committee and are the minority members of the committee agreeable?

Mr. IZAC. They are, sir.

Mr. MICHENER. Are any of them on the floor? We did not know this matter was coming up, and I want to serve notice now that this is unusual. This is an important bill. It should not be passed unless we know about it.

Mr. IZAC. May I say to the gentleman that he was advised yesterday by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HESS] the ranking minority member, that this would be brought up as soon as it came from the Senate. It came from the Senate too late yesterday to bring it up at that time, so I am bringing it up today at the specific request of the Navy Department, because they cannot go ahead with the test; they cannot even dispose of the vessels that are to be bombed until this authorization goes through.

Mr. MICHENER. This is the bill that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HESS], the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, on yesterday suggested was proper for consideration?

Mr. IZAC. That is correct, I will say to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FOREIGN-SERVICE OFFICERS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5244) to authorize the employment of additional foreign-service officers in the classified grades, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mr. BLOOM, Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON, and Mr. EATON.

THIRD URGENCY DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1946

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6601) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and consider the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the amendments involved here relate either to the Senate or some joint activity or to routine things that have to be provided for before the 1st of July. Is not that the case?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is true. The amendments are of a minor nature. There are only a few of them. They involve a little over $300,000.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that it is important that this bill become effective at the earliest date. It carries funds for the housing program, for veterans' hospitals, for bringing the remains of members of the armed forces back from abroad, and it carries a very urgent provision for the Treasury Department, which will be out of money July 10. It also carries money for implementing the law increasing the salaries of postal employees. We passed it in the House May 29, but it has just passed the Senate. Because of its urgent nature the committee has agreed to call it up and has directed me to move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

"For payment to Mary Scott Glass, widow of Carter Glass, late a Senator from the State of Virginia, $10,000."

"NATIONAL GUARD

"Salaries and expenses: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1946, for 'Salaries and expenses, National Guard', including the objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, 1946, $968."

"DIVISION OF EXPENSES

"The sums appropriated in this act for the District of Columbia, shall, unless otherwise specifically provided, be paid out of the general fund of the District of Columbia as defined in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, 1946."

Page 12, strike out lines 6 to 25, inclusive, and insert:

"SEC. 201. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law."

Page 13, line 2, strike out all after "in" down to and including "1946" in line 3, and insert "(1) any regular annual appropriation act for the fiscal year 1947, or (2) contained in other than a regular annual appropriation act for the fiscal year 1947, and being for such fiscal year, or (3) contained in other than a regular annual appropriation act for the fiscal year 1947, and being supplemental to an existing appropriation and for obligation after June 30, 1946, such acts not being laws on July 1, 1946."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the bill, as passed by the House, appropriated a total of $661,520,810.89.

The Senate has amended the bill in three or four relatively minor respects.

It has added a total of $327,178. Of that amount, $54,320 is for Senate expenses, $30,000 is for the expenses of the Commission to represent the United States at the Philippine independence ceremonies, and the balance—$242,858—for additional expenses of the District of Columbia for the current fiscal year, all of which have Budget support.

One other amendment, in accordance with custom when the regular annual bill is late in passing, advances the availability for first quarter 1947 fiscal year obligation of funds for assistance to aged needy individuals, needy independent children, and needy individuals who are blind.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in all Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLOOM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from today's Washington Post.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Syracuse Herald-Journal entitled "Farley's True Words."

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. OUTLAND] be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the Gallup Poll which appeared in the Washington Post last Wednesday as well as other papers of the Nation under the title "Public Backs Cancer Research With Tax Raised Funds."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

BRITISH TO NEGOTIATE 7-YEAR WHEAT PURCHASE AGREEMENT WITH CANADA

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, while Congress is considering a $4,400,000,000 loan to Great Britain, British Food Minister John Strachey and L. J. Thompson and E. G. Hardwood, of the British Ministry of Food are in Ottawa, Canada, for the announced purpose of negotiating a long-term contract for Canadian wheat.

The quantity reported to be under consideration is between 220,000,000 bushels and 350,000,000 bushels annually, depending upon whether Great Britain alone is to be supplied or subagreements are negotiated between Great Britain and France, Belgium, and other European countries. The term of the proposed agreement is said to be either 4, 5, or 7 years. Prices mentioned range between $1 and $1.50 per bushel.

These bilaterial British Empire negotiations will, when completed, effectively close the European market to the United States grain producers. These negotiations are certainly contrary to the so-called long-range international plans upon which the Department of Agriculture is supposed to be working and which contemplate multilateral international understandings with respect to the disposition of surpluses.

The British loan is scheduled for debate here next week. May I suggest that a loan to Britain at this time would mean financing the destruction of our export grain markets. It is about time that the United States Government required guaranties for the protection of our producers before discussing international loans.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances in the RECORD, in two to include newspaper articles, and in the other to include quotations.

Mr. DIRKSEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include some editorials.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include some observations on agricultural production in South Dakota.

CERTAIN LEGISLATION NECESSARY BEFORE ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, Congress should not adjourn for the summer before decisive action is completed on the numerous issues which remain unsettled. Nothing can be gained by delays and indecision which are retarding reconversion. Public confidence is being undermined and destroyed because of the lack of unity and unnecessary conflict between economic groups.

All three branches of government in Washington are overwhelmed by confusion. In the executive department, there is no coordination or orderly planning; in the legislative branch, political factors have overshadowed forthright action on essential measures; the Supreme Court has forfeited its dignity because of internal dissension. The Democratic Party has complete control of all three branches, and its leaders cannot evade full responsibility.

Momentous world and domestic issues challenge our Nation, but almost a year after VJ-day we are bogged down in political red tape. Instead of political expediency, we must have the courage to face postwar problems with resolute determination. Congress should reflect the national will to win the peace and should remain in session until national mandates are carried out without delay. No other course can be justified at this time.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RIZLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. PITTENGER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I was granted unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a manuscript entitled "Housing Administration Delays." I am advised by the Public Printer that the extension will take four pages at a cost of $240. Notwithstanding, I ask unanimous consent that the extension may be made.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding the cost and without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution adopted last week by the Nebraska Stock Growers at Omaha.

Mr. HALE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Henry Hazlitt entitled "Sham War Against Inflation."

Mr. GILLIE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short article appearing in the Washington Times-Herald of today by Frank M. Smith.

Mr. FEIGHAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GORDON (at the request of Mr. FEIGHAN) was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LATHAM (at the request of Mr. MICHENER) was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include newspaper articles.

FLOOD CONTROL ACT OF 1946

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 668 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6597) authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Flood Control, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, as the reading of this resolution indicates, its adoption would make in order consideration of the flood-control bill. There is nothing unusual about the resolution. I have no requests for time on this side.

I now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time on this side. The rule provides adequate debate. I think we might as well get to the business of the day.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that during debate on the flood-control bill I may include certain letters and statements in my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6597) authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6597, with Mr. CLARK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

On motion by Mr. WHITTINGTON, and by unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the debate is confined to 2 hours, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] and one-half by the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON].

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] is recognized.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 35 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the bill H. R. 6597, to be cited as the Flood Control Act of 1946, after full and complete hearings which have been published and are available to the Members of Congress, was unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. McGREGOR. Was it unanimously reported?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It was, and I so stated.

The report is most informative and contains a description of the projects authorized, all of which have the approval of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army.

The bill is for the authorization of projects to be constructed over a period of years to be followed by appropriations in the discretion of Congress.

An authorization bill is timely now, as the last bill reported by the committee was on March 29, 1944, more than 2 years ago, and that bill became the Flood Control Act of December 22, 1944. That act introduced certain modifications in administrative procedure to aid in carrying out the flood-control program, and authorized land-treatment programs by the Department of Agriculture on the watersheds of the streams on which the Department of Agriculture had submitted favorable reports.

RIVERS

The improvement of rivers and protection of valleys are among the most important functions of the Government.

Rivers are nature's contribution to the progress of the people and are among the Nation's most valuable assets. They are the property of the people and should be improved for their benefit. Impediments to navigation must be removed, channels must be deepened; bars must be eliminated; harbors must be kept open. People and property must be protected from overflows.

Rivers have shaped the course of history. They have played a major part in mythology. They figure in fables, legends, and traditions.

The Garden of Eden, according to the Bible, was located in the fertile valley between the rivers Tigris and Euphrates. The Egyptians worshiped the Nile as a goddess and without the Nile there would have been no Egyptian civilization. The Romans cast offerings into the Tiber and worshiped the river that flowed through the Eternal City. The East Indians regard the Ganges as sacred and to bathe in its waters is a part of the religious rites of the people. According to the ancients Sharon ferried the departed souls across the river Styx.

Many legends and poems have been woven around the Rhine in Europe. The Indians of North America called the Mississippi River the Father of Waters and worshipped it as such. Mark Twain would probably never have become famous nor would he have given us the delightful story of Huckleberry Finn if it had not been for his familiarity with the Mississippi River.

John Muir, as a young man, said, "There is nothing more eloquent in nature than a mountain stream."

Henry D. Thoreau delighted in the companionship of rivers. His stories of the Concord and the Merrimac Rivers are not only entertaining but wonderfully revealing. One of the most interesting books of Henry Van Dyke is Little Rivers. There is a charm about the brooks and streams that are "over the hills and far away."

METHODS

The planning and construction of flood-control works was placed in the Corps of Engineers. The principal rivers of the United States have been studied. Reports have been submitted. Levees, flood walls, diversions, and reservoirs have been constructed in the principal river basins. All factors of safety have been utilized. The methods have been tested. No country in the world has made more rapid progress in the control of floods than the United States. The adopted projects are flexible and can be expanded. As new problems arise, new solutions will be found. It is not too much to say that more progress has been made in flood control in the United States in the past 15 years than has been made in the preceding 125 years. There is a reason. The Corps of Engineers are the most capable flood-control engineers in the world. They have garnered a wealth of experience. Their engineering works excel the flood-control works that have been constructed in all ages and in all countries. I should like to say that the engineers of the Bureau of Reclamation in the past 40 years have become experts in their work. They are able and accomplished in construction. They are specialists in their field.

ENGINEERS

When we think of flood control, we think of great engineers. The Egyptians constructed levees and reservoirs in the early dawn of history. Levees were constructed to protect the ancient city of Memphis. Dams were built to provide water for the arid lands. The structures built by the engineers of Egypt are the oldest in history. The Great Pyramids, marvels of engineering, were constructed 5,000 years ago: "All things fear time, but time fears the Pyramids."

Engineers have played a conspicuous part in all civilizations. They made marvelous contributions to the civilizations of antiquity. They have left their monuments in the great walls of China and in the aqueducts and highways of the Roman Empire and in systems of canals and reservoirs, in the Middle East.

But the United States leads the world, both ancient and modern, in engineering and in engineering structures. Fort Peck, Grand Coulee, and Boulder Dams each impound larger volumes of water than the far-famed Assuan Dam in the upper stretches of the Nile. The Panama Canal is the greatest artificial waterway ever built by the hand of man. The levees along the lower Mississippi River have required more than 3 times the excavations of the Panama Canal, and they are the most massive structures in the history of mankind.

It is no accident that in World War II many of the outstanding engineering accomplishments, as well as the miracles of advance and supply of the United States armies were achieved by the Army engineers. A long list of high water fighters won distinction in the war theatres. Maj. Gen. R. W. Crawford, president of the Mississippi River Commission, went to Europe in 1942 as the commanding general, Services of Supply in the Middle East. Later he was in charge of the administration of supply and transportation under Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower. Maj. Gen. Lewis A. Pick built the Ledo Road. The present Chief of Engineers, Lt. Gen. R. A. Wheeler, rendered conspicuous and valuable service in Iran and India.

No profession has contributed more to the progress of mankind than engineers, and no engineers in this or any other age have accomplished as much in flood control as the engineers of the United States Army.

RESUMPTION OF IMPROVEMENTS

It was appropriate as we turned from war to peace that flood-control improvements which had been discontinued should be resumed. It is essential for the general welfare that normal public work activities of the Government following the war should be taken up. While flood-control works were discontinued for the duration, major floods continued. Lives were lost and property was destroyed. We sacrificed much in flood control to win the war. The same is true of other public works. Highways deteriorated. Reclamation is essential to the production of food, and improvements on rivers are imperative to protect lives and property. The national program for flood control was practically stopped during and immediately preceding the global war.

PLANS

Although actual construction was eliminated, Congress provided annual appropriations for the preparation of plans for authorized flood-control projects in order that this important work could be promptly resumed when the Nation returned to peacetime activities, but plans can only be prepared for works that are authorized. Construction plans cannot be prepared until the projects have been authorized. The bill under consideration contains projects on which favorable reports have been submitted since the act of December 22, 1944. It is important that increases in authorizations be made available at this time for the principal river basins where Congress has heretofore approved comprehensive plans and that the additional new projects be authorized.

FLOOD DISASTERS AND BACKLOGS

Flood disasters are recognized as one of the major problems affecting the welfare and security of the entire Nation. The existing authorized backlog of flood control construction, although equivalent to several years of work does not permit the efficient designing and other preparatory work. The estimated costs of completing projects now in place would fully commit all available authorizations. In certain basins the situation is critical. In the Willamette, the Ohio, and the Missouri Basins, there are no uncommitted balances. New projects are needed in these important basins. Flood control has demonstrated its worth. No projects are authorized unless the benefits exceed the costs. Flood control stands on its merits.

There is a difference between approval and authorization. In all of the river basins of the United States for general or national flood control, the total estimated costs of the approved projects, including projects authorized individually, is $3,675,950,000. The total authorizations in all of the general flood-control acts, beginning with the National Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, and ending with the act of December 22, 1944, is $1,680,400,000. It is estimated that the costs of the projects undertaken, including the costs of completed projects, is $1,638,485,500. Thus, authorizations for only approximately $42,000,000 are available for new construction. Thus far the total appropriations for national flood control aggregate $767,972,000. It takes a long time to complete a large dam. It is estimated that it will take substantially 10 years to complete the authorizations heretofore made and recommended in the pending bill.

There are two parts to flood-control authorizations—the national and the Mississippi River and tributaries. I have given the authorizations and the total appropriations for national flood control. The total authorizations for the Mississippi River and tributaries are $864,934,000 while the total appropriations to date aggregate $548,625,000. There are authorizations available of $316,309,000, but it will be kept in mind that $200,000,000 of this is channelization work to increase the channel depth from 9 to 12 feet between Cairo and Baton Rouge authorized in the act of December 22, 1944. It will also be kept in mind that some of the work was authorized at least 10 years ago and that there has been an increase in cost of around 35 percent in construction. The bill language of the authorization for the Mississippi River and tributaries is for a fixed authorization rather than an estimated cost; hence the necessity primarily on account of increased cost of increasing the authorization by $100,000,000 as carried in the bill.

CONSTRUCTION COSTS

The committee has given consideration to the effects of rising costs of construction. The Chief of Engineers, in basing his cost estimates, has consistently used the latest stable prices based upon similar types of work. The costs or estimates will be higher or lower at the time of construction, depending upon prevailing economic conditions. In general, the benefits to accrue are affected similarly by changing price levels. The result is that the cost-to-benefit ratio remains substantially the same. Many projects recommended for authorization in the pending bill will not be built for some years, and it is impossible to foresee the price levels which will obtain at that time.

REVIEWS

It has been the policy of the committee to recognize that changing conditions often make plans obsolete, and to avoid rigidity, discretion is given to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers to modify plans as may be necessary and desirable. Moreover, reviews of either reported or authorized projects in the light of major subsequent floods will promote safety and such reviews are frequently authorized. These reviews may be authorized in a flood-control bill or by resolution adopted by the Committee on Flood Control.

PUBLIC WORKS

As I have stated, public works are required for the normal functions of the Government. Flood-control improvements are necessary in normal times. But public works should be increased when there is slack in private construction. There should be adequate plans for sound Federal, State, and local works to stimulate employment in periods of depression.

The United States must profit by the depression following the First World War and by the great depression following the crash of 1929. We have in mind the mistakes made to provide in time for unemployment. There must be no repetitions of work relief. There must be no projects where benefits do not exceed the costs. As I have stated, it is imperative that there be an adequate shelf or backlog with adequate plans not only for normal times, but for periods of crises and unemployment. Economic dislocations in at least portions of the country occur annually. It is the part of statesmanship to provide in advance to prevent the distress and unemployment of depressions. Public works should be thoroughly planned. Projects should be sound. Construction should be capable of being expanded and enlarged to stimulate employment in periods of distress.

CAUTION

Materials are now scarce and so is labor. While we must provide for the functioning of the agencies disrupted by war and while the needs for works are great, the taxpayers are entitled to a dollar's worth of efficient construction for every dollar expended. Labor and materials are not only scarce, but they are high. I will not be disturbed if flood-control construction does not reach its stride for the next 12 months. There is ample work for all who want it. The need for employment will be greater in a year or two. The time to expand the program and the time actually to construct for appropriations made will be when there is greater need for employment than today.

POLICY

The planning and construction of flood-control work is the function of the Corps of Engineers. The investigations of watersheds and measures for run-off, water-flow retardation, and soil erosion is for the Department of Agriculture. The experience of the past 10 years shows that the Departments of Agriculture and War work together harmoniously in the development of flood-control plans and that the works proposed by the two departments are complementary.

APPROPRIATIONS

Congress will determine in the future as in the past the amount of the annual appropriations. Budgetary requirements and national safety will be the controlling factors. The progress of carrying out the authorizations will be determined by Congress through control of the amounts appropriated for flood-control works. I repeat, to emphasize, however, that unless projects are authorized, appropriations for construction cannot be made. The committee believes that the enactment of the pending bill is essential for the orderly accomplishment of flood control, based upon worthy and carefully controlled projects. The progress will be controlled by the Congress by the amount of funds annually appropriated.

ANALYSIS

There is a complete analysis, as I have indicated, by sections of the bill in the comprehensive committee report. I must, therefore, content myself with a brief analysis:

Section 1 is the short form of citation of the bill. We are providing what we have heretofore done in practice.

Section 2 continues existing law and restates the policies of local cooperation.

Section 3 provides for relief to the local interests involved in the alteration of railroad bridges and approaches. Other provisions respecting highways are contained in section 12, and respecting highways, railroads, or utilities are contained in section 8, all being recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

Section 4 provides for the utilization of reservoirs as recreational facilities and at nominal rates to Boy Scouts and schools.

Section 5 increases the payments to the States on account of the releasing of lands under testimony which shows that counties are in difficulties on account of the removal of lands from the local tax rolls.

This provision is in line with the provision of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act which provided that fixed percentages of the gross receipts of the TVA beginning at 10 percent and being reduced annually to 5 percent should be paid to the States whose properties were condemned for the reservoirs and the dams.

Section 6 provides for granting easements and will improve administrative procedure.

Section 7 authorizes the uses of limited amounts of war-surplus properties for use in the construction of dams and will result in a saving to the United States.

Section 8 will reduce costs to the Government as it will give the Chief of Engineers a flexibility in providing for the relocation of highways, railroads, and utilities, and assuring that the provisions are adequate by authorizing adjustments.

Section 9 is the authorization section of the bill to provide for the additional projects recommended by the Chief of Engineers since the approval of the Flood Control Act of December 22, 1944, and to increase the authorizations in the principal river basins of the United States for projects previously approved. The largest authorization is for the Missouri River in the sum of $150,000,000. The additional authorizations are for the Ohio and the Lower Mississippi in the sum of $100,000,000 each with increased authorizations in the upper Mississippi, in the Arkansas, the White, the Willamette, and other river basins and areas, including the Los Angeles area.

Section 10 provides for preliminary examinations and surveys.

Section 11 increases existing authorization from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 annually for rescue and repairs in emergencies.

Section 12 provides for clearing and snagging.

Section 13 covers emergency bank protection works for highways, bridge approaches, and other public works.

Section 14 authorizes $750,000,000 for appropriations to be made by Congress.

Section 15 approves a modification of the watershed project in western New York under the Department of Agriculture.

Section 16 authorizes a reappropriation of $5,000,000 and an additional $20,000,000 for the prosecution of works to be carried out by the Department of Agriculture in Soil Conservation improvements.

Section 17 authorizes $150,000,000 for the Department of the Interior along the upper Missouri River and its tributaries and carries out provisions of the act of 1944 for the improvement of the Missouri River and tributaries in the upper stretches by the Bureau of Reclamation and in the lower stretches by the Chief of Engineers.

I may add there will be a perfecting amendment to that section offered as a committee amendment. I have thus completed my general statement and analysis of the pending bill. I now yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, taking the Mississippi and Missouri together as one river system, the Columbia in the West is the second largest river system in the United States. In all this authorization I do not find the Columbia or any of its tributaries mentioned except the Willamette River which flows into the Columbia near its mouth at the city of Portland, yet there is one river, the Boise River, that presents us with a very pressing problem.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. On the Columbia River the Bonneville Dam is already constructed. The Grand Coulee Dam is almost completed; the latter project is under the supervision of the Committee on Reclamation and Irrigation, of which the gentleman is a member. We include in this bill only projects that have been favorably reported by the Chief of Engineers to us. I therefore answer the gentleman's question by saying that the project he has in mind was not reported to the committee. We only include in this bill those projects on which favorable reports have been submitted.

In the Flood Control Act of 1944 Congress provided that before the Chief of Engineers can transmit to the Director of the Budget or to the Congress any project it must be submitted to the Governor of the affected State and to interested Federal agencies. I may say to the gentleman that the project in which he is interested and to which he has referred was not reported by the Governor of his State until after the hearings were concluded, and I understand the Interior Department has not to this date submitted its report to the Chief of Engineers. I trust the Interior Department may report on it in time for it to be considered by the committee in the other body.

Mr. WHITE. The Columbia River has many tributaries, the Snake, the Clearwater, the Salmon, and a great number of others.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is a marvelous river; and I will answer the gentleman by saying that in previous authorizations we have reported every project on which the Chief of Engineers has submitted a favorable report, including projects on three tributaries of the Columbia River, in the Flood Control Act of 1944. The Columbia River happens to be one of those rivers on which hundreds of millions of dollars have been authorized by the gentleman's own Committee on Reclamation and Irrigation.

Mr. WHITE. I understand this bill is a flood-control bill brought in by the Committee on Flood Control and is not a reclamation bill at all.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And the gentleman should understand that this bill does not contain any flood-control project unless there is a favorable report submitted by the Chief of Engineers; and I answer the gentleman's question as I have repeatedly answered him, that we have included in previous bills all projects on which favorable reports have been submitted by the Chief of Engineers on the Columbia and its tributaries.

Mr. WHITE. Our reliance, then, must be placed on the War Department and the Board of Army Engineers in the matter of flood control before the Congress can act on it?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And in the gentleman's case it is the Department of Interior now causing the delay. Had the Department sent its report back there would have been action if the Governor and department had made their reports before the hearings closed.

Mr. WHITE. Then we are dependent on the Army engineers, and not the people's own body, the Congress, although our needs in that region have been demonstrated many times.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No; I say again that the Governor of Idaho and now the Department of the Interior are responsible for the delay in this project because it was sent to those agencies for review in accordance with the requirements of the Flood Control Act of 1944.

I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. I notice that section 11 authorizes the appropriation of $2,000,000 for rescue work. It is not contemplated by the committee that that shall be to the exclusion of any other money available to any other agency for that type of work, is it?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Not at all. It is purely for emergency purposes. I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I have listened with great interest to the very fine statement made by the gentleman from Mississippi. I served on the Flood Control Committee for 4 years with him and I wanted to take this opportunity of expressing my appreciation and the appreciation of the people in the Mississippi Valley for the wonderful service he has rendered the country in bringing before the Congress the fine comprehensive flood-control programs he has.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes to answer questions.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I appreciate the fact that you here have a long-range program, the thing we have been talking about. I can conceive of no program that will bring greater profits in the long run to the people of this country than this program which this committee has brought before us.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman from Missouri is most gracious and I would be less than human if I did not say that I do appreciate his very kind words.

For two and twenty years I have listened to the proponents and the opponents, to the great engineers of transportation, flood control, and highways on projects in all the parts of our common country. I think I know somewhat of the problems involved.

Mr. KEARNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEARNEY. Under section 10, page 23 of the bill, the Susquehanna River at or in the vicinity of Sidney, N. Y., is to be surveyed. That is just the preliminary survey, as I understand the gentleman?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. KEARNEY. Can the gentleman tell me, without going to too much trouble, if he knows just exactly what that project is?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No, because we have not had a report on it. This is an authorization for an examination and survey.

Mr. KEARNEY. This is just for a survey?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is a splendid town. I happened to have driven through it on one occasion, but I do not recall the difficulties involved.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ABERNETHY. The gentleman knows I have been particularly concerned about the lifting to Government ownership large tracts of land in my district for reservoir purposes and the effect such will have upon the county tax revenues. I introduced a bill some time ago to offset these losses by turning over to the counties a larger percentage of the revenues derived from the leasing of the lands. As I understand, if this bill becomes law, under section 5, 75 percent of all the money received and deposited in the Treasury of the United States during any fiscal year on account of the leasing of lands acquired by the United States will be turned over to the counties for road and school purposes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is true, whether those reservoirs are located in Mississippi, Arkansas, New Hampshire, Vermont, or other States. The gentleman is correct. The bills which the gentleman and Mr. WHITTEN introduced are responsible for initiation of the increase which is favorably recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. ABERNETHY. The gentleman is also aware of my interest in preliminary surveys to be made in connection with Opookta Creek and Potacocowa Creek in my district. If this bill becomes law, these surveys will be made and at a subsequent date the Flood Control Committee will determine what action, if any, will be taken based upon the reports made by the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is correct.

Mr. OUTLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. OUTLAND. I notice on page 21 of the bill there is an authorized project for flood portection along the Salinas River in California. May I say to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi how deeply I personally appreciate this item being included in view of the fact the data came in comparatively late. Had the chairman not been willing to make a concession, we might not have had it included.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman just did get under the wire and he is the last representative who did get under the wire. Some others did not, but we will take them up when we get to them.

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DOYLE. I wish to compliment the distinguished chairman of the committee on the advanced steps that have been taken, as a matter of declared policy, by the Federal Government with reference to the use of areas and facilities. I refer to the committee's report, page 7, wherein you specify that these areas and facilities shall be used for recreation purposes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. We are very glad to have the gentleman's comment.

Mr. DOYLE. I want to make one further observation. I call the gentleman's attention to the committee report on Whittier Narrows, about which I have spoken, as the gentleman will recall. I have read the text of the report and of the hearings. I notice on page 491 General Crawford made the statement that the Whittier Narrows project is essential, quoting the general's exact language. I take it, therefore, that the decision of the committee in asking a restudy of the Whittier Narrows project as one of the great units of the Los Angeles flood-control program is without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. DOYLE. I take it, therefore, that the decision of the committee in asking a restudy before there is any request for appropriation is without any finding or intimation by the committee that it is not essential, referring to the Whittier Narrows project.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The matter is set forth on page 37 of the committee report. We felt under all the circumstances, and the Chief of Engineers advised us that he thought it was right, in view of this authorization having been made some years ago there should be a restudy of the matter as covered on page 37 of the hearings.

Mr. JENNINGS. I wish to say on behalf of my people and this House generally, so far as I might speak for them, that I deeply appreciate the constructive work that the distinguished chairman of this committee has done in bringing in this comprehensive bill that applies to the whole country. I am especially interested in it because it makes provision for a preliminary survey for two projects which are of vital importance to the people of my district.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. There are very few congressional districts in the United States where similar provisions have not been made in the pending bill or in previous bills.

I now yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. As the Representative of the district in which Los Angeles is located, which has the headwaters of the Los Angeles River, I am delighted that the committee has seen fit to bring in $25,000,000 additional appropriation for this purpose, and I hope the work can go through. I desire to compliment the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi for his unselfishness with respect to the other parts of the United States.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And I say the same situation that obtains in the Southwest obtains in the Northwest, and this bill provides $35,000,000 for the Willamette River, an important river in the country.

I now yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Having served on the Committee on Flood Control with the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, I am sure the gentleman knows that I share the views of many Members here who have complimented him on the pending bill as well as the fine report that has been made. I am sure that the citizens of my State of Oklahoma, who are deeply interested in flood control, will also be interested in knowing of the additional flood control surveys to be made of many streams in Oklahoma. The gentleman knows of my great interest in those surveys, like the Washita and its tributaries, Cache and Beaver and their tributaries, and other small streams throughout southwestern Oklahoma.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] is correct. I not only know of his interest in the surveys of the watersheds of the rivers and their tributaries, as mentioned by him, but I recall his service years ago on the Committee on Flood Control and I know of his excellent and constructive work on the Committee on Appropriations in behalf of flood control, not only in Oklahoma and adjoining States, but in other sections of the country. The gentleman has always interested himself in promoting constructive measures to protect the lives and property of the people of his district and State.

I think it is fair for me to make the statement to the Members of the House that every person who has ever sought an opportunity to be heard for or against any project in any State or any part of the country has been heard since I have been chairman of the Committee on Flood Control. And I think it is also fair to state—and the members of the committee are entitled to the credit—that every person, of no matter what degree, in the United States who has ever written to the committee or submitted a flood-control matter, without exception, has received response during the years to his inquiries.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Since the distinguished chairman has discussed proposed surveys authorized under this bill, will say there are some people living in Oklahoma who apparently think that merely because a survey has been ordered or is being made that a dam is definitely to be constructed on a certain river or creek. Is it not true that the Committee on Flood Control adheres to the rule of not recommending the authorization of a flood control project unless and until the Army engineers have first made a favorable report on such a project?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have so stated in detail. The Members will keep in mind that after we have run the gauntlet of the district engineer in the field, the division engineer in the region, the River and Harbor Board in Washington, the Chief Engineer, the Director of the Budget, the Governors of the States, the Government agencies, we have still got to deal with the gentleman's Committee on Appropriations before the project is ever constructed. The gentleman is correct, and I will say that that impression not only obtains in Oklahoma, but in other parts of the country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. May I say this, as far as the gentleman from Oklahoma is concerned, he is tremendously interested in flood-control projects, not only in Oklahoma, but throughout the entire country, and when the gentleman's Committee on Flood Control recommends the authorization of a flood-control project, that the gentleman from Oklahoma, a member of the Appropriations Committee, has almost without exception, gone to bat to secure funds to construct such project.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. VURSELL. I appreciate the splendid work the chairman of the committee has done in bringing in this bill. But the chairman will remember that I appeared before his committee on some projects that were affecting some counties bordering on the Wabash River in Illinois. As I understand, this is an authorization based upon reports up to the present time of the Army engineers, but I thought I further understood that a resurvey was to be made trying to meet some of the objections that I raised in my testimony before the committee, the objections being that the flood level would be raised; that by reason of some levees being built on the Indiana side that the flood level would be raised at Mount Carmel, Ill., about 4½ feet, which would make it necessary for certain buildings, for instance, the light and power company there, to be raised 5 or 6 feet.

I also had a number of complaints from farmers on the Illinois side in this same vicinity that the building of project No. 5, I think it is, on the Indiana side, a levee opposite Mount Carmel, would so restrict and narrow the channel as to make this raise of 4½ feet, which would do great damage to farm land and overflow thousands of acres of farm land. Naturally I am very much concerned about that and would like to protect the interests of my people if possible.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman is correct. I recall his having brought that matter to the attention of the committee. My recollection is that we have placed an item in section 10 of the bill to permit a restudy of that situation. That item was passed by the committee and the Chief of Engineers concurred in it to enable him to make a restudy and to prevent the very damage of which the gentleman complains. I think it was handled just as I have outlined.

Mr. VURSELL. I thank the chairman. Doubtless this bill is going to pass. May I say to the chairman that I shall appreciate his indulgence in the future in any way that he can in order to see that my people are fairly protected, equally with the people on the other side of the river.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Such is always the desire of the committee. We shall be glad to cooperate with the gentleman.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. Can the chairman of the committee tell me how the engineers handle these propositions? The other day they called a hearing in the city of Passaic with reference to the Passaic River flood control. The plan they submitted would flood thousands of acres in my district. I received no notice that there was going to be a hearing and, as far as I know, nobody in the part of the district that was going to be flooded for the benefit of the other county heard a word about it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No hearings such as the gentleman indicates are provided unless the Congress has authorized an examination and survey. My information is that generally as wide publicity is given the matter as possible. If there has been a project authorized along the Passaic River, if the gentleman will hereafter call the office of the Chief of Engineers and ask that he be notified personally, I am sure they will notify him. But there was probably a publication in some paper that the gentleman overlooked.

Mr. KEAN. It probably was in a paper in the other district.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It may have been. I can appreciate what the gentleman says, but the purpose is to give as wide publicity as possible. If there be any hearing, and if those interested have not been given an opportunity to appear, if the gentleman will take the matter up with the office of the Chief of Engineers a subsequent hearing can be held so that his side of the question may be presented. They always desire to hear both sides, and such is the purpose of the committee.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. The gentleman is familiar, I am sure, with my interest in the problems of lands which are above certain dams which have been built in the Yazoo Basin. I notice with a great deal of pleasure that the committee has made provision to help relieve some of those problems in the increase in the amount of money that will be paid back from land rentals. Also I notice that the committee has increased the authorization to the Department of Agriculture of funds for handling the flood control problems above the dams in these areas. I wonder if the gentleman can give us any information as to whether the Department of Agriculture and the Corps of Engineers have gotten their heads together so that there will be no strip of territory between that which the War Department will handle and the point at which the Department of Agriculture will attempt to meet the problem.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I recall the gentleman's interest. Under the terms of this bill and under existing law we have been assured that the office of the Chief of Engineers is authorized to go along and undertake to remedy the situation about which the gentleman complains. I understand of course that the Soil Conservation Department has that right independently and it is up to them through their recommendations to the committee, of which the gentleman is a member, to ask for appropriations to carry out the soil conservation work.

Mr. WHITTEN. May I say I realize it is not a problem in the law but it is a problem of the determination on the part of these two agencies. I am glad to have the gentleman's statement.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. As far as the legislation and authorization are concerned, there is no reason why there should not be that determination as well as that cooperation.

Mr. Chairman, in this connection I wish to announce now that I am including with my remarks a copy of a letter from the Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia, together with a copy of a letter from the Chief of Engineers in response to that letter, and a copy of my letter to the Governor of the Commonwealth with respect to the Rappahannock project. The copies of the letter of the Governor to me as chairman, dated May 17, 1946, the letter of the Chief of Engineers, dated May 23, 1946, and of my letter to the Governor, dated May 24, 1946, follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,
GOVERNOR'S OFFICE,
Richmond, May 17, 1946.

Hon. WILLIAM M. WHITTINGTON,
Chairman, Flood Control Committee,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JUDGE WHITTINGTON: Since submitting my recommendation of April 6, on the proposed Salem Church Dam, Rappahannock River, Va., I am impressed with the seriousness of objections raised by landowners in Culpepper, Fauquier and Orange Counties, concerning the inundation of bottom lands. I am further informed by Mr. B. E. Morriss, of the Virginia State Planning Board who attended the hearing concerning the Salem Church Dam on the Rappahannock River May 2, that your committee would receive and give further consideration to a further statement concerning the views of the State of Virginia.

It appears that if the dam were constructed, as proposed by the Corps of Engineers who have made an exhaustive study of this project, it would very advantageously and economically utilize the water resources in the Rappahannock Basin. It appears also that if the power pool were limited to 220 feet elevation instead of 240 feet, as proposed, the multiple-purpose dam project would still maintain a very satisfactory economic ratio and would be self-liqidating. If this assumption is correct and in view of the objections by landowners, it is recommended that the dam be constructed in conformity with the preliminary design as prepared by the Corps of Engineers but that the authorization limit the power pool to maximum elevation of 220 feet.

This project would give the much desired flood control for Fredericksburg, and would also reduce the hazard of back-flooding in the vicinity of Remington, and I am advised would satisfy the most serious objections that have been raised. It is hoped this recommendation, if favorably considered, will in no way delay the authorization, and I strongly recommend that your committee give careful consideration to limiting the height of the maximum-power pool to the lowest possible elevation that would result in a self-liquidating project.

Sincerely yours,

WM. M. TUCK,
Governor of Virginia.

MAY 23, 1946.

Hon. WILL M. WHITTINGTON,
Chairman, Committee on Flood Control,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JUDGE WHITTINGTON: Reference is made to the letter dated May 17, 1946, from the Honorable William M. Tuck, Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia, with respect to the proposed Salem Church project on the Rappahannock River, which you handed to me with your request for comment.

In his letter Governor Tuck states that it appears that if the Salem Church Dam were constructed as proposed by the Corps of Engineers it would advantageously and economically utilize the water resources in the Rappahannock River Basin. He further states that it appears also that if the power pool were limited to 220 foot elevation instead of 240 feet as proposed, the multiple-purpose dam would still maintain a very satisfactory economic ratio and would still be self-liquidating. The Governor then recommends that, if his understanding is correct, the Salem Church Dam be constructed in conformity with the preliminary design as prepared by the Corps of Engineers but that the authorization for the project limit the power pool to a maximum elevation of 220 feet.

As stated in the Governor's letter, and in accordance with the usual policy of the Department, the plan recommended in my report provided for the most advantageous and economical utilization of the water resources of the Rappahannock River basin. The lowering of the power pool would decrease the power output of the project considerably with consequent decrease in revenue. However, since the Salem Church project as planned has a high ratio of benefits to costs, the elevation of the power pool could be reduced to some extent without making the project uneconomic, although the benefit to cost ratio would be reduced.

A detailed analysis has not been made of the Salem Church Dam and Reservoir with a maximum power pool at elevation 220 feet above sea level. However, extrapolation from curves prepared in connection with the determination of the power pool elevation recommended in the report indicates that with the power pool at elevation of 220 feet the project would still be economically justified.

My report on the Rappahannock River Basin recommends that the general plan of development outlined in the report of the division and district engineers be adopted as a basis for the future improvement in the Rappahannock River Basin for flood control, navigation and other purposes, and that the Salem Church project be authorized for construction as the initial step generally in accordance with the plans outlined in the district engineer's report and with such modifications thereof as in the discretion of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may be advisable. Authorization of the project in accordance with my recommendation would permit such modifications in the project as circumstances show to be most desirable when the project is being made ready for actual construction.

It is the desire and policy of the Department to take into account not only changed physical conditions, but also the up-to-date views and wishes of the States and other local interests. I may assure you that the Governor's recommendation for a lower power pool will be carefully considered by the Department. Under these circumstances I do not believe it necessary to definitely fix the power pool elevation by legislation.

Sincerely yours,

R. A. WHEELER,
Lieutenant General, Chief of Engineers.

MAY 24, 1946.

Hon. WILLIAM M. TUCK,
Governor, Richmond, Va.

DEAR GOVERNOR TUCK: I acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 17 in behalf of a modification of the Rappahannock River Dam to say that I recall the testimony and the desire of the citizens above the dam that the elevation be reduced to 200 feet. The committee went into this reduction carefully and it was found that the low dam could not be justified. However, upon receipt of your said letter in behalf of a 220 foot elevation I transmitted the same to the Chief of Engineers and I now hand herewith to you a copy of a letter from him to me, dated May 23, 1946, from which you will observe that the Chief of Engineers believes that he can conform to your recommendation as well as a similar recommendation made by Representative HOWARD SMITH. The authorization of the project will be flexible enough to enable the Chief of Engineers to limit the height as suggested.

I am taking the liberty of forwarding a copy of this letter to Representative HOWARD SMITH. It is always a pleasure to give careful consideration to any matter that either you or he bring to my attention.

Very sincerely,

WILL M. WHITTINGTON,
Chairman, Committee on Flood Control.

Copy to Hon. HOWARD SMITH, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

I also desire in this connection to insert a statement furnished me by the Chief of Engineers respecting the Dillon Reservoir on the Licking River in Ohio, and this statement follows:

DILLON RESERVOIR, OHIO

Authority: Flood Control Act of June 28, 1938 (part of Ohio Basin plan).

Location: On Licking River about 6 miles upstream from Zanesville, Ohio, where the Licking River empties into the Muskingum River.

Project: Flood control.

Dam: Rolled earth fill dam about 1,280 feet long and 108 feet high; uncontrolled side spillway on left abutment; gate-controlled outlet works on right abutment.

Reservoir:	Acre-feet
Flood-control storage	279,000
Conservation storage	15,000
Total storage	294,000
Power: None.
Costs:
Dam	$2,567,000
Lands and improvements	1,973,000
Relocations	5,776,000
Total	10,316,000
Lands:	Acres
Tillable	7,110
Wooded	1,660
Pasture	1,290
Waste or swamp	180
Urban	160
Total	10,400
Number of residences affected	300
Total population affected	2,500
Economics
Average annual benefits:
Flood protection, Licking and Muskingum Rivers	$225,000
Flood protection, Ohio River	273,000
Conservation and recreation	50,000
Water supply and sanitation	48,000
Navigation	4,000
Flood protection, Mississippi River	16,000
Total	616,000
Average annual charges	506,000
Benefit-cost ratio, 1.23.

	Flood heights
	Zanesville	McConnelsville	Marietta
Major floods:
Flood damage stage	28.0	12.5	35.0
March 1913	51.2	33.2	59.9
January 1937	38.9	21.6	55.7

The Dillon Reservoir will reduce flood heights at Zanesville on the Muskingum River 4 feet, McConnelsville on the Muskingum River 5 feet, Marietta on the Ohio River 0.8 foot.

Comparison of alternate plans

	Dillon Reservoir	Multireservoir plan of Licking Valley Protective Association (13 reservoirs)	Modified multireservoir plan (7 reservoirs)
Drainage area controlled—square miles	748.0	170.3	165.1
Total storage capacity—acre-feet	294,000	399,300	98,700
Flood control storage—do	279,000		72,100
Reservoir area inundated—acres	10,400	14,580	4,180
Residences in reservoir area	300	303	125
Reduction in flood heights:
Zanesville	4.0	1.2	1.2
McConnelsville	5.0	1.3	1.3
Marietta	0.8	0.2	0.2
Total cost	$10,316,000	$28,634,000	$12,631,000
Average annual benefits	$616,000	$174,000	$174,000
Average annual charges	$506,000	$1,404,000	$619,000
Benefit-cost ratio	1.23	0.1	0.3
Cost per acre-foot	$35	$70	$128

A multireservoir system in the Licking Valley would control less than one-fourth of the drainage area controlled by the Dillon Reservoir, would provide only about one-fourth of the flood-control benefits, and would be considerably more expensive to construct and operate. The average annual benefits for a multireservoir plan would be only about one-third of the annual costs and therefore would not be economically justified. The Dillon Reservoir was planned primarily to control floodwaters of the Licking River, which constitute a major threat to the cities of Zanesville and McConnelsville and to other areas in the Muskingum Valley below Zanesville and in the Ohio River below the mouth of the Muskingum River. This major flood threat cannot be removed by the proposed multireservoir plan, and extensive studies made of the Licking Valley show that the proposed Dillon Reservoir is the most feasible and economical plan for control of the floodwaters of that basin.

(a) Sufficient information is not available for a break-down between flood control and conservation storage for the plan of the Licking Valley Protective Association.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McGREGOR].

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate very much the last remark of our distinguished chairman relative to the Dillon project; especially do I compliment the chairman of the Flood Control Committee on being one of those individuals who is entirely familiar with all projects incorporated in this file. I do not know of any committee before which anyone can appear where one who is chairman is more familiar with the project than the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi. I am particularly interested in this bill, H. R. 6597. So far as I am concerned, this is one of the greatest pieces of pork-barrel legislation that has ever been brought before the consideration of Congress. There are very few Members of Congress who do not have a particular interest in this particular bill. I have an interest in this particular bill, and it is the Dillon Dam, but I am somewhat different because I am bitterly opposed to it. May I say to you that the Dillon Reservoir first came before the Congress way back in 1938. The distinguished chairman recently held the hearings very courteously, and General Crawford and the rest of them were very courteous about it. But it appeared before the Congress way back in 1938, apparently when no one seemed to be thinking of flood control. Then a special appropriation was made in 1939. In 1946 we find we are confronted with this bugaboo again. In 1939 Colonel Arthur told us that he did not want this particular legislation, the Dillon Dam, because of the high cost of construction and the high cost of engineering and building material. I leave it to you, Mr. Chairman, whether we have a high cost of construction now in 1946 compared with 1938 and 1939. Just recently we were told that they were going to relocate the B. & O. Railroad in Ohio, which was originally estimated, if I understand correctly, and I am subject to correction, at eight or nine million dollars. If anyone cares to correct me, I certainly stand corrected.

I understand a contract has recently been let for ten or fifteen million. Why the hurry? Recently we allocated about $400,000,000 to what we might term Expediter Wyatt for the construction of new houses—for the construction of new houses, if you please; yet in this particular project you are going to destroy between six and seven hundred new houses. Now, what consistency do we have when we appropriate money to one Federal agency for the destruction of houses of one Federal agency and to the next Federal agency we appropriate money for the construction of houses?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McGREGOR] has expired.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. McGREGOR. I wish I might have an hour, because it would take that time to cover even a portion of the subject.

Now, that is a comparison between the two. You give one agency, the Army engineers, authority to destroy houses—about 700 units—and then you turn around and you give Expediter Wyatt authority to construct new houses to the extent of $400,000,000. Is it any wonder that Congress is in jeopardy? Now, let us be fair with ourselves. I certainly realize what I am up against in opposing this entire bill, because nearly every Member of this Congress has a project in this particular legislation.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield to the distinguished gentleman who is noted for his economy program.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. There are two of us. I am with the gentleman. I am opposed to further authorizations of flood-control measures. May I say this, that the testimony before the War Department Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations was that there is an increase of from 40 to 45 percent in the cost of construction since 1939.

Mr. McGREGOR. I appreciate the gentleman's comments very much.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. If the gentleman will yield, may I say further, not including the rivers and harbors authorization bill which was passed the other day, there are 700 flood-control projects, enumerated in the hearings last March, ready to work. In addition to that, you have rivers and harbors projects and irrigation and reclamation projects, the total cost of the three authorized will be approximately $7,000,000,000, not including the rivers and harbors authorization which we passed the other day or this bill that is before us now.

Mr. McGREGOR. Seven billion dollars is a lot of money. I wonder if you realize how much a billion dollars is. If you and I spent a thousand dollars a day from the time of Christ down to this time, we are going to spend 30 or 35 years yet before we could spend a billion dollars.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. In those hearings the gentleman will find each of the 700 projects for flood control enumerated; the date of the authorization, the original estimate of the cost and the actual cost. The same with the rivers and harbors and irrigation and reclamation projects. They are in the record in the engineer's statement.

Mr. McGREGOR. I appreciate the gentleman's comments very much.

Now, let us be honest and fair about this. Let us forget personal interest and decide each project on its merits in this program. Why? Because I honestly and sincerely believe that we have got to get back to the basic principle of balancing the budget sometime.

Now, let us not keep on spending money. Let us not give Mr. Wilson Wyatt $400,000,000 to construct houses and then give this particular agency several million dollars for tearing down new houses.

I am going to offer this amendment:

No funds under this act shall be allocated unless actual construction shall have been started prior to this date.

Let us be honest about it. I firmly believe that unless actual construction has been begun on these projects it should not be started, particularly at this time when we are hunting critical building material for veterans' housing projects in our districts. Let us give the material to those who need it to build and repair houses rather than go along with the flood control program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Flood Control is to be congratulated on the splendid measure now under consideration. Its illustrious chairman has made many contributions to the long-range program for the development of our country, not the least of which is the present measure. I am quite certain that I express the gratitude of many thousands of the pecple of Lehigh Valley when I say that we are very grateful for the careful consideration you have given our problem.

The proposed project contemplates the construction of a reservoir together with local protection costing in the neighborhood of $12,500,000. The plan recommended by the Army engineers will eliminate the possibility of any damage being done not only by floods of the size of those already experienced but any that conceivably could occur.

The area thus affected lies in the heart of one of the most highly industrialized sections of the country. The Lehigh River is approximately 100 miles long, with railroads extending for some distance along both banks. The floods experienced in the past have not only done tremendous damage to the industries located along the river but have interfered with the operation of the railroads.

In May 1942 a flood caused damage estimated at nearly $15,000,000. This flood seriously affected the operation of the main plant of the Bethlehem Steel Co., at Bethlehem, Pa. The estimated average annual benefits for the project is $589,100, which, of course, does not include the secondary benefits derived through the effect of this project on the Delaware River.

The State of Pennsylvania has made a small appropriation toward the carrying out of the project and the affected subdivisions of the State are prepared to carry out their part in the consummation of the project.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK].

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I would regard flood control as a highly desirable objective for a solvent nation which could afford the cost and which could spare the building materials necessary for such projects.

But, Mr. Chairman, the United States of America today meets neither of these criteria.

On the one hand, the propaganda machines of the executive departments are loosening on the country a different kind of flood—a flood of literature pointing out the hazards of inflation and the measures necessary to protect the Nation against inflation's dangers. On the other hand, here comes a bill authorizing three-quarters of a billion dollars of additional deficit spending at a time when solvency of the Treasury is not even in sight. Since deficit spending is of itself inflationary, the two just fail to make sense.

It is perfectly apparent that this bill, H. R. 6597, lacks legitimate justification. The frantic efforts of proponents to the bill to find any sort of justification, legitimate or otherwise, would be comic under normal circumstances. They are tragic under today's circumstances. Please note that a principal justification, and I quote from the report, is that—

> A large backlog of authorized and fully planned projects would also serve as a weapon against potential unemployment.

Could anything be more outlandish than to spend vast sums of Federal money to prevent potential unemployment at a time when pent-up consumer demand, if given half a chance, would give private employment to every person in the country willing and able to work. And is it not outlandish for this bill to propose utilization of vast quantities of concrete, lumber, steel, and sc forth, at the very moment when the Government is spending hundreds of millions of dollars to stimulate production of those same products in order to provide decent housing for returning veterans who cannot obtain housing.

Surely we are in Alice's Wonderland. We run around in circles trying to catch up with ourselves. The only effect of our running is to spill money from our collective pockets and hasten the arrival of uncontrolled monetary inflation.

This bill should be defeated.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill, H. R. 6597, is a measure for the construction of many items of public works on rivers and harbors for flood control. While this measure only provides for an authorization for the items contained in the pending legislation, yet every Member of Congress well knows that when an authorization is once made for any item, the next step is to secure an appropriation for the proposed work, and it is usually granted, and the work then proceeds. This is the ordinary and usual procedure in such matters. The authorization is the first step toward the final appropriation, and the confirmation of the project. Only a few days ago we had a river and harbor bill before the House, and that measure provides for a vast number of projects, which, if finally confirmed, will cost the taxpayers of this Nation the sum of almost $600,000,000. This pending measure provides for authorizations only, yet if all of those items are finally approved this measure will cost the taxpayers of this Nation a vast sum of money.

Mr. Chairman, we are in a very bad way in this Nation at this very moment, as we have a staggering debt of approximately $280,000,000,000 before us. That debt must be paid. The huge amount of interest upon our national debt must be paid annually. The only source of our income is from the taxpayers of the Nation, and the taxpayers are almost worn out—they have paid, and they have paid—and their ability to pay is almost exhausted. They are tired, and they are almost stripped threadbare of their earnings and their sustenance. Thus, this bill comes at a very poor time, I am convinced. While many of these items are desirable—and they would be helpful—yet we must approach these projects in the same light that we approach our business dealings in the ordinary affairs of life. We would enjoy having many things in life, but our finances will not permit—therefore, we are required to abandon those things. Those in power in our Government do not approach any of these projects in that light—they simply go on their way spending the taxpayers' money and further encumbering the resources of the Nation. Since the advent of the New Deal that same policy, and that same program, has been followed; and since the last World War ceased, leaving us with a greater debt than any nation has ever faced, those in power continue to spend and spend, without any recess, and thereby increase our national debt, and our personal obligations. That policy, which is entirely endorsed by the New Deal, must be stopped. If that policy is continued, our Nation and our people will be faced with utter bankruptcy and destruction.

Mr. Chairman, while we are discussing these highly important items, recently the question was asked as to what program our Government should follow, and it happened to be my privilege to answer that question. My answer was merely this: Make possible freedom for all of our people, reduce the Federal spending, abolish Federal control and regimentation, respect the rights of the several States, balance the Federal Budget, care for our disabled veterans who have suffered disabilities during the late war, and return to the American way of life. The people only want a chance to go forward and make progress, but they cannot do this if they are hampered by all kinds and types of controls and regimentation by their own Government, and they cannot make progress if and when they are bowed down under the great and heavy burden of taxes—caused by unnecessary and unessential spending of the taxpayers' money for needless things. The people want freedom—they want freedom from high taxes, from controls and regimentation—they want their own Government, under the control of the administration now in power, to reduce the spending, and to balance the Budget, and to keep the Budget balanced. They want business injected into our Government and its operations, just as every American citizen must operate either as an individual or in his business. They want just a little common sense shown, by those in control, in the everyday transactions—they want our Government to proceed upon a businesslike basis.

Mr. Chairman, these are very serious days. Under this proposed measure, those in power seek to secure the authorizations contained in this measure to spend vast sums of money for proposed flood control. Many of the items contained in this measure fall entirely in the so-called pork barrel designation; while others may have some merit, yet the fact is not dimmed that we can get along for a little while, at least, without them. These items were not proposed when our debt was very insignificant—they were not proposed before the late war—but now, when we are in strained financial straits, this needless measure is proposed—and I fear that these needless projects will be approved, and the taxpayers will find themselves engulfed in a huge debt in addition to our already tremendous indebtedness, which will have to be paid throughout the years to come. All of the people will have their share of it to pay. Our returned and returning veterans will have to pay their portion of it—our laboring men and women, our farmers, our merchants, every class will have to make their contrubution to this very large increase to our existing national debt. When we face the facts I wonder how long this policy will be continued by the President and his administration and by those who speak for the President? How long will the people be able to continue to submit to Government control and regimentation and submit to the utter destruction of their businesses, and at the same time be called upon to pay the highest taxes that any people have been called upon to pay? At this very moment, because of the bungling of agencies of government, the people can hardly obtain a loaf of bread, or a piece of meat, or a sack of flour. They cannot secure lumber which is needed for repairs or construction, and they can see afar the flourishing black markets in full operation, all continuing, and all largely caused by some act of our Government under this administration.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we are in a frightful situation and things are growing worse each day. We will not secure any relief unless and until the President and his assistants about face and take a new and a different course. They must realize that this is America and the people demand that they live under the American way of life. They want freedom and they demand freedom, and they want economy and they demand economy in our Government. The people want to save our Nation, and they have given their all to that end, but they cannot do this job alone. They must have the aid of the President and every agency and department of our Government, and they must have the aid of this administration now in power. The people cannot save our Nation alone.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I take the floor today to ask your support of section 15 of this bill. I have lived in the district known as the Buffalo watershed all my life; and, while the survey is very good and complete, it only covers recent years. I can remember the floods we used to have when I was a boy, and while they did a great deal of damage to the four hundred and fifty some-odd square miles in that district, we as boys used to look for them, as we had a lot of fun. In those days we in the outskirts of the city had wooden sidewalks and picket fences—sidewalks for rafts—fence pickets to keep in the current. Gentlemen, we did not realize the damage done by these floods, and in later years I used to drive along some of our highways and see where these high waters and floods swept away acres of the low farm lands. I know from my own observation over a period of years where there has been a loss of many hundreds of acres of good land. I could go on and point out many specific cases in this area. Section 15, however, does not take in any particular case but it is for the good of this whole area in general consisting of about 450 square miles, from the highlands down to the very harbor of the city of Buffalo, on the Buffalo River, where most of this silt is distributed in the channels of navigation where the Government does the dredging. They dredge something like 187,000 cubic yards annually. This project has been approved by the Soil Erosion Branch of the AAA and will be a saving over a period of years both to the farmers, to industry, and to the Government.

I would like to present for your consideration first the problem of sedimentation in Buffalo Harbor, which the proposed stream bank protection work is designed to alleviate. I quote from page 10 of the survey of Buffalo Creek watershed prepared by the Department of Agriculture and printed as House Document No. 574, Seventy-eighth Congress, second session:

SEDIMENTATION DAMAGES

Deposition of sediment in Buffalo Harbor is a major flood problem of the watershed. During periods of high water immense quantities of sediment are brought down by the streams and deposited in the harbor. This sedimentation has reduced the harbor depth so rapidly that it has become necessary to carry out extensive dredging operations every year.

The amount of material dredged from Buffalo River and ship canal annually averages 187,300 cubic yards. Sediment carried by Buffalo Creek also damages machinery of at least four concerns utilizing water from the stream for industrial purposes.

In addition to the above sedimentation damage in the harbor, the survey indicates that in numerous places rapid bank erosion is destroying highly valuable agricultural bottom lands. It is estimated in the report that approximately 60 acres of such land over the whole watershed are damaged or destroyed each year. I quote again from pages 15 and 16 of the same report:

A systematic survey of every fifth mile of the stream channels showed that stream bank erosion dumps more than 600,000 cubic yards of material annually into the main stream channels. Approximately 389,000 cubic yards are coarser materials which are deposited in the stream channels, thus reducing their capacity and increasing the frequency of flood in the bottom lands. The remaining 211,000 cubic yards of sediment pass into Buffalo Harbor, where much of it is deposited.

* * * The stream-bank survey demonstrated that stream-bank erosion is the main source of sediment. After careful consideration of all the information obtained, it appeared reasonable to estimate that about 80 percent of the material deposited in Buffalo Harbor comes from bank erosion.

I would like to discuss with you now the nature of this bank erosion and some of the methods which may be used in effecting its control:

The streams of the Buffalo Creek system are exceptionally steep. They are flattest in their lowest reaches, but even here have a fall of more than 14 feet per mile. The stream gradients increase as the headwaters are approached, some of the slopes having a maximum fall in excess of 200 feet per mile.

The stream slopes and the nature of the stream beds combine to promote bank erosion. The gradients of the streams are fixed, for all practical purposes, by numerous rock ledges. The excess energy of the fast-moving streams thus cannot be dissipated in entrenchment of the channels, and most of this energy finds an outlet in cutting into the banks and dislodging material.

Bank erosion and meandering will continue as long as the flowing water is able to cut into the banks of the stream channels. The process can be stopped by reducing the erodibility of the banks, by providing them with a covering which the flowing water cannot remove. Such covers may be either inert, like stone riprap, or living, like willows and other vegetation. It is feasible to use either or both types of protection for stream banks in the Buffalo Creek watershed.

To control bank erosion effectively on the streams of the Buffalo Creek system, a large proportion of the total bank length would have to be treated. The survey of bank erosion in the watershed indicates that bank erosion in the Buffalo Creek watershed can be effectively controlled by a combination of heavy rock riprap on the lower portions of the banks and the planting of tenacious shrubby vegetation on the upper parts. Durable limestone is available at quarries within the watershed for riprapping of the banks below the elevation of average high water. The following is quoted from page 34 of the same report:

EFFECT ON DREDGING

It is assumed that the cost of dredging varies directly with the quantity of material removed up to the point where the quantity is reduced to the extent that the costs of mobilizing equipment and providing engineering services would be disproportionate compared with the cost of the actual dredging. The stabilization of the stream banks of Buffalo and Cazenovia Creeks would reduce the quantity of material to be dredged by 67.4 percent of its present volume. If this reduction is accomplished in addition to the reduction of 12.3 percent estimated to accrue to the farm-land program the unit cost of the removal of the material will probably increase by about 10 percent.

EFFECT ON DAMAGES TO INDUSTRIAL MACHINERY

It is estimated that damages to industrial machinery would be reduced as follows by the stream-bank stabilization work:

Tributary:	Reductions Percent
Cayuga Creek	4.6
Buffalo and Cazenovia Creeks	67.4

EFFECT ON LAND DESTRUCTION BY BANK EROSION

The plan for stream-bank stabilization calls for complete treatment of unstabilized banks of the streams and it may safely be assumed that the destruction of agricultural lands by bank erosion would be practically eliminated. The benefits arising from this will, therefore, equal the damages now occurring.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I know the gentleman's keen interest in the project to which he has referred and I cannot help but believe that the House will want to lend its support to this very worth-while improvement. I shall certainly vote for it myself.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SIMPSON].

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the citizens of Calhoun, Pike, and Adams Counties in Illinois are indeed pleased today knowing that the Sny Island levee and drainage district flood-control project is included on page 17 of the authorization in H. R. 6597.

Over 75 years ago the farmers then living in this area organized and built at their own expense levees to protect them from Mississippi floods. They were protecting some of the most fertile land in Illinois as well as their homes.

After these levees were built and, as time went on, improved, again at their own expense, these landowners produced bountiful crops and prospered. The area consists of approximately 110,000 acres and is probably the largest drainage district above Memphis on the Mississippi River.

With the construction of the navigation dam at Cap aus Gris in the late 1930's, the situation of this area began to change. This being a gravity district and containing no pumps to dispose of the water, the Mississippi when at flood stage would flow contrary to gravity and inundate their land. At the time of the dam construction these Illinois citizens were promised by the Federal Government, and it was distinctly understood, that the water effect upon the district would be studied over a 5-year period and that the inhabitants should have drainage facilities comparable with those prevailing before the dams were built.

For the past 3 years, while other rich farm lands produced abundantly, this area has been flooded and property damaged. The United States Engineers have in the past year met with these citizens and outlined their plan, thereby living up to their promise. The citizens affected have approved by an overwhelming majority and agreed to the local contribution as outlined by the engineers. Governor Green, of Illinois, approved as required by law almost immediately due to a previous study. The board of review engineers has approved. The House Flood Control Committee added their approval and included the project in this authorization. I sincerely hope that it will now pass the Congress.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am interested in three items that appear in this flood-control bill, H. R. 6597.

On page 18, there is the following item:

The local flood-protection works at Olean, N. Y., on Allegheny River, substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in his report dated April 12, 1946, at an estimated cost of $2,282,400.

There is also the next item:

The local flood-protection works at Portville, N. Y., on Allegheny River, substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in his report dated April 12, 1946, at an estimated cost of $1,281,500.

And the third item:

The local flood-protection works at Allegany, N. Y., on the Alleghany River, substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in his report, dated April 12, 1946, at an estimated cost of $388,800.

Mr. Chairman, in 1942 there was a terrific flood swept down through the city of Olean, N. Y., a beautiful city of 21,506 population, destroying innumerable homes and industries and inundating many beautiful portions of the city and inflicting great damage. These floods have been recurring from time to time, with the result that the city is always faced with the possibility of a very dangerous flood. Many lives have been lost.

Government surveys have been made of this situation by the Army engineers and they have come to the conclusion that the city of Olean should be adequately protected.

Just south of Olean there is a beautiful village in New York State called Portville. It is one of the most beautiful villages to be found anywhere, I think, in the State. The library there is not surpassed by any library in any town of any comparable size with which I am acquainted. Many people contributed rare books to the library from all parts of the world. They had great art treasures in there. Well, this flood of 1942 came along and swept down through that village. They had to send motorboats from Buffalo to assist the people. The railroad tracks, of course, were inundated. There were hills back of the village of Portville, and as many as could left their homes downtown and went up there. Many of the people were taken out from the second story of their homes. Many crept out on the veranda roof, and from there were put into motorboats. The loss there was something terrific. That occurs from time to time, whenever there is a flood.

Here recently, just within a month or so, there was another flash flood that brought recollections of that disastrous flood in 1942. The water was rising so fast that the people moved everything that they could move back onto the high lands, thinking perhaps they were going to have the same disastrous flood that they had in 1942. It was a terrible sight after that flood of 1942. I drove up through there. I went through the houses, where I found beautiful furniture destroyed as well as other equipment. The cellars, of course, were filled with water. The citizens had to make a desperate fight all over that area to prevent the breaking out of pestilence of one form or another which usually follows a flood. The beautiful books in that library were spread out on the lawn. They were trying to dry them out in the sun and, of course, books an inch thick, had become 3 to 4 inches thick. They were practically ruined. There was no chance to salvage many of those fine books nor some of the fine works of art.

I remember, too, their school. They had a beautiful modern school there. That was flooded. It even destroyed the band instruments of the excellent school band.

I only mention these things because disasters, as they are repeated year after year, run into millions and millions of dollars, and with this appropriation here much of that, I hope, can be prevented.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAVIN. I want to substantiate what the gentleman has said. I also visited that area in 1942 and saw the results of that devastating flood. Just within the past several weeks that entire area has been again visited by flood, and in one community alone, in the city of Bradford, the losses are estimated at approximately a million dollars. That is just in that one town.

I want to support the position of the distinguished gentleman from New York that some relief should be afforded the people in that area from these devastating, recurring floods that are periodically visited upon the communities. I think it is a mighty fine project and should receive the wholehearted support of the House.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his observation. I appreciate his contribution.

There is the village of Allegany, not very far from Olean. Contiguous to the village of Allegany is one of the finest universities in western New York—St. Bonaventure. There, again, we had a library, filled with books and wonderful works of art brought from all parts of the world. They have students there from all parts of the world. It is a splendid institution. I made inquiry of the Army to find out if the flood-control projects provided for in this bill for the village of Allegany would protect this university.

Of course, this project will not keep the water from coming out on the campus, but War Department engineers assured me that there is no danger, as far as the past history of local floods is concerned, of this water rising high enough to damage the college buildings. With that reassurance, I think we ought to be satisfied perhaps with this item as it now appears in the bill.

Sometimes people say, "Why do these people, when they know there are these recurring floods, continue to live in an area where they are likely to be flooded and perhaps drowned?" The great attachment on the part of people to their home town or the village where they were born, where they were brought up, where their people lived, is a national stabilizing influence. I remember one time many years ago I was in Johnstown, Pa. It was, of course, many years after the Johnstown flood—many years. I became acquainted with a very successful businessman there. He wanted to show me the town.

Johnstown, Pa., is located in a valley, as you all know. He took me up on the heights where I could look down on the city. As we stood there, his eyes became moist and he said, "Isn't that a beautiful city?" I said, "Yes, sir; it certainly is." He pointed out the parks and the public buildings. He was thoroughly proud of the town. He said, "Do you know, I am the only surviving member of a large family. When that Johnstown flood swept down through this valley it carried away all of my relations—father, mother, brothers, and sisters. There were others situated in a similar way."

Finally, he pointed up to a little cemetery and said, "I suppose all of my people are buried in that little cemetery." He said, "You know, after that flood there were three of us little orphans that sat down and debated whether or not we would go to Harrisburg or Pittsburgh and become bootblacks in order to get started again and get some food to eat. We finally said, 'Well, father and mother lived here. This is where we played. Let us stay here.'" He said, "We stayed here half-starved and hungry and we battled it out. I own that big city block there. I helped build these parks. There has not been a day of my life since that flood that I have not tried to contribute something to the betterment of this city."

That is the spirit of these communities when they are wrecked by flood or fire. One of the saddest, one of the most tragic things in the world is for people to be forced out of their homes and into another environment. The spirit that makes America great today is that the people love their homes and are willing to battle to improve the town in which they live. So I believe that this appropriation is fully justified and these people should be protected from these floods and be able to maintain their homes and all the things they love in the community where they live.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. GAVIN. I might say that this project concerns Olean, Portville, and Allegany, the upper stretches of the Allegheny River, but these flood-control works will be a contribution to flood control in the Allegheny Valley and will help the situation at Pittsburgh and in the Ohio Valley.

Mr. REED of New York. The whole length of the Allegheny River and down through Pittsburgh and below. I am glad the gentleman brought out that point.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GRIFFITHS].

Mr. GRIFFITHS. Mr. Chairman, because a few months ago a little statement was made on the Dillon Dam I should like to make one myself, because the Dillon Dam happens to be situated in my district practically entirely.

It is not very easy for any Member of Congress, I know, to know that he has to have three villages in his district moved because of a dam. I went into it thoroughly with the people who protested that live in those villages. They submitted other plans. We had the Army engineers go into the matter, and they decided those plans were not feasible, that the present plans were the only way in reason in which it could be controlled. It is true that I have three pretty good-sized villages that will have to be moved.

In regard to the housing situation, let us be fair about that. The engineers stated it was not necessary to move most of these until 1949. They would not have to be destroyed. In fact, the majority of them, practically all of them, will be moved without even disturbing the contents of the homes.

This dam will add materially to the protection of Zanesville, Malta, McConnellsville, and Marietta, Ohio. If you people ever lived along a dam and saw your entire business district flooded so that you could get in a boat and row across the top of the trolley wire, then you would realize how much we are interested in flood prevention. I certainly hope, since this dam was provided for in 1939, that any amendment based on the theory that because it was not started before the dam should never be started will be defeated. I think that is very fallacious reasoning and I certainly hope that amendment when offered will not be accepted.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFITHS. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think it is fair to say that the dam under consideration is the last of probably 13 dams. Thirteen dams on the Muskingum River and its tributaries were constructed under the original plan proposed by the conservancy district in Ohio. I know of no river and the tributaries of no river that have been more generously treated. I know of no river and its tributaries where more dams have been constructed under the Flood Control Act than on the Muskingum River. In deference to my friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCGREGOR], we heard witness after witness. I think it is fair to say that the proposed substitute of smaller dams, according to the testimony in the hearings and according to the report of the Chief of Engineers, shows that more property would be condemned, more land would be condemned, more homes would be condemned, and it would result in less benefits than the dam that is under consideration. Those are the results of the substitution of smaller dams advocated by those who oppose the large dam.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. McGREGOR. Can the gentleman give us any reason why it is necessary to construct this dam at this time when it will destroy approximately 750 homes while at the same time we are giving Wilson Wyatt $400,000,000 to construct homes?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I answered the gentleman's question by saying that the dam to which he refers was authorized in 1938. There was a protest before the Committee on Appropriations. The place to file a protest about the actual construction is before the Committee on Appropriations, who considered the matter last December and again this year and made the appropriations. This is not an appropriation bill. This is an authorization bill.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am delighted to yield, sir, but I do not have a thing on earth to do with Wilson Wyatt, and I opposed housing subsidies.

Mr. McGREGOR. Then the gentleman is hiding behind the idea that because it is something that happened in the past we cannot start to correct it now; is that it?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No, no; I do not hide behind anything.

Mr. McGREGOR. I know you do not.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I always speak out in the open and say what I think. I have tried to answer the gentleman's question fairly.

Mr. McGREGOR. I know you have, sir.

Mr. GRIFFITHS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do want to say on behalf of myself as a member of the Committee on Flood Control that of all the committees with which I have been associated, our distinguished chairman is most courteous and most helpful. He has not tried to hide behind anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. GRIFFITHS. If any protest came up, he was perfectly willing to go into such matters and we went into them even after the hearings were concluded. As I said before, anybody who has the idea that 700 homes are going to be destroyed either has not read the report of the engineers or is barking up a tree.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee for a little explanation concerning the item of $125,000,000 on page 18. The gentleman is one of the most erudite gentlemen in the House and he knows more about flood-control projects than most any man in Congress. I refer to Burr Oak Dam, which is to be located in Ohio on the headwaters of the Hocking River. As I understand it, this Congress has heretofore authorized the construction of the project and has indicated that the cost on the part of the Government will be about $560,000. Of course, the project has not been commenced and the State of Ohio is about to make arrangements to come forward with the proper matching, as provided in the original understanding.

I should like to ask whether that $125,000,000 has any application to that situation.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I have anticipated the gentleman's question. I stated that I was as anxious to protect the taxpayers as anybody in the country, and I was careful to state the total authorizations as distinguished from the total approved projects. I stated that it would require the appropriation of all of the authorizations heretofore made for the Ohio River and its tributaries to complete the projects now under way and the projects that have been initiated, and that the Ohio River Basin was one of the large basins in the United States where there are no funds available for new projects.

To answer the gentleman specifically, the project to which he refers, having been previously authorized, could not be constructed without additional authorization, and this $125,000,000 will provide for additional authorizations, and they will be constructed in the order and under the priorities agreed upon by the local interests and the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. JENKINS. As I understand it, if and when the Army engineers have made all the surveys with reference to the Burr Oak Dam, then, if they would put that project on the list and go before the Appropriations Committee and ask for an appropriation, when we pass this bill all the necessary legislation will have been passed for the Appropriations Committee to act?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Exactly so. In the Ohio River Valley from Olean to Cairo—I am not talking about approvals, but all authorizations will be exhausted in the completion of projects that have been put under way and are now in process of construction, and that to provide for appropriations for any project, including the project which the gentleman speaks of as having been previously authorized, this authorization of $125,000,000 is essential.

Mr. JENKINS. The Governor of Ohio is calling into extra session the legislature of that State and one of the propositions he expects to put in his message calling the legislators into special session is the construction of the Burr Oak Dam. I have told the Governor that I think with the previous authorization already made and with the authorization we will make here today, that the Army engineers will be ready to build that project when they have the plans completed, which will be in a short time. I, therefore, think that the Governor of Ohio can safely instruct his legislature to make the necessary preparations to go forward with securing the State's part of the money necessary for the construction of that project.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think the gentleman is correct. Where communities are willing to cooperate, the projects have been constructed more expeditiously than elsewhere.

Mr. JENKINS. I thank the gentleman for his information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 4 minutes.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL].

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Chairman, I have been rather concerned about this bill, and as indicated in my questioning of the chairman while he was speaking, it is because I fear the construction of certain levees on the Indiana side, opposite the district I represent, may work a hardship and cause the destruction of considerable property and cause some of the people on the Illinois side great inconvenience. I wanted to go along with this bill, on the belief—and I do have the belief and I know that the chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], will do everything within his power to see that justice is done—if and when this bill is passed, the result of the passage of this bill will eventually bring flood construction work into progress. I am not sure at the present time whether I can vote for the bill. Perhaps the debate will help me make up my mind before it becomes necessary for me to cast my vote.

As I stated before, the floodwaters on the river at Mount Vernon, Ill., would be raised some 5½ feet. Restricting the channel at that point by the building of these dams on the Indiana side will probably flood a good many thousand acres of fertile productive land on the Illinois side and cause the power plant serving a city of 10,000 people at Mount Carmel to be raised at great expense. I have had the matter up with the Government and I am in doubt whether the Government will provide financial aid to cover the cost when it becomes necessary to elevate this power plant. I know that in the past, because of flood-control districts raising their levee heights, considerable damage has been done the people on the Illinois side. For that reason I look with considerable questioning on whether or not strictly from a local point of view it will be beneficial or whether it will not be destructive to the people on the Illinois side. For that reason at the present time I withhold my judgment. I hope that if this bill passes—and it is apparent that it is going to pass—that the Army engineers will make the resurvey they promised to make in order that justice may be done to the people on the Illinois side as well as the Indiana side.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have no desire to influence the gentleman's judgment, but I remind him that three of these projects are located in the State of Illinois. I do not know of course whether they are located in the gentleman's district. I may say also that these projects are largely revisions of projects adopted in 1936.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this bill, H. R. 6597, proposes to continue the flood-control program which the Committee on Flood Control has been sponsoring so well during the last few years. The purpose of the bill is to create authorizations so that the program can go forward in an orderly fashion. I am particularly interested in the authorizations proposed herein for the Missouri River Basin. The existing authorizations will be exhausted by the completion of the projects presently outlined and on which work has been started and funds committed. The bill is necessary if this program for establishing flood control in an area covering one-sixth of the entire United States is to go forward.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am glad to have the gentleman make that statement, and in order that there may be no misunderstanding about the amounts heretofore authorized, I repeat what I have previously stated in my general remarks on this bill, that while there are projects approved aggregating $3,675,958,000, and I have them itemized, the authorizations for appropriations aggregate $1,680,400,000, and the total cost of completing the projects heretofore begun and now under construction is approximately $1,638,485,000. So from a national viewpoint there remains an authorization of only $42,000,000 for new projects.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think it is well to have that statement by the chairman, who, in my opinion, is the best qualified man in the country to speak with knowledge on the subject. He knows what projects have been approved, what their completion costs are, and what authorizations for appropriations have been made. The figures he cited, I understand, relate to all projects and are not limited to the projects in the Missouri Basin in which I had expressed special interest.

The establishment of the cash authorizations is very important for proper consideration of appropriation requests by the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the War Department which handles the so-called civil functions bill. In that committee we are always up against the question of whether or not the appropriations that are requested through the Bureau of the Budget are in excess of existing authorizations. I hope the gentleman will place in the RECORD the itemized list to which he has referred. Such a list would be convenient for reference and we desire to have the record perfectly clear so that when we report a bill carrying actual appropriations it will not be subject to a point of order on the ground of being in excess of existing authorizations for some project or projects.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, may I say to the distinguished chairman of the Flood Control Committee that I am truly appreciative of one thing that happened last year in connection with this bill? There was at that time a flood hazard in the State of Arizona at Holbrook, on the Little Colorado, which had been examined, surveyed properly by the Army engineers, and their report was complete before the bill was brought to the House; however, the entire survey was not completed, as there were some other reports yet due. After the bill went to the Senate those reports were completed and the item was taken care of in the other body, the chairman giving support in conference. It means that a flood-control hazard has been looked after so far as the legislative part of it is concerned and the way cleared for construction.

Mr. Chairman, again I want to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. I understand that certain flood-control surveys have been completed by the Army engineers along and in the watershed of the Gila River in Arizona, especially one concerning the area near Tucson, another on the upper Gila, and still a third survey on the Bill Williams River in Arizona suggesting the building of a dam on the Alamo site. These surveys, so far as the Army engineers are concerned, have been completed, but the entire requirement for each has not been met. If these surveys or any one of them, can be completed and the recommendations can be submitted, may I ask the chairman of the committee whether there is a possibility of getting one or more of them in the bill in the other body?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I will answer the gentleman's question as I have answered others of the same character. If the Department of the Interior, the governor of the State and the agencies agree, and it is submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, I know of no reason why it should not be included in the other body on recommendation of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. MURDOCK. I thank the gentleman.

I am calling attention to this matter, hoping again this year that it may be possible to hurry up the necessary additional reports on one or more of these Arizona projects and thus perhaps get authorization without the lapse of another year of time. I cannot say surely that any of the flood control provisions called for in the present uncompleted reports are quite so serious as last year, involving jeopardy of human life to such a degree as did the one at Holbrook, Ariz., which was incorporated in the bill last year. However, all of these in Arizona now do involve great risk to life and property and do call for early action. For that reason, I hope that the Senators may be able to add one or more of them to this authorization bill before it goes to the President's desk.

I understand that the Army engineers have finished their report on a project near Tucson, Ariz., in which some very bad floods have recently occurred. I distinctly recall that my colleague now decreased, Congressman Buell Snyder, of Pennsylvania, told me that on a visit to Tucson 2 or 3 years ago he was caught in a flood on the outskirts of that city and had some risk of losing his life. I remember that it was reported that considerable property damage was done by that flood. I think without doubt there is great urgency with regard to this construction which the Army engineers recommend. Since this does not involve irrigation, it may be that the corollary report called for in so many completed reports will in this case either be unnecessary or in the meantime quickly obtained.

I am not quite sure about the engineers' reports on other portions of the Gila watershed, for it has been surveyed throughout, but I do know that a very destructive flood did great damage to Duncan, Ariz., only a few years ago. I also know that that growing Arizona city has been several times greatly harmed by floods on the Gila River. Here again is a case where dams and other control work which I believe the Army engineers have recommended should be constructed in the near future. More time may be required in this instance because reclamation will be involved here, and reclamation will be involved to a great degree at any place on the Gila River where flood control work is called for.

I do know that the Army engineers have investigated and reported favorably on flood-control dams and other such structures on the Bill Williams River and on the San Pedro River, as well as the Gila River. I hope to see something done in the immediate future toward the building of dams on these streams, especially a dam on the San Pedro at the Old Charleston site, one on the Gila below the San Pedro and more especially a dam on the Bill Williams by the Army engineers at the Alamo Site. Not only is flood control and also irrigation involved in these proposed dams, as well as in a dam recommended on the Gila River below the mouth of the San Pedro, but in all these cases for the protection of property and for some the furnishing of domestic water supply for great and growing cities. To illustrate, I am sure if the people of Los Angeles fully understood the situation pertaining to the proposed dam on the Bill Williams River they would join me in urging that something be done about it.

The Bill Williams River enters the Colorado River just above Parker Dam and at the point where the Los Angeles aqueduct diverts water for the metropolitan water district of southern California, which includes Los Angeles and about a dozen other surrounding California cities. While the Bill Williams is an all-Arizona river and, in my judgment, California has little rightful claim to its waters, it is a fact that those waters are emptied into Havasu Lake from which the great water supply for Los Angeles area is drawn. In fact, the Bill Williams River empties into the lake directly opposite the municipal water intake, in a way to jeopardize the California city's supply. Every man, woman, and child in southern California ought to be interested in protective work on the Bill Williams River even though it is in Arizona.

I certainly am interested in it, for the reasons just indicated, and also for the additional reason that flood protection further down the Colorado River on both sides of the Colorado would accordingly be furnished and also for the further reason that some irrigation in my State would very likely be made possible by such joint construction at or near the Alamo site. Therefore I have felt that I must, during the consideration of this bill, call attention to these needs, in the hope that the finishing up of the required reports might be had on the more urgent of these proposals.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. NORRELL].

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Chairman, is there anything in the pending bill that will in any way change or affect existing law with reference to the base, grade, or height of the levees existing in the lower Mississippi River, especially between the States of Mississippi on the east and Arkansas and Louisiana on the west?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Nothing whatsoever.

Mr. NORRELL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LARCADE].

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any further argument necessary with respect to this bill. There is no opposition whatsoever to it and I see no reason for going into a further discussion of the bill itself. I do take time to say a few words, however, in connection with the service of the chairman of this committee.

Recently we have had a number of very valuable members of this Congress who have resigned because they were not able to make ends meet on the salary they received here, and they have accepted the positions which paid them a remuneration sufficient for them to take care of themselves and their families properly and to provide for their future.

In the case of the chairman of the Committee on Flood Control, the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], I want to call your attention to the fact that he is serving in the Congress at a great sacrifice. We all know that he has vast interests in the State of Mississippi, and yet he is serving here as chairman of this committee as a patriotic duty, and at great personal sacrifice. He is giving of his talents and of his time in the interest of his State and of his country in one of the greatest works, I think, that any Member of this Congress can undertake. He has made a study of this subject of flood control, and I consider him and Senator OVERTON from Louisiana two of the best-informed men in the United States on that subject.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] has just emerged from hearings which lasted during the entire month of April and part of May, and he gave of his patience and his knowledge and his experience to the consideration of all of these great projects that are included in this bill. I think that this Congress and the people of the United States generally owe a great debt of gratitude to the gentleman from Mississippi in this great work.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS] such time as he may desire.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, this is an excellent bill and I join my colleague who has just paid tribute to this great committee and its members in the laudation and plaudits that are due them.

Mr. Chairman, Red River is one of the great rivers of the world. It is 1,208 miles long. It rises at Canyon, Tex., and flows along the boundary line of Texas and Oklahoma for hundreds of miles, passing through southwest Arkansas and enters northwest Louisiana, flowing in a southeasterly direction to its confluence with the Atchafalaya and the Mississippi. From time immemorial it has created great and devastating floods.

The greatest of all floods on Red River occurred in the year 1945 when the river reached a peak discharge of 303,000 cubic feet per second at Shreveport, La. During that year the river overflowed approximately 1,000,000 acres between Boggy Creek and the Mississippi River backwater area.

Under the plan presented in the bill, consideration of the flood problem along the right bank of the river from Denison Dam in Texas to Boyce, La., is given and also along the left bank of the river from Denison Dam to Moncla, La. Below these points the flood problem falls under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi Commission.

To get some idea of the problem presented, it is interesting to note that the basin has a population of 2,816,000 people as of 1940. In the valley are 91,000 square miles of land to be protected. Between 1843 and 1900 six great floods occurred along the Red River, but as I have said before, the greatest was in 1945. It was during the course of this flood that I had occasion to fly over a large part of it and then traversed the area along the edges of the overflow waters by car, going out into the overflow itself by boat. I saw scenes of property destruction and distress approach that of the war-devastated regions of Europe.

The plan presented by this bill contemplates taking care of a design flood which would overflow 1,700,000 acres, a much greater flood than occurred in 1945. Included in this would be 774,000 acres of cropland.

The plan proposes six reservoirs to be located along the Boggy River, Kiamichi River, Little River, Sulphur River, and two on Cypress Creek. In periods of heavy floods the reservoirs will fill up and retard the flow of water on the main stem of the Red. As the high water recedes, the reservoirs will be gradually allowed to retain the water which will be permitted to flow down the Red River in an orderly manner.

Bank protection and levee work on the main stem will cost about $3,500,000.

When this great project along the Red River is completed it would prevent flood damages averaging $2,700,000 annually. It will return benefits exceeding $700,000 annually by making certain lands presently unsuitable for cultivation usable as croplands. In other words, the total benefits will exceed $3,400,000 in direct benefits.

Mr. Chairman, as I said at the beginning, from time immemorial the people of the Red River Valley have been living in a constant state of fear of floods. Year by year they have seen the floodwaters of other States descend upon them in tremendous volume flooding their lands and destroying their lives and property. Under the laws of the State of Louisiana, our people have organized levee boards along both sides of the river. They have year by year taxed themselves to build levees, bank protection, and do other defensive types of work. Millions upon millions of dollars have been spent by the people of this basin on this type of work and with very helpful results. Everyone has come to realize that the problem of flood control on a river more than 1,200 miles long is not a local problem. Ability does not lie in the local people to properly handle or to cope with floodwaters that descend periodically upon them from other regions far removed. As a result of this fact, the appeal has been made in these flood-control bills to help with interstate streams. This is the only way the problem can be handled and we who live under the shadow of a constant fear plead with you to give us the protection which the lower Red River Valley is entitled to receive.

Mr. Chairman, in 1945 the damages from floods in the United States was very heavy. The Army engineers estimated that the damage for all portions totaled $103,800,000. This damage may be divided between agriculture and industry. For instance, agriculture suffered $45,000,000 in flood damages last year and industrial and other damages totaled $58,000,000. In the Red River Valley alone the damages from the devastating floods of 1945 totaled $12,600,000 and 2,624,000 acres of land in my home State of Louisiana were inundated by the ravages of the 1945 devastating floods.

It is therefore vitally important to our people that this bill do pass. This program means the reclaiming for agricultural and industrial use of millions of acres of land. It means the saving of lives and the annual savings of millions of dollars in property. When the program for flood control on Red River is completed, great development in this area of the world can reasonably be expected. New homes, new businesses, new industries, and new activities will spring up in the reclaimed and protected lands, adding hundreds of millions of dollars to the wealth of the Nation and happiness to the people protected from a dreadful scourge which is as old as the country is itself.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I, too, want to pay my respects to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] who is the chairman of this Committee on Flood Control. I especially want to compliment him on the fine democratic way in which he has always conducted his committee, the way in which this bill was reported out of committee, and the thorough hearings that were given to everybody concerned with this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 13 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, in the closing minutes of this general debate on this very worth-while bill, I do not have the time to discuss the various projects that have been most ably presented by the distinguished chairman of this committee. But I do want to say a few words with reference to flood control generally and with reference to the very fine and able work which the chairman of this committee has done, and, if I may be permitted to do so as a member of the committee, also say something about the work of the committee in general.

Mr. Chairman, much has been said here today, and justifiably so, about the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON]. I am serving my tenth year on that committee and I want to join others in approving everything that has been said about that very capable gentleman. I believe that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] is as great a civilian authority on flood control in general as we have in the United States. The distinguished senior Senator from Louisiana, the Honorable JOHN H. OVERTON, is an authority on flood control and has likewise made a great contribution in that direction. I know that in the committee it is difficult to say anything about any stream or even a small creek that the gentleman from Mississippi does not have knowledge of and in most cases intimate knowledge of. He can tell you almost offhand just what has been authorized in every section, in nearly every congressional district, and he can tell you pretty well what has been spent in every section. When we on the committee sit with him day after day and observe his familiarity with the whole flood-control program of the Nation, we ourselves are often astonished at his very intimate knowledge of the broad subject.

Mr. Chairman, may I now say just a word about my colleagues on the committee. This committee is strictly nonpartisan. You hear that about a good many committees, but that is certainly true of the Committee on Flood Control. In the time I have been on that committee I have never known any politics to enter into it. We consider propositions, programs, and plans, and we are not concerned about where they are, what State they are in, what district they are in, or anything like that. We consider the entire picture of the Nation as a whole.

I remember when I first went on that committee in 1937 we had a disastrous flood in the Ohio Valley. I recall that we worked hard for a long time to solve the problems in the Ohio Valley. As I recall now, the southern part of the country, from which I hail, did not receive any great benefits in that particular bill, but we were just as concerned because it helped the country as a whole. I worked hard to bring to the people of that great valley the protection they needed. That has always been the guiding principle of the members of that committee. We have sought to do that thing which would bring to our Nation as a whole the greatest possible benefit.

Now may I say something about the great Corps of Engineers. That group of men in the Corps of Engineers, as has been pointed out here this evening, is perhaps the best qualified group of men in all the world on problems of flood control. They have demonstrated that time and time again. They know their business. They are always fair. They are always considerate. You cannot unduly influence them, but you can always go to them and reason with them. If you have a good proposition they will readily see it and they will do their best to help you. I know of no group of men in all the Government service more capable, more accommodating and more loyal than are the men in the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. Chairman, I think something ought to be stated here about the conservatism of the engineers. When there are those who are prone to criticize projects written into flood-control bills by the committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, I remind you of the fact that the engineers are always conservative, thoroughly conservative, sometimes we think ultra-conservative. I am glad they are conservative, I am glad that they screen everything carefully and that they go into every project very carefully, because it allows us as members of the committee to present to you projects that have been carefully weighed and carefully considered by the engineers and by the governors of the State where the projects are situated.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I will be happy to yield to my very distinguished chairman.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I stated from my independent recollection to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL], when he spoke about the project at Mount Carmel, that I was sure it had been provided for. I should like the record to show that on page 25 of the bill there is provision for an examination and survey covering, and I quote:

Wabash River at and in the vicinity of Mount Carmel, Ill.

I was sure I was right at the time, but I want the record to show that we have not only provided for it in this particular bill under consideration but also by a resolution of the committee.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I thank our chairman. That bears out just what I said about the chairman of our committee. He knows his flood-control work. He knows what has been done and where it has been done.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a word about this bill. This bill affects almost every congressional district in the Nation directly. Indirectly it affects every congressional district in the Nation, even the city districts a long way perhaps from any flood on any river. Those districts are directly concerned because the city people must get their bread and butter and their fiber from the farms. In many cases those farms are being overflowed. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am glad that throughout the years I have been on this committee, flood-control bills have enjoyed great support even from gentlemen representing city districts because those gentlemen were wise enough and fair enough to realize that the city dwellers are vitally concerned about conserving the lands and the rich valleys of our country in order that the people of this Nation might continue to have food and fiber.

Mr. Chairman, erosion in this Nation has played a tremendous part in our agricultural economy. Back yonder a long time ago we cleared off our lands. However, we were not careful enough to provide against erosion in many places and our lands to a great extent have been depleted and worn out. Several years ago we were told in our committee that lands of the United States were being depleted and worn out to the tune of about 300,000 acres a year. We were also told by the best soil-conservation authority in the United States and probably in the world, Dr. Bennett, that in probably 150 years this Nation would reach a point where it might not be self-sustaining, agriculturally speaking, unless we stopped the trend of erosion and unless we conserved our soil.

Mr. Chairman, this leads me to say that it is most vital, most important—it is a matter of paramount importance that this Congress see to it that our great river valleys all over the country are conserved and protected that they might not suffer recurring floods year after year. I recall in 1945 when regions that had not suffered floods for a good while were completely devastated and crops were destroyed, livestock was killed, and people lost their lives. There were no crops. We are feeling the pinch of that right now at this time when America needs to have all of the food and grain and food products that we can get. Mr. Chairman, in the last 3 years we have had a destruction of probably $350,000,000 worth of property in this country because of floods. Of course, we did not have any flood-control work during the war. That is understandable. Nobody blames the Chief Executive for impounding the money of the country during the war. We had to win the war. But now that the war is over, now that peace has come, at least we hope, it is high time, Mr. Chairman, that this Congress should go back and pick up the flood-control program, and that we should give to the river regions, to the valleys of this land, and to all regions of this country the protective flood-control works which we must have to guarantee to this country a perpetual supply of farm products.

The amount of land contained in our fine river valleys is limited. That land is very fertile. That land has had the washings of centuries. The best soil from the hills of the Nation has flowed into these valleys. That makes it all the more imperative that we now bring to those valleys the greatest possible protection from floods so that the people of the Nation may get the benefit of the protective power of every possible acre of that rich land. Any other course is shortsighted.

Mr. Chairman, as stated a moment ago the flood damages in the past 3 years have probably reached $350,000,000. This vast sum has been lost forever to the people of the United States. Do not think that that loss was only in the valleys where the floods occur. That was a loss to all the people. It is true that the loss was felt most keenly in the valleys, but the result of that loss can be felt, and is being felt, all over the Nation.

Flood control pays dividends. It pays and pays well. Certainly there is no investment that means more for the future happiness and prosperity of our people than the conservation of our lands and the protection of our vast rich river valleys from the constant menace of floods. We get more back each year than we spend on flood control. It is an investment which we owe to those who are to come after us. We have no right to use the blessings which we find to our hands without trying, as best we can, to pass on to and make certain that our children will also be able to enjoy comparable blessings.

Some perhaps will argue that we have sufficient authorizations already. The answer to that, Mr. Chairman, is that we need additional authorizations so that the Corps of Engineers can spend the money at its disposal in shaping a broad comprehensive flood-control plan in each river valley and in the Nation as a whole. More and more the engineers are working out programs and plans to cover each valley as a whole and then to correlate as much as possible the protective works in the various valleys. This is wise. It seems to me that this is the way to realize the maximum amount of good. That is why it is now of great importance that we have additional authorizations so that the engineers can work out a program in each valley that will achieve maximum protection and the greatest good to the whole. Moreover, as has been pointed out here today, additional authorizations will bring us a backlog of projects, worth-while projects, to be used in the event we are visited with terrible depressions in the future. In considering these projects in this bill it is true, as it has always been true in other bills, that each project has received the full approval of the Corps of Engineers. The committee does not include any project which has not been fully approved by the engineers.

This bill is a good bill. Frankly, I think that it is probably the best flood-control bill which has ever been presented to Congress by the committee while I have been a member of the Flood Control Committee. I trust that it will meet the approval of the Members of Congress, and that the project may be authorized. I think it is timely. I urge, therefore, the approval of the bill in its entirety.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN] has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana was granted permission to revise and extend his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Flood Control Act of 1946."

SEC. 2. That section 3 of the act approved June 22, 1936 (Public, No. 738, 74th Cong.), as amended by section 2 of the act approved June 28, 1938 (Public, No. 761, 75th Cong.), shall apply to all works authorized in this act except that for any channel improvement or channel-rectification project, provisions (a), (b), and (c) of section 3 of said act of June 22, 1936, shall apply thereto, and except as otherwise provided by law: Provided, That the authorization for any flood-control project herein adopted requiring local cooperation shall expire 5 years from the date on which local interests are notified in writing by the War Department of the requirements of local cooperation, unless said interests shall within said time furnish assurances satisfactory to the Secretary of War that the required cooperation will be furnished.

The provisions of section 1 of the act of December 22, 1944 (Public, No. 534, 78th Cong., 2d sess.), shall govern with respect to projects herein authorized; and the procedures therein set forth with respect to plans, proposals, or reports for works of improvement for navigation or flood control and for irrigation and purposes incidental thereto shall apply as if herein set forth in full.

SEC. 3. That hereafter for authorized flood-protection projects which include alterations of railroad bridges the Chief of Engineers is authorized to include at Federal expense the necessary alterations of railroad bridges and approaches in connection therewith.

SEC. 4. That section 4 of the act approved December 22, 1944 (Public, No. 534, 78th Cong.), is amended to read as follows:

"The Chief of Engineers, under the supervision of the Secretary of War, is authorized to construct, maintain, and operate public park and recreational facilities in reservoir areas under the control of the War Department, and to permit the construction, maintenance, and operation of such facilities. The Secretary of War is authorized to grant leases of lands, including structures or facilities thereon, in reservoir areas for such periods and upon such terms as he may deem reasonable: Provided, That leases to nonprofit organizations may be granted at reduced or nominal rentals in recognition of the public service to be rendered in utilizing the leased premises: Provided further, That preference shall be given to Federal, State, or local governmental agencies, and licenses may be granted without monetary considerations, to such agencies for the use of all or any portion of a reservoir area, when the Secretary of War determines such action to be in the public interest, and for such periods of time and upon such conditions as he may find advisable. The water areas of all such reservoirs shall be open to public use generally, without charge, for boating, swimming, bathing, fishing, and other recreational purposes, and ready access to and exit from such water areas along the shores of such reservoirs shall be maintained for general public use, when such use is determined by the Secretary of War not to be contrary to the public interest, all under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may deem necessary. No use of any area to which this section applies shall be permitted which is inconsistent with the laws for the protection of fish and game of the State in which such area is situated. All moneys received for leases or privileges shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts."

SEC. 5. That section 7 of the act approved August 18, 1941 (Public, No. 228, 77th Cong.), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That 75 percent of all moneys received and deposited in the Treasury of the United States during any fiscal year on account of the leasing of lands acquired by the United States for flood-control purposes shall be paid at the end of such year by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State in which such property is situated, to be expended as the State legislature may prescribe for the benefit of public schools and public roads of the county, or counties, in which such property is situated: Provided, That when such property is situated in more than one State or county, the distributive share to each from the proceeds of such property shall be proportional to its area therein."

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered, under such terms and conditions as are deemed advisable by him, to grant easements for rights-of-way over, across, in, and upon lands under his control, to any State, political subdivision thereof, or municipality, or to any individual, partnership, or corporation of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, for (a) railroad tracks; (b) oil pipe lines; (c) substations for electric power transmission lines, telephone lines, and telegraph lines, and pumping stations for gas, water, sewer, and oil pipe lines; (d) canals; (e) ditches; (f) flumes; (g) tunnels; (h) dams and reservoirs in connection with fish and wildlife programs, fish hatcheries, and other fish-cultural improvements; (i) roads and streets; and (j) for any other purpose or purposes deemed advisable by the Secretary of War: Provided, That such rights-of-way shall be granted only upon a finding by the Secretary of War that the same will not be incompatible with the public interest: Provided further, That such rights-of-way shall not include any more land than is reasonably necessary for the purpose for which granted: And provided further, That all or any part of such rights-of-way may be annulled and forfeited by the Secretary of War for failure to comply with the terms and conditions of any grant hereunder or for nonuse for a period of 2 consecutive years or abandonment of rights granted under authority hereof.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of War is authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to use any property or parts thereof, including lands and improvements, under his control and jurisdiction for the prosecution of any authorized civil work or function administered by the War Department without charge, except usual handling charges, against appropriations for such civil works or functions.

SEC. 8. Whenever the Chief of Engineers shall find that any highway, railway, or utility has been or is being damaged or destroyed by reason of the operation of any dam or reservoir project under the control of the War Department, he may utilize any funds available for the construction, maintenance, or operation of the project involved for the repair, relocation, restoration, or protection of such highway, railway, or utility: Provided, That this section shall not apply to highways, railways, and utilities previously provided for by the War Department, unless the Chief of Engineers determines that the actual damage has or will exceed that for which provision had previously been made.

SEC. 9. That the following works of improvement for the benefit of navigation and the control of destructive floodwaters and other purposes are hereby adopted and authorized to be prosecuted under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers in accordance with the plans in the respective reports hereinafter designated and subject to the conditions set forth therein: Provided, That the necessary plans, specifications, and preliminary work may be prosecuted on any project authorized in this act with funds from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for flood control so as to be ready for rapid inauguration of a construction program: Provided further, That the projects authorized herein shall be initiated as expeditiously and prosecuted as vigorously as may be consistent with budgetary requirements: And provided further, That penstocks and other similar facilities adapted to possible future use in the development of hydroelectric power shall be installed in any dam authorized in this act for construction by the War Department when approved by the Secretary of War on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers and the Federal Power Commission:

DELAWARE RIVER BASIN

The project for flood protection on the Lehigh River, Pa., is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document No. 587, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, at an estimated cost of $12,471,000.

POTOMAC RIVER BASIN

The local flood-protection project at Cumberland and West Cumberland, Md., and Ridgeley, W. Va., authorized in the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936 (Public, No. 738, 74th Cong.), is hereby amended to provide for completion of the project substantially in accordance with plans on file in the Office of the Chief of Engineers at an estimated cost to the United States of $7,420,000 and subject to the conditions of local cooperation prescribed for that project in the act approved June 22, 1936, as modified, now estimated at $1,520,000.

The project for flood protection at Waynesboro, Va., on South River is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document No. ——, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, at an estimated cost of $1,431,000.

The project for protection at Washington, D. C., on Potomac River, authorized by the act of June 22, 1936, is hereby modified substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in House Document No. ——, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, at an estimated cost of $500,000.

Completion of the Savage River Dam on Savage River, Md., is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the plan contained in House Document No. ——, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, at a cost to the United States now estimated at $1,900,000, subject to the conditions that local interests make a cash contribution of $200,000 toward the cost of the work, and agree to hold and save the United States free from damages due to the construction works, and to maintain and operate all the works after completion in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War.

LOWER MISSISSIPPI RIVER

The project for flood control and improvement of the lower Mississippi River adopted by the act approved May 15, 1928, as amended by subsequent acts, is hereby modified and expanded to include the following items and the authorization for said project is increased accordingly:

(a) Improvement of the Boeuf and Tensas Rivers and Bayou Macon at an estimated cost of $5,013,000 authorized in the act approved December 22, 1944.

(b) Extension of the authorized improvement under subparagraph (a) to include the improvement of Bayou LaFourche, La., including cut-offs, as may be found requisite to effectuate the purposes of the plan, at an estimated cost of $5,913,000 and substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in Senate Document No. 191, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session.

(c) Extension of the authorized improvement under subparagraph (a) to include the improvement of the Boeuf and Tensas Rivers and Bayou Macon north of the Louisiana State line, including cut-offs, as may be found requisite to effectuate the purposes of the plan, at an estimated cost of $4,930,000 substantially in accordance with the report of the Chief of Engineers dated April 8, 1946.

(d) Improvement of Big Sunflower, Little Sunflower, Hushpuckena, and Quiver Rivers and their tributaries, and on Hull Brake—Mill Creek Canal, Bogue Phalia, Ditchlow Bayou, Deer Creek, and Steele Bayou, Miss., at an estimated cost of $3,752,000 authorized in the act approved December 22, 1944.

(e) Extension of the authorized improvement under subparagraph (d) upstream and downstream, including cut-offs, as may be found requisite to effectuate the purposes of the plan, at an estimated cost of $2,500,000 for modification of the authorized project.

(f) Extension of the authorized headwater project for the Yazoo River and tributaries to include improvements in the area between the Yazoo-Tallahatchie-Coldwater River system and the hills to protect against overflows from the main stem and hill tributaries in such cases and by such means as the Chief of Engineers may consider warranted, at an estimated cost of $7,500,000 for modification of the authorized project.

(g) Extension of the authorized headwater project for the Yazoo River and tributaries to include the drainage of run-off waters from the watershed of McKinney Bayou or the providing of pumping capacity additional to that now existing for said waters in the proportion determined by the Chief of Engineers are authorized in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers at an estimated cost of $300,000 for modification of the authorized project.

(h) The Bayou des Glaises diversion channel, Louisiana, authorized by and constructed under the act approved June 22, 1936.

(i) That portion of the North Little Rock to Gillette, Ark., levee on the north bank of the Arkansas River along and below Plum Bayou authorized by and constructed under the act approved June 22, 1936, work thereon to be hereafter prosecuted in accordance with the act of May 15, 1928, as amended.

(j) The projects for local flood protection on the White River, on the east side between Augusta and Clarendon, Ark., and at the town of De Valls Bluff, Ark., at an estimated cost of $2,847,500 authorized by the act approved August 18, 1941.

(k) The Tiptonville-Obion levee authorized by and constructed under the act approved June 22, 1936.

(l) Extension of the levee under subparagraph (k) to include the levee and drainage improvements, at an estimated cost of $6,000,000 substantially in accordance with the report of the Chief of Engineers dated April 16, 1946.

(m) The improvement of Saint Johns Bayou, Mo., at an estimated cost of $1,300,000, substantially in accordance with the report of the Chief of Engineers, dated April 16, 1946.

(n) The improvement of the harbor at Memphis, Tenn., at an estimated cost of $17,120,000, substantially in accordance with the report of the Chief of Engineers dated April 12, 1946.

(o) Modification of the main line levee system of the authorized project for the lower Mississippi River to include protection of the potential industrial area immediately north of Vicksburg, Miss., known as the Vicksburg-Yazoo area, together with local dredging and the construction of such drainage facilities as in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers are requisite and justified, at an estimated cost of $4,000,000, subject to the conditions that local interests provide without cost to the United States all rights-of-way required for levees and drainage, and maintain and operate the works after completion.

(p) Modification of the authorized project for the lower Mississippi River to provide drainage in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers where drainage is impaired by levees hitherto or hereafter constructed, at an estimated cost of $500,000, subject to the conditions that local interests provide without cost to the United States all rights-of-way and maintain and operate the works after completion.

(q) Modification of the authorized project for the lower Mississippi River to provide that the local cooperation to be hereafter furnished for the works authorized in the Saint Francis River Basin and the Yazoo River Basin shall consist of the requirement that responsible local interests agree to maintain levees in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the act of May 15, 1928, where maintenance is required under existing law.

(r) Any former officer of the Corps of Engineers who, after retirement and recall to active duty in the Army, has served over 15 years as a member of the Mississippi River Commission while on such active duty shall, upon being relieved of such active duty, be eligible to and shall retain, during the will of the President, the position and office held by him as a member of the Mississippi River Commission.

In order to provide for the increased costs of construction of the authorized project for the Lower Mississippi River as recommended by the president of the Mississippi River Commission and the Chief of Engineers, the authorization for flood control and improvement of the lower Mississippi River is hereby increased by an additional $100,000,000.

The project for flood control along Lake Pontchartrain in Jefferson Parish, La., is hereby authorized substantially in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers in his report dated December 10, 1945, at an estimated cost of $900,000.

The project for flood protection at Memphis on Wolf River and Nonconnah Creek, Tenn., authorized by the act approved August 28, 1937 (Public, No. 406, 75th Cong.), as amended by the act approved June 28, 1939 (Public, No. 154, 76th Cong.), is further amended to authorize the completion of the project at an additional estimated cost of $1,500,000.

SEC. 11. That section 5 of the Flood Control Act of August 18, 1941, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to allot, from any appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for flood control, not to exceed $2,000,000 for any one fiscal year to be expended in rescue work or in the repair or maintenance of any flood-control work threatened or destroyed by flood."

SEC. 12. That section 2 of the Flood Control Act of August 28, 1937, as amended, is hereby further amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to allot not to exceed $1,000,000 from any appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for any one fiscal year for flood control, for removing accumulated snags and other debris, and clearing and straightening the channel in navigable streams and tributaries thereof, when in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers such work is advisable in the interest of flood control: Provided, That not more than $50,000 shall be expended for this purpose for any single tributary from the appropriations for any one fiscal year."

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to allot from any appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for flood control, not to exceed $1,000,000 per year, for the construction of emergency bank-protection works to prevent flood damage to highways, bridge approaches, and public works, when in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers such work is advisable: Provided, That not more than $50,000 shall be allotted for this purpose at any single locality from the appropriations for any one fiscal year.

SEC. 14. That the sum of $750,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for carrying out improvements by the War Department, the sum of $10,000,000 additional is authorized to be appropriated and expended in equal amounts by the Departments of War and Agriculture for carrying out any examination or survey provided for in this act and any other acts of Congress to be prosecuted by said departments.

SEC. 15. That the program on the watershed of Buffalo Creek and its tributaries authorized in section 13 of the Flood Control Act of December 22, 1944, is hereby amended to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to include and prosecute works for the stabilization of stream banks such as described in House Document No. 574, Seventy-eighth Congress, second session, at an estimated additional cost of $1,842,400.

SEC. 16. That the $5,000,000 authorized to be appropriated in section 10 of the Flood Control Act approved August 18, 1941, is reauthorized to be appropriated, and the sum of $20,000,000 additional is authorized to be appropriated, for expenditure, by the Department of Agriculture for the prosecution of the works of improvement authorized to be carried out by that Department by the Flood Control Act of December 22, 1944.

SEC. 17. In addition to previous authorizations, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $150,000,000 for the prosecution of the initial stage of the comprehensive plan adopted by section 9a of the act approved December 22, 1944 (Public, No. 534, 78th Cong.), for continuing the works in the Missouri River Basin to be undertaken under said plans by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WHITTINGTON (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point; that amendments be in order to the sections of the bill as the sections may be announced by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I would like to have the gentleman's request apply to the provisions of the bill just read, and to ask the chairman of the committee if it is not true that the paragraph immediately preceding his statement is the paragraph which makes applicable to the projects in this bill the so-called McMillan amendment which was incorporated in the Flood Control Act of 1944.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman is correct. I am glad to ask that the entire bill be set forth at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any amendment to section 1?

Is there any amendment to section 3?

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to section 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAVENS:

On page 2, in line 18, after the word "railroad" insert "highway."

And on page 2, in line 20, strike out the word "railroad" and insert in lieu thereof "such."

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Chairman, as section 3 now reads it provides that with respect to local contributions for flood-control projects, the Federal Government, through the Chief of Engineers, may include as a part of the Federal expense the cost of making changes in approaches to railroad bridges, which approaches are required to be changed as a result of the raising of such bridges in connection with flood-control projects. The purpose of my amendment is to include, in addition to approaches to railroad bridges, approaches to highway bridges which must also be raised as a result of the construction of flood-control projects heretofore authorized but not yet constructed, and with respect to the projects authorized in this bill.

The necessity for the amendment is vital to the control program. I know of one case, and there are no doubt many others in the United States, where the now required local contribution for constructing approaches to highway bridges is so enormous that it practically paralyzes the flood-control program in that area. For instance, there is one project in the Fourth Congressional District of Arkansas where the local contribution for constructing approaches to a highway bridge, together with other expenses, such as putting in another bridge over another stream to provide a highway for the handling of traffic while this approach construction is under way, would amount to $360,000 in a community of four or five thousand, which, of course, is absolutely impossible for them to meet. This amendment would not relieve a locality of the expense of constructing the additional bridge and the additional highway to handle the traffic while approaches were being constructed, but would merely require the Federal Government to raise the approaches to bridges which the Federal Government raises in connection with the construction of any of these projects. Without the amendment much needed flood-control projects in many areas would be stagnated and the flood-control program as a matter of practical operation entirely sacrificed.

The committee has authorized the construction of these new approaches at Federal expense with respect to railroad bridges. The only thing this amendment does is to assure that the similar treatment be accorded approaches to highway bridges. The particular bridge I have in mind accommodates two Federal-aid highways and I cannot see why if the flood-control program is to be carried out, it is not fair and equitable to have the Federal Government, if it is going to pay for the approaches to railroad bridges, to also pay the cost of raising the approaches to highway bridges which bridges in turn must be raised in order to get them above the increased flood stage level of the river.

I most earnestly solicit your consideration and favorable action on the amendment now under consideration.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the gentleman from Arkansas has proposed this amendment. Section 3 was inserted in the bill largely at the instigation of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CRAVENS].

In connection with projects along the Arkansas River we conducted hearings when he submitted to me the matter of alterations of the approaches, and this covers the matter of approaches and not the matter of highways. The railroads have the bridges, and this particular amendment to section 3 deals with the approaches to railway bridges. It would not suffice if you undertook to correct the approaches to a highway bridge unless you raised the entire highway in order to reach the bridge. So with all due deference to my friend, I oppose his amendment because we did go into the matter and where it involved the matter of approaches to a railroad bridge we undertook to relieve the local interests of the contribution because that was sound; but when it comes to relieving the local interests of approaches to a highway bridge the gentleman, on reflection, will certainly be convinced that it involves something more than approaches; that involves the actual highway itself.

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Not now; I will yield later.

Let me say in this connection that in an effort to provide as liberally as possible for highways and for railways and for utilities, where there is proper provision for highways we have made provision in section 8. The Members will recall that, under the Flood Control Act, where highways have got to be relocated in a reservoir of a condemned area the Federal Government provides for this relocation, and we have made liberal provision in that regard in section 8. To provide for caving affecting highways and other public improvements, we have made liberal provision in section 12.

I now gladly yield to the gentleman, if I may.

Mr. CRAVENS. I appreciate the gentleman's courtesy. What I had in mind was this, that where a flood control project necessitates the raising of the approaches to the bridge there has to be considerable work in the way of fill extending back some distance from the bridge.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I understand the gentleman's question. I have answered it. With all due deference I appreciate the situation the gentleman is up against. We went into the matter. If the gentleman will read the hearings and read the report, this section 3 covers the matter of approaches to railroad bridges. I respectfully submit that the matter of approaches to a highway bridge is something to be considered later. The railroads have had nothing to do with raising the elevations of the highway itself. That is an entirely different matter from the railway bridge. In view of the liberal provisions we have made in an effort to meet the exigencies of the gentleman's area, not only in section 3 but in sections 8 and 12, I trust the amendment will be voted down. I may say to the gentleman that if on further hearings there are cases that develop where there should be additional provision made for highways the House ought to have the report of investigation submitted by the Chief of Engineers and that matter embraced in the hearings.

Mr. CRAVENS. The inclusion of railroad bridges will only relieve the local interests in the particular project I have in mind of $2,000. On the other hand, there will be $360,000 imposed upon this small area, not for the approaches to the bridges, which is a comparatively small sum, but to build another highway and another bridge to accommodate traffic while this work is being done.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. We have provisions for Arkansas the same as in every other State. We have treated all States alike. Section 3 of the committee report deals with railroad bridges and approach and under the guise of getting an approach to a railroad bridge or a highway bridge the gentleman should not expect the Congress of the United States to provide that the Federal Government shall pay for absolutely rebuilding the highway proper.

Under the circumstances, while I am in sympathy with the gentleman, I am compelled to ask that the amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CRAVENS].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other amendments?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to section 9.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOORHIS of California: Page 7, strike out all of lines 4 and 5 and as much of line 6 as precedes the colon and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the time for initiating projects authorized herein shall be determined by (1) the degree to which the construction of the project is immediately necessary to protect human life and property from the likelihood of destruction; (2) the availability of supply of required material with reference to the need for such materials for home construction or other essential purposes; and (3) the amount of unemployment, if any, existing in the construction industry or related lines of work and the degree of need, if any, to expand construction activity; and it is declared to be the policy of Congress to delay the initiation of projects not immediately necessary to protect human life and property from the likelihood of destruction until such time as there is a clear sufficiency of the supply of materials and need for expansion of employment and activity in the construction industry; and to give effect to this policy the Chief of Engineers shall include in all requests for appropriations specific justification in accordance with this proviso."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, before speaking on my amendment I would like to say that it is offered in no unfriendly spirit to the Flood Control Committee or the distinguished chairman of that committee. I have had the privilege of serving under him for a number of years and it is my opinion there is not a chairman of a committee in this House, or any other body for that matter, who knows his subject better, who conducts the business of his committee in a more efficient, forthright, and considerate manner. I have a particular reason for saying this, since a project in my own district that presents great problems has been authorized for resurvey by instruction of the committee and I appreciate that very deeply.

The reason I am offering this amendment is that it is almost exactly the same amendment I previously offered to the rivers and harbors bill. I have offered both amendments for a very clear and simple reason. I do not agree with those Members who have gotten up on the floor this afternoon and opposed the passage of this measure. Everybody who knows about the flood hazards of this country or about the problems of erosion, that the gentleman from Louisiana spoke of, has got to be concerned about necessary flood control measures which are recommended by this committee and by the Corps of Army Engineers. I am certainly not opposed to the passage of legislation which will detail what those projects are that need construction, do the preliminary work of studying those projects, and go so far as to grant congressional authorization for them. But I do believe that it is high time that the Congress consider legislation of this character or any other character where moneys are appropriated for public works; I think, indeed, it is high time that Congress consider all legislation that it passes in any field from the standpoint of the over-all circumstances of our country today and what they may be tomorrow.

Everybody knows that at the moment we have the possibility, at least, of achieving a balanced budget and possibly a running surplus, and paying off part of the national debt. We ought to try to do so in every way that we can. In addition we know that at the present time there is a shortage of certain critical material; that materials for home construction, to mention only one thing, and a good many other very essential items are in critical short supply. We also know that the construction industry is, at any rate, booming; that there is demand that cannot be filled by labor in that industry. The time will come when there will be availability of plenty of materials and, secondly, when there may be need to expand the activities in the construction industry and in employment, and when that time comes I do not want to fall back on projects that are of no value. I do not want to do what is termed "leaf raking" projects. I want to do some of these worth-while projects when that time comes. I want to have the most worth-while program we can get.

My amendment is quite clear, Mr. Chairman, that where there is a project, and where the need for the construction of that project to save life and limb is necessary now, that that project will not be interfered with. The amendment only says that there should be that criterion plus the other two criteria, availability of materials and the degree of activity of the construction industry, and that those shall be taken into consideration in deciding what appropriations shall be made. With this provision in the bill it will coincide with an over-all long-range program brought forth by the Congress, not by somebody else, of attempting to maintain over a period of time, as near as we can, an even keel of employment and an even level of prosperity in this country.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman is a member of the Colmer Committee on Postwar Planning. I would like to ask the gentleman if his proposal is not in keeping with the philosophy of the recommendations of that committee?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I will say to the gentleman that I am much obliged to him for asking that question. The fact of the matter is that the report of the Postwar Economic Policy and Planning Committee on Public Works took precisely this point of view, and the whole report was a development of the thesis that we ought to plan public works in such a manner as to stabilize employment in the construction industry. That is all I am trying to do.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to speak about the amendment, but I do want to call the attention of the gentleman from California, since he is a member of that committee, that if you want to save material for the construction of homes, why was not something done to stop the construction of a stadium where they are going to have a world's championship boxing match and where, I understand, they are using a lot of material which could be used for the construction of homes?

Mr. McGREGOR. Was not a priority given for that, too?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman asked me a question, and I should like to answer it. I will answer it in this way, by stating that I offered an amendment to the emergency veterans' housing bill which said that no construction other than veterans' homes should be allowed to proceed unless it got a specific authorization for it. My amendment was defeated.

Mr. STEFAN. Construction of that stadium for this boxing match and other unnecessary building involves the use of materials when those materials are absolutely necessary for the construction of homes. Out in middlewest Nebraska people are begging for lumber. We have nothing but kindling wood left in our lumberyards. Farmers can not get lumber to store grain for which the world is waiting.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think the gentleman's point is incontestable. I think he is quite right. I do not think the material should have been used for that purpose. I do not think you can defend using it for that purpose.

Mr. STEFAN. In some cases they claim they do not use much material for construction, but they do use a lot of lumber for cribbing which could be very well used for the construction of homes which we need so badly now. This stadium, race track, and other construction could well be delayed.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. STEFAN. That is not the point on which I rose to speak. I rise at this time to ask the chairman of the committee about the Missouri River Basin project involving $150,000,000. My colleague from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] asked something about the previous authorizations on that project. Does the gentleman have information as to the previous authorizations for the Missouri River Basin? Are they in the RECORD?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes. I recall them offhand.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman was talking about a billion dollars. He was speaking about the over-all picture on flood control, not as to the Missouri River?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Not at all. In the act of 1944 there was authorized for expenditure in the upper stretches by the Bureau of Reclamation $200,000,000, and a similar amount or expenditure by the Corps of Engineers in the lower stretches.

Mr. STEFAN. It is the $150,000,000 in this bill for the Missouri River Basin which I am interested in now. It was indicated in the debate that perhaps the Army engineers are going to be short of funds unless this authorization is made.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Absolutely.

Mr. STEFAN. Does that mean they have no funds on hand now?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No, it does not. It means that all the amounts previously authorized under the act approved in 1944 will be exhausted in the completion of projects which may take 5, 6, or 7 years and that have been initiated under the authority of the act of 1944, so that there will be no money for new projects.

Mr. STEFAN. This $150,000,000 for the Missouri River Basin depends on appropriations. From what the gentleman says now there will be enough to continue for the next 2 or 3 years the projects they have on hand now. This is to implement the Pick-Sloan plan on the Missouri River?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is.

Mr. STEFAN. That is the plan in which the Bureau of Reclamation, the Department of Agriculture, and other Government agencies are collaborating in an over-all program. A program which we all favor because flood control work is so badly needed. It is an all-purpose program.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The adjustment was made in the act of 1944.

Mr. STEFAN. Does this $150,000,000 have to do with any work on the Blue River in Nebraska?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. There is no particular allocation that would authorize the construction of any work or that would provide for any appropriation for any work that has been authorized. My recollection is that provision has been made for the Blue River.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is it not true that the matter of the specific allocation of any appropriated funds would be a matter for determination when the appropriation is made under these authorizations?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have repeatedly so stated, not only with respect to the Missouri but all other projects.

Mr. STEFAN. I may say to the committee that on the Blue River in the vicinity of the towns of Milford, Seward, and Crete the Army engineers are said to be planning to construct some flood-control works. This project was originally planned, I have been unofficially told, for Kansas. Considerable opposition was made by the people of Kansas, it is charged, and the engineers moved their project up into Nebraska. The people of that particular locality feel they have no flood-control problem there but they do have a soil-conservation problem. Some of us appeared before General Wheeler, Chief of Army Engineers, who has very kindly sent the program back to the field for a resurvey and a restudy. The Nebraska people have held numerous meetings. They protest the rush to do this dam building before they have full opportunity to study a soil-conservation plan. They have sent delegations to Washington to confer with the various departments. We who want the Missouri River program of the engineers, the Reclamation, the Power Commission, and other agencies to succeed, would like for the engineers to restudy this proposed Blue River project until such time that the people in the affected area be given the chance to work out some coordinated program for the best interests of all concerned. I hope the chairman will be sympathetic in helping such a restudy to be made in order that thousands of acres of valuable agricultural land be kept in production of food so badly needed now. I am hopeful the engineers will give this matter further consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word about the Oklahoma City project provided for in this bill. Oklahoma City is not in my congressional district. It is perfectly all right with me for the committee to authorize the project down there to take care of the citizens of Oklahoma City and their properties. The city of Oklahoma City and the bottom farm lands in close proximity thereto have taken terrific beatings from the ravages of the North Canadian. This bill carries an authorization for a project estimated to cost more than $2,000,000. The thing that strikes me, however, as being a little hard to explain is the fact that you now authorize projects such as the Oklahoma City project when a project has already been authorized for many years 250 miles up the same stream, where the water comes from, and nothing has been done about the construction of it. If the Optima Dam, which was authorized some time ago, had been built along with some of the other work authorized, you probably would not need this project down in Oklahoma City.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield.

Mr. McGREGOR. Does this project destroy some homesteads in the vicinity of the project?

Mr. RIZLEY. It destroys not only homesteads but it destroys a lot of property in Oklahoma City every year. It not only destroys property but takes lives, as is pointed out in the committee report. It is the overflow of the North Canadian River. But up the river more than 200 miles from Oklahoma City several years ago Congress in its wisdom authorized what is known as the Optima Dam on the same stream. That is where the water comes from. If that project had been built, then you would not need to spend all this money for these projects farther down the stream. That is a policy I do not understand. I do not understand the policy of the Federal Government in authorizing a project and then not doing anything about it, and then coming along and requesting other projects many miles below that must take the force of the water coming down the stream that could have been controlled if the upstream project had been completed.

There is another situation on the Cimarron River, also a part of the Arkansas River Basin. This river, heading way up in New Mexico and coming down through part of my congressional district, down through Kansas, then back into Oklahoma, has been responsible for much flood destruction. It carries a lot of water at flood times. We have been talking about Kenton Dam and the Englewood Dam on that river for years and years and years, but nothing is done about them; they have never even been authorized. I presume this committee will come in in probably a year or two and authorize a project at the mouth of the stream somewhere close to some city where all this damage is being done. Of course, the citizens are entitled to be protected. I do not want to be misunderstood about this. I am just calling your attention to the policy that has apparently been pursued of making authorizations upstream where the water gets rolling at flood stages and then doing nothing about it, and then coming in with another authorization down at the mouth of the stream for flood control.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Frankly, I am like you. I do not know what the difficulty has been after they have been authorized. It may be that the others are more important. But at all events, if the gentleman will ask me about it and give me a little while, I will investigate to see why that project has not been constructed, but I will say that the authorization of this project to protect Oklahoma City ought not to interfere in any wise with this project if it is a worthy project.

Mr. RIZLEY. The gentleman says in his report where he refers to the Optima Dam that if it had been built along with the others it probably would have taken care of the situation.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Of course, we have not been able to build anything during the war.

Mr. RIZLEY. I fully appreciate the fact that during the war necessarily these projects were held up. I know the able chairman of this committee, good businessman as he is, will endeavor to see that the upstream projects that would take care of much of the water are given consideration.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That does not mean that the others are going to be built first. Yours may be built first if you get the money.

Mr. RIZLEY. The Optima project has been authorized for many years and not a thing has been done about it.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]. While I have definite reservations regarding its applicability to this bill, I believe he is rendering a great service in directing attention to a public-works policy. I heard his discussion of this amendment in the rivers and harbors bill. Many Members of Congress are vitally interested in the work which the gentleman from California has done in exploring this problem and in continually emphasizing the need of an over-all policy regarding the inauguration of desirable public works. As these bills come before us, all having much merit and presenting a strong appeal, we approve them, but nowhere have we adopted with reference to them criteria such as the gentleman from California advances.

I would like to ask the gentleman, therefore, specifically about the first one, with reference to projects designed to save human life. As to projects of that kind he would not impose any conditions at all, would he?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Not any.

Mr. HAYS. In other words, when it is determined that human life is involved, none of these other criteria is to be invoked to retard the inauguration of such project?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is right. That is the whole theory upon which it is based.

Mr. HAYS. The gentleman is presenting identically the same amendment that he presented when the rivers and harbors bill was considered?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Well, with some minor changes.

Mr. HAYS. It would also be geared to the policy in the maximum employment bill?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is right.

Mr. HAYS. Would the gentleman care to comment on that?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Simply to say this, that my judgement is that where a project is not, in and of itself, of immediate urgency for the reasons the gentleman has just discussed, as a matter of general policy it should be delayed until such time as there is an overall economic need for the expansion of business activity, particularly activity in the construction industry, which is the one we can come closest to stabilizing.

Mr. HAYS. I appreciate the gentleman's additional remarks.

The floods of 1943, 1944, and 1945 on the Arkansas River took 47 lives. The gentleman can understand why I wanted to be very clear on the point concerning which I questioned him.

I have pending before the Committee on Agriculture a bill to authorize contributions by the Federal Government to the construction of county agricultural buildings, to be owned by the county. I could not conscientiously ask the Committee on Agriculture to report that bill at this time, because we ought not be building agricultural buildings or any other kind of county buildings with this kind of Federal participation, in competition with residential construction. But my bill has merit. If my bill is reported I think the gentleman's formula ought to be written into it and in that case no long postponement would be necessary.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. It is tough to wait to do things that are desirable to be done when the country is going forward in a fairly vigorous fashion, but unless we wait for those things when it would be easy to do them, we shall not have them to construct at the time when we really need them for the basic economy of the Nation.

Mr. HAYS. And the executive department dumps into our laps projects which they say are necessary and we are not prepared to contravert the assertion. I am interested in what the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] might say with reference to these matters, for I share the high opinion expressed by the gentleman from California regarding the service of the gentleman from Mississippi as chairman of the Flood Control Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS] has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. It is unnecessary for me to say that the gentleman from California knows I entertain a very high regard for him personally. He has been perfectly candid. He stated that he offered this amendment to the river and harbor bill recently passed. It is not applicable to that bill. It was overwhelmingly defeated there, and that is at least a precedent why the same course should be pursued here. But there was a reason why it was defeated there, and that reason obtains more especially why it should be defeated here. The gentleman would strike out this language in the bill:

> Projects authorized herein shall be initiated as expeditiously and prosecuted as vigorously as may be consistent with budgetary requirements.

That language is not new. It has been tried, it has been tested. That is the language of previous appropriation bills, that is the language that states that these new projects authorized for the first time may have the same consideration as a project authorized 10 years ago, so that each project may stand on its merits. We do not propose by appropriations to allocate all of the money that Congress appropriates to projects that have heretofore been started.

Budgetary requirements must be considered. Now, the gentleman means well, of course. He did not appear before the committee, but I recall that the greatest flood our country has ever known occurred at the period of the greatest prosperity that our country has ever known. Some 300 lives were lost in Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi in 1927. Did we put off from 1927 to 1933 efforts to repair those damages? Are we going to put it off now until there is a period of unemployment? Not at all. In my judgment, if this proposal could have been disregarded with respect to river and harbor projects, all the more it should be disregarded in the pending bill. Let us consider bills on their merits. Let us consider that when property is being destroyed, when lives are being lost, we will provide for them on the basis of need. The Chief of Engineers reports; he is in touch with the areas in all the 48 States. He says: "I give you this as No. 1 priority. There has been a flood there and flood damage, and it is therefore more important than this other project." And I submit that the appropriations we have next year should be allocated for such priority projects. He might well say to us that in Pennsylvania recently, in the last 4 weeks, because a project had been constructed at Wilkes-Barre and completed those people were protected, but at Williamsport the project had not been constructed and they were flooded. Shall they wait until we have another depression? We had better profit by the experiences we have had in all the previous flood-control acts, by language that has been tried and tested, rather than by language here that is confusing and that may cause uncertainty and that may defeat the very thing that flood control was intended to do, to wit, to protect the property and the lives of people whenever and wherever it is important that that be done. And we rely for the priority and the order in which those projects shall be constructed upon the reports of the Chief of Engineers. There have been no complaints in the past and there will be none in the future; but under the guise of dealing with some particular project I ask you not to adopt language here that is confusing and uncertain and that may hinder and delay and defeat the very purpose for which flood control was established and declared as a national policy.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Has there ever been any complaint against the Army engineers in regard to any of these projects in the matter of priorities?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. None. We have got to depend upon the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers and the budgetary requirements of the Congress. That is the thing that I had in mind.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Has the gentleman ever heard of any complaint against the Board of Army Engineers in the matter of giving projects priority?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Not at all. I urge that you defeat the amendment.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman has persuaded me that this amendment ought not to be adopted on the bill now pending. However, I think in fairness to the gentleman from California, though, that it ought to be made quite clear that his amendment, if it is adopted, would not affect construction of projects designed to save human life. The amendment pending is wise in principle, but this is not a fortunate choice of bills in which to offer it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman is in good company. The language of the Apostle Paul, "Almost thou persuadest me," is again applicable.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 9?

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In reference to one item in this bill, entitled "Improvements to Bayou Pierre, Shreveport, La.," I wish to say that this is a project which is of urgent importance to my people. Some eight square miles of thickly settled urban property is affected by this provision for flood relief totaling $127,000.

My home in the city of Shreveport is located within a very short distance of some of the property affected periodically by floods. I have often gone out to view the rising waters in the heart of the city of Shreveport—a city of over 100,000 people—and seen the rising waters collecting as they tried to flow into Bayou Pierre. I have seen the floodwaters in the yards destroy the gardens and actually entering the homes of many of our people. At times, the water reaches several feet in depth in the midst of fine homes, driving the occupants from them to seek help at the hands of their friends from the swirling waters.

Mr. Chairman, floods have occurred at regular intervals and they are due to the fact that Bayou Pierre, miles below the city of Shreveport, is not properly opened up, permitting the passage of floodwaters as rapidly as they should be carried away. This project can be easily handled by the Army engineers if Congress allows them to proceed. It will mean savings and protection to hundreds of homes in the city of Shreveport. and I hope there will be no opposition whatsoever to the Bayou Pierre project.

RED RIVER VALLEY

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Louisiana rise?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, as I stated in general debate earlier this evening, this is perhaps the most important flood-control bill which has been reported out by the Flood Control Committee in many years. While I am always interested in every flood-control bill in its entirety, I am particularly interested in the item in this bill providing for flood protective works on Red River Valley in Louisiana. Red River is over 1,200 miles long and directly and seriously affects the States of Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas, and Louisiana. Red River drains an area of 91,000 square miles. In 1940 the population in the Red River Valley basin was 2,816,000.

Red River Valley is one of the most fertile in the Nation. The vast agricultural lands in that valley produce almost all the standard crops of the Nation. Cotton, corn, hay, oats, potatoes, and many other crops are grown.

While that great valley has been visited by floods from time to time, in 1945 we had perhaps the worst flood in nearly 100 years. The damage was estimated by the Corps of Engineers to be $16,000,000. In the Red River Valley there are 1,700,000 acres subject to overflow. This Red River Valley bisects the Eighth Congressional District of Louisiana which I have the honor to represent. I was in my district when the flood was at its worst. I rode in a motor boat over land where the water was so deep that I had to duck my head several times to go under the telephone wires along the railroad. The presence of the railroad could only be detected by the telephone and telegraph wires above. The duration of the flood was 73 days. I was down there in the mud and water trying in every way possible to help the people.

Mr. Chairman, the Flood Control Committee immediately asked the Corps of Engineers to make a new survey of the Red River Valley with the view of working out a plan to give the maximum amount of protection to that great Valley. I met with the engineers and went over the ground with them. We called groups of citizens to meet with us. The engineers worked out a comprehensive flood-control plan, consisting of levees and reservoirs. They felt that levees alone would not be sufficient and that reservoirs alone would not hold back enough water. They feel that the only feasible plan to solve the problem is a combination of levees and reservoirs. That plan is embodied in House Document No. 602 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, second session. That plan is incorporated in this bill which we are now considering. If this plan is approved by Congress, and the protective works specified are constructed, the engineers assure us that it will bring to Red River Valley the greatest possible measure of protection. I cannot too strongly urge that we approve that plan in this bill. As I said, it vitally concerns four States. When the protective works embraced in that plan are constructed, it will revolutionize agriculture in the Red River Valley.

I have worked for years to bring to that great valley protection from these recurring floods and I was happy to present that plan to the Flood Control Committee and I am happy now to present it to this House and I earnestly ask that it may have the approval of Congress.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, as may be gathered from the question I asked the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] when he spoke a few minutes ago on his amendment, I am in sympathy with his proposal, as I understand it. He and I sat side by side on many long hearings of the Colmer Committee on Postwar Economic Policy and Planning. I recognize that the intent of his amendment would be to carry out the philosophy embodied in certain reports of that Special Committee on Postwar Public Works. However, as I said to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], although the Voorhis amendment was not intended to delay projects which are intended to save human life, I did think that the present bill is the least favorable for such an amendment. I say this because almost all flood-control projects have as their object the safeguarding of human lives. No other kind of public works seem likely to protect human life to the extent that flood-control constructions are intended to do.

My colleague from California and I on the Colmer committee recall that in some of our earlier reports it is recommended by that committee that a program of public works should take many economic factors into consideration in addition to the need for that particular public building. We both feel that a public-building program ought to be related to the general economic condition of the country in such a way that certain needed public works shall be built when there is the least private employment furnished and not be built when private employment is at its highest peak. By such a time schedule a public-works program can be made to serve a double purpose and bring an equalizing, stabilizing influence on our national economy. In this way a wise public-building program can help to counteract the extremes of the business cycle and level off the crests and fill up the hollows in our economic conditions. To make this clearer let me quote one of the recommendations on public housing submitted by a subcommittee of the Colmer committee:

> It will be no service either to the public-works program or to the general economic welfare to expect from public work a larger contribution in the process of reconversion than the construction industry can support. Moreover, it would be a disservice to the national economy to put public work into a competitive position with private industry so that the expansion of needed enterprises would be delayed because of undue emphasis on public work.
> The first task of the Federal Government, aside from providing its volume of normal construction and repairs, is to free materials, equipment, and manpower. These will be required both for needed maintenance and repairs and for the reconversion and expansion of private industry. Meanwhile, at the earliest possible date public-works projects should be made ready for release if and when the condition of the industry and the level of business activity are such as to need the stimulation of public construction. The Federal Government is thus conceived as a rear line of defense. Federal financing should be invoked to support a large public-works program only as a necessary resort if local funds and private investment and unemployment insurance fall short of sustaining the economy during the conversion and postwar period.

This quotation hints at a correlation of public works and private building, with a time to emphasize each to the advantage of both and to the benefit of the national economy. However, there is a caution against overreliance upon public works to afford employment in good times. Obviously, though, there is no logic in discouraging public works which are vitally necessary, and no intent to delay flood-control works or any such works necessary for the protection of human lives.

Mr. ALMOND. Mr. Chairman, of the projects embraced by this bill, while some are broader in scope and more costly, it is my humble judgment that none are more worthy than that designated as the Gathright and Falling Springs project, to be located on the Jackson River in Alleghany and Bath Counties, Va.

The Chief of Engineers has made a careful investigation of flood problems and conditions in the James River Basin. He presented a comprehensive reservoir plan designed to serve multiple purposes, which would embrace the development of 14 sites. Economic justification, however, would depend on the sale of power to be generated thereby. Of these 14 projects investigated, the engineers find that only the Gathright Dam and Falling Springs reregulating dam on Jackson River warrant construction in the very near future. As the result of exhaustive testimony relevant to existing conditions the Committee on Flood Control was convinced of the immediate need for flood control, improvement of low-water flow, and pollution abatement in the James River Basin. A study made by the Federal Power Commission indicates that there will be a suitable market by 1953 for the power which can be developed at the proposed Gathright Reservoir. This is a multiple-purpose project. It is the killing of more than one bird with the same stone. It will provide for the conservation of water and the regulation of the low-water flow. It will provide for the abatement of pollution. It will so regulate the flow of Jackson River as to bring about flood control. Added to these desirable features is the much needed manufacture of electric power. The drainage area of Jackson River above the town of Covington is approximately 900 square miles. The flow of this river varies from a maximum of 66,000 cubic feet per second to a minimum of about 60 cubic feet per second. One figure, of course, representing flood conditions and the other conditions which obtain as a result of a severe drought; one an enormous and shameful waste of water resources and the other representing a drastic and dangerous water shortage. The town of Covington and its industries get their supply of water from the Jackson River. During the dry seasons in each summer the industrial users consume almost all of the water in the river. These seasons sometime last as long as 3 months. During these periods the normal flow is about 80 cubic feet per second. The population of this town, numbering approximately 12,000 people, are not only seriously inconvenienced but suffer immeasurably as a result of the inadequacy of the water supply. The health of the people is, thereby, jeopardized and they are subjected to the hazards of fire.

Industrial expansion is severely curtailed and limited by reason of the fact that needed water supply is not available during the annual low-water periods. If the waters of Jackson River are stored up and conserved as proposed by this project it would redound to the wholesome and constructive benefit of this great area. The average flow of the river when controlled will vary between 300 and 800 cubic feet per second at Covington. This regulated flow would thus be from 5 to 10 times the present low-water flow. This flow, of course, would vary according to the demands of the situation and would at all times be sufficient to supply the needs of this area and the surrounding territory for both human and industrial uses. The critical problem of water supply would be solved as far as can be seen into the future.

Just a word relative to pollution abatement. Jackson River, located as it is, is the only available avenue for the disposal of industrial waste and municipal sewage. This applies for about a stretch of 5 miles through the town. The same is true with reference to other towns and communities located on the river. During periods when the river is 75 cubic feet or less, conditions become both serious and nauseating. During the hot summer months the pollution is greatly concentrated. The high temperatures operating on the concentrated pollution in the slow-moving water create a most objectionable condition. The relevancy of this condition to health and sanitation is most obvious. The controlled flow of the river which would be made possible by construction of this dam would abate this pollution in three ways. The first would be by dilution. At all times the flow of the river would be four or five times the present normal flow. During the hot summer months the flow would be approximately 500 cubic feet per second, or approximately six times the normal flow of the river. Thus, the pollution would be diluted from six to eight times during the worst months. Then, too, the increased speed of the flow would move the pollution out of the stream. The temperature of the water in hot weather under present conditions is from 80 to 85 degrees. The regulation of the water through the dam would reduce this to about 60 to 65 degrees. This of itself is a factor to be considered. The flood control benefits to be derived through the regulated flow of this river are incalculable. Estimated average annual flood damage to farm lands, crops, timber, to pulpwood and other wood products stored near the river, and damage to homes, railroads, business and personal properties situated along the river is about $75,000. At times, heavy rains, augmented by melting snows, precipitate tremendous volumes of water into this gorge and have caused, and no doubt will cause again, severe flood conditions.

This project will conserve for constructive utilization vast volumes of water otherwise uselessly dissipated and permit its regulation for constructive and wholesome purposes.

I have endeavored to call to your attention the desirable, beneficial, and humane features of this project. These are, of course, very important, but the economic justification of this project resides in its potential production and dissemination of electric power. The estimated annual power potential of this dam is 51,000,000 kilowatt-hours. The regulated flow of the river would have an important effect also in increasing the value of downstream power plants. There are a number of such plants on the James River, owned by municipalities, industry, farms, and public utility companies. These plants would be given increased productive capacities. This increase is estimated at 6,100 kilowatts. The estimated increased production of the downstream plants is 26,000,000,000 kilowatts annually. The factors which have been considered as a basis of economic justification for the construction of this project are both tangible and intangible. These factors are regulation of stream flow, pollution abatement, flood control, electric power, and recreation.

According to the engineers' report, these factors give the project an economic ratio of 1 to 1.73, which means that for every one dollar spent in a year's time, the estimated return is $1.73. If we would disregard entirely the intangible benefits, then the report of the engineers still estimates that the value of the power produced at the dam, plus the value of the increased power produced by existing downstream plants, will more than pay the annual cost of the project, including the carrying charges. I feel that this project is economically sound, and merits the approval of the Congress.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, the legislation now before us for consideration contains projects for the Potomac River Basin. I have been privileged to work closely with Representative BEALL, of Maryland, and others, in the furtherance of the items calling for—

First. A local flood-protection development at Cumberland and West Cumberland, in the State of Maryland, and Ridgeley—a community which I represent—in West Virginia. This program was authorized in the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936. Under the provisions of House bill 6597, we would amend the project which has been previously authorized by providing for the finishing of the work in accordance with certain Army Engineer recommendations, which have been the result of many years of study. There is an estimated cost for the project by the Federal Government of $1,520,000. In this connection I desire to make it very clear that Ridgeley is a relatively small community when compared with Cumberland. We realize the necessity for cooperation between these two municipalities, but I would remind my colleagues that Ridgeley finds itself, as a political subdivision, unable to provide local funds which would be out of proportion to its ability to raise necessary money. In company with Congressman BEALL, I have held many conferences with officials of both Ridgeley and Cumberland, and many splendid individual citizens, in an effort to better understand our mutual problems. The able chairman of the Flood Control Committee [Mr. WHITTINGTON] was most courteous to us when we testified.

Second. The additional project to which I call your attention is the Savage River Dam on the tributary waters of the Potomac about Westernport, Md., and Piedmont, W. Va. This meritorious item, as contained in the legislation now before us, would be completed at an estimated cost to the Federal Government of $1,900,000. This sum would become available on condition that local interests contribute $200,000 toward the cost of the work. We are pleased to advise that this latter sum is available. At this point I wish to commend Owen Hitchins and those individuals of his commission who have worked diligently and constructively over a long period of time to bring about the completion of the Savage River Dam. When finished it will bring needed flood control to the communities of Westernport and Luke, Md., and Piedmont and Keyser, W. Va.

Mr. Chairman, many Members of both the House and Senate have worked for years during their service in the Congress in furtherance of the worth-while projects to which I have made reference. I desire to remember their efforts and to publicly at this time again pay tribute to their helpfulness.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries the authorization for $7,420,000 for flood control in and for the city of Cumberland. It also carries the authorization for $1,900,000 to complete the Savage River Dam. There is no question in my opinion but that both projects are necessary and meritorious.

The city of Cumberland has periodically been inundated when floods did thousands of dollars' worth of damage even to the point of endangering lives. It has been recognized for many years that something should be done to protect property which has been constantly subjected to floods.

Just recently the United States Engineers completed and set up a model plan for flood prevention in their laboratory at Vicksburg, Miss. This plan shows most comprehensively how floods may be prevented in Cumberland. The Army Engineers, after an exhaustive study of this entire situation, have recommended the early completion of this project.

The Savage River Dam was originated as a WPA project, and work progressed until 1942, when the war stopped the project after it was 65 percent completed. More than $4,000,000 has already been spent on this project, and now if the authorization for $1,900,000 is approved, work can be resumed and the original investment preserved. Unless this additional money is authorized and appropriated, the $4,000,000 already spent will be thrown away.

After the project is completed it will control the flow of the Savage River, which in turn empties into the North Branch of the Potomac River. By controlling these waters the flood hazard for the towns of Luke and Westernport, Md., and Piedmont, and Keyser, W. Va., will be practically eliminated. At this point I might call your attention to the fact that more than 25,000 people live in these four towns and the total assessed value of the property runs into millions of dollars. One large paper mill is assessed at some $15,000,000 and is subjected to floods which may occur in the North Branch of the Potomac River. In addition to flood prevention, the completion of this project will also guarantee a flow of fresh water in the Potomac River during the dry season which will eliminate the present stagnation and stream pollution.

It is for these reasons I hope the House will approve the authorization of these two projects.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 9?

Are there amendments to section 10?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: Page 23, after line 11, insert the following:

"Schuylkill River and tributaries, Pennsylvania."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: On page 24, after line 2, insert the following:

"Choctawhatchee River, Fla. and Ala."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: Page 24, after line 23, insert the following:

"Little Kanawha River and tributaries, West Virginia."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: On page 25, line 9, strike out the words "and Wisconsin."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN of Lousiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks immediately following the reading of section 9.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time to obtain information from the chairman of the committee concerning the proposed Lucky Peak Reservoir on the Boise River, in Idaho. It is my understanding there is nothing included in this bill for that particular project, although the authorization was approved by the Board of Engineers. Can the chairman give me any information concerning the status of that project?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I will give the gentleman my general recollection and in order to do that I repeat what I previously stated to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE] that the Idaho projects, according to my information, that have been passed by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors under the act of 1944 have been transmitted to the Governor and to the State agencies, but have not been returned, hence were not in position to be transmitted to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget and are not included in this bill.

Mr. DWORSHAK. I understand they were approved by the Governor and other agencies, that the report is now pending in the Department of the Interior; consequently the Bureau of the Budget was not able to transmit any report to the Congress.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Until and unless the Department of the Interior submits its report, the Chief of Engineers is without authority to transmit it to the Director of the Budget or the Congress. The thing to do is to get the Department of the Interior to forward that report so that it might be considered by the Senate before the bill is passed.

Mr. DWORSHAK. The other body can then consider the project and include it in the bill?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman is correct, and I so stated to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with the Potomac River Basin project, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BEALL] and myself, are deeply interested in at least two of them. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD following the reading of section 9.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at that point in the RECORD immediately after the vote taken on the Voorhis amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALMOND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD immediately following section 9.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at the same point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 10?

Section 11?

Section 12?

Section 13?

Section 14?

Section 15?

Section 16?

Section 17?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: Page 27, line 22, strike out the words "of the initial stage."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, by reference to the bill, that language is easily understood. Section 17 reads:

In addition to previous authorizations, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $150,000,000 for the prosecution of the initial stage of the comprehensive plan—

The language stricken is "of the initial stage." That will make the language of the authorization for the Department of the Interior comparable to the language previously used in this bill for the War Department, and it is intended that this $150,000,000 be made available only to the Department of the Interior for projects previously authorized for that Department to be constructed in the upper stretches of the Missouri, under the Flood Control Act of 1944.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. This is in line with the amendment I discussed with the gentleman on various occasions, which has the approval of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

IMPORTANCE OF THE AMENDMENT TO SECTION 17

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which has just been adopted on the motion of the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] is, to thousands of people in the Missouri River Basin, second in importance only to the passage of the Flood Control Act of 1944, itself. That act established a basic approval for the comprehensive flood control and water use program often referred to as the combined Pick-Sloan plan, with appropriation authorization limited to certain units or projects set forth as "the initial stages" of the program. This amendment, which has just been adopted, dropping the phrase "initial stages" from the increased authorizations carried in this bill makes possible—and I quote—"the prosecution of the comprehensive plan" adopted by section 9a of the act approved December 22, 1944—Public, No. 534, Seventy-eighth Congress.

Section 9a of that act reads:

The general comprehensive plans set forth in House Document No. 475 and Senate Document No. 191, Seventy-eighth Congress, second session, as revised and coordinated by Senate Document No. 247, Seventy-eighth Congress, second session, are hereby approved and the initial stages are hereby authorized and shall be prosecuted by the War Department and the Department of the Interior as speedily as may be consistent with budgetary requirements.

In succeeding paragraphs there followed a specific authorization of $200,000,000 for each branch of the program, Army engineers and Bureau of Reclamation, as has been stated by the gentleman from Mississippi.

In section 9 of the bill now under consideration, in the paragraph appearing on page 17 under the head "Missouri River Basin" there is carried an additional authorization for appropriation of $150,000,000—and I quote:

For the prosecution of the comprehensive plan approved by the act of June 28, 1938, as expanded by section 9a of the act approved December 22, 1944 * * * for continuing the works in the Missouri River Basin to be undertaken under said expanded plan by the Corps of Engineers.

And section 17, just approved as amended by striking out the words "of the initial stage," makes a similar authorization of an additional one hundred and fifty millions for the prosecution of the portion of the comprehensive plan to be undertaken by the Secretary of the Interior.

As indicated by my colloquy with the gentleman from Mississippi, who is the chairman of the Committee on Flood Control, the amendment is the outgrowth of previous discussions of the matter. For the purpose of the record, it may be well to review them.

During the deliberations of the committee, when the Missouri River Basin was scheduled for hearing, April 11, 1946, I appeared before the committee and called attention to the need for authorizing work on some of the smaller projects in the comprehensive plan, projects which were approved but which were not listed in the initial stage as set forth by the review board of the Bureau of Reclamation. I mentioned, in particular, the importance of the Keyhole Reservoir on the Belle Fourche River, a branch of the Cheyenne, which is a tributary of the Missouri, and the Bixby and Green Grass Reservoirs on the Moreau River, which is a tributary of the Missouri. References to this matter appear on pages 362, 374, and 386.

Subsequently I discussed the matter with the chairman who suggested that I see the Commissioner of Reclamation and determine whether the Secretary of the Interior would support the proposal, in a new authorization, to drop the limitation to projects on the initial stage list.

This I endeavored to do but a conference could not be arranged until Wednesday, June 5, at which time the bill had been reported. Present at the conference in the office of Commissioner of Reclamation, were the Commissioner, Mr. Michael W. Strauss, the Assistant Commissioner, Mr. William Warne, and their chief project engineer.

At this conference I pointed out that many of the smaller projects encompassed in the comprehensive plan for the Missouri Basin were of urgent importance and should not be required to wait until the large projects mentioned in the initial stage list were completed. I pointed out that it might require 15 or 20 years to complete such projects as the Souris and the Oahe-James, and that in the meantime, many small projects with local flood-control features of the greatest urgency would be stalled, although they could be completed, in some instances, for less than the damages their floods would create.

I pointed out, for example, that floods on the Moreau River in South Dakota in a single year had created damage to highways and bridges and rich bottom hay lands equal to from one-fourth to one-half of the estimated cost of dams that would not only stop the flood damage but also create exceedingly valuable water storage.

The Moreau is a stream of intermittent flow. Some years it has heavy spring floods with a great volume of water. Yet, in late July and August of those same years, the stream may be entirely dry, not even having water for livestock for stretches of from 30 to 100 miles. Yet, the engineers estimate that storage of the flood waters in two reservoirs will provide stock water every year and permit irrigation of approximately 23,000 acres of choice bottom land. This is extremely important to the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation and the lands immediately west of it.

On the other hand the cost of the Souris project in North Dakota, an initial-stage project, is estimated at $133,839,000 and in Montana at $35,247,200, a total of $169,086,200. The cost of the Oahe-James project in South Dakota is estimated at $105,008,000. These figures are for the reclamation features only. They do not include the cost of the dams on the main stem of the Missouri River which are to supply the water for the projects.

These are only two of the projects in the authorized initial stages and there are other sizable ones such as the Hardin at forty-three million and the Marias at twenty-five million.

Obviously, Mr. Chairman, if the small projects on the tributaries with high local flood-control urgency and high irrigation values for ranchers already settled in the valleys were to wait until those big projects were all completed, another generation of farmers would be on the scene before results are realized.

Perhaps the most outstanding example of a project with a small cost and yet high irrigation values is that of the Keyhole Reservoir on the upper Belle Fourche River in the Bear Lodge Mountains of Wyoming.

As I said in a memorandum letter on the topics of my conference with the Commissioner, which I left with him at the time:

Keyhole is a unique site and offers a chance to double the storage of the Belle Fourche project for as little as $750,000. The Belle Fourche project was constructed to serve 60,000 acres, yet has never served more than 45,000; and normally serves only 35,000 and in 1 year had only 9 inches of water for that.

The Belle Fourche has always been a problem project because of water shortage. With a capacity of 200,000 acre-feet in the reservoir, even in many years of high run-off, it has only had around 100,000 to 130,000 acre-feet of water because the inlet canal which is 9 miles long will not handle the river's flow in flood. The Keyhole Reservoir can be constructed for $750,000, which is much less than the cost of enlarging the canal would be, besides having other advantages, serving lands above the inlet, etc., providing 275,000 acre-feet of storage and adding at least 10,000 acres to the project.

The Keyhole is not listed in "the initial stages" authorized for appropriations and construction, yet is of great importance.

I am happy to say, Mr. Chairman, that Commissioner Strauss and Assistant Commissioner Warne agreed with me that developments warranted a revision of the authorized program in the way I had suggested and agreed that they would discuss the matter with the Secretary of the Interior.

Subsequently, I had another conference with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] and then submitted a memorandum letter on the desirability of the amendment to make the new authorization applicable to the comprehensive plan as a whole, and not limited to the projects listed for the initial stages. Under permission given in the House, I insert the pertinent paragraphs from that letter at this point:

1. Many small projects with high flood-control values will be postponed for years if forced to wait until the projects listed in the initial stage are to be completed first. These projects are on tributaries and have irrigation values and, under the division of responsibility agreed upon in 1944, will be constructed by the Bureau. But the flood damages are such that the committee will be called upon to enact individual flood-control authorizations if their construction is to be thus delayed. It makes sense to let the Bureau proceed with them without waiting until the big projects are finished.

The Moreau River in South Dakota is an example.

2. Section 9a of the Flood Control Act of 1944 refers to the initial stages for both the Corps of Engineers' projects and those of the Bureau. But the letter of the Chief of Engineers did not specify or limit individual projects for an initial phase of the comprehensive plan as did that of the Commissioner of Reclamation or his Board. This, I think, was not intentional in either case. The existing situation is more accidental, then, and should be corrected.

3. The Bureau has been operating on the theory that projects started could be prosecuted with annual appropriations without measuring the total cost of the completed project against the authorizations. That is at variance with the practice of the Army engineers. It would be in order to require identical policy and practice in this respect, if the authorizations were in identical words; that is, for the prosecution of the comprehensive plan. Otherwise it will be difficult to maintain effective appropriation controls.

I call particular attention, Mr. Chairman, to the third paragraph because I am sure that if Congress is to keep a check upon its expenditures, it is desirable that when projects are begun, their costs shall be measurable against the authorizations the Congress has established.

At a conference which I had with the gentleman from Mississippi, last Saturday afternoon, he advised me that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Reclamation had notified him that they were in accord with the amendment proposed and that he would discuss it with the Chief of Engineers. And so today, I was very happy to have him say to me that he would offer, in behalf of the committee, the amendment which has now been adopted.

I have made this statement, Mr. Chairman, in order that the legislative history on the point may be noted and the intent of the amendment clearly established.

I sincerely hope, therefore, when this bill is passed by both bodies of the Congress, as I am confident it will be, and approved by the President, that the Bureau of Reclamation in preparing its construction program and estimates for next year will include a provision for such meritorious projects as the Keyhole Reservoir in Wyoming and one of the reservoirs proposed for the Moreau River in South Dakota.

The Angostura Dam now being let for construction, the Shadehill Dam on the Grand, proposed for initiation in 1947, the Brennan on Rapid Creek, the Keyhole and the Moreau Dams as well as the Rocky Ford Dam on the White and the small 15,000 acre-foot dam on the Bad River could all be completed, Mr. Chairman, for between 15 and 20 million dollars, which is only a fraction of the amount estimated for some of the larger projects in the comprehensive plan.

And each one of these could be completed in a relatively short space of time and start yielding direct, specific benefits to the generation of farmers who fought their way through dry, hard years of the thirties, and deserve to see their dreams of flood control and irrigation come to fruition in the great basin of the Missouri River and its tributaries.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McGREGOR: On page 28, line 3, after the period insert: "No funds under this act shall be allocated unless actual construction shall have been started prior to this date."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the pending section or to any part of the bill. However, I will reserve it if the gentleman desires to speak on it.

Mr. McGREGOR. I would appreciate it if you would withhold your objection so that I might debate it.

Mr. Chairman, the only reason that I inserted this particular amendment was the fact that this enabling legislation went through here in 1939; really in 1938. Then the Corps of Engineers decided in 1939 that a little project, as the whole program is concerned, down in my district, known as Dillon Dam, costing approximately $8,000,000, should not be built at that time because of the high cost of construction. Now they decide it should be constructed in 1946 at the prices now prevailing. You know, it seems ridiculous to me that we here in Congress allocate a certain amount of money for the Army Engineers for the construction of dams on the one hand, and tear down homes, and then turn around and give Mr. Wyatt, the Expediter, $400,000,000 for the construction of houses. In other words, we give one branch of the Federal Government money to build homes and another branch of the Federal Government the right to tear down homes. They are destroying approximately 768 houses in this particular district. Why in the world do we want to allocate a certain amount of money for the construction of houses in these United States and then turn around and give them money for destroying 768 houses in one district? All I am asking is that you do not allow any of these funds to be allocated until after actual construction has started. There is no actual construction started in our particular dam, known as Dillon Dam. But does it not seem funny to you that we are either going to do one thing or the other—build houses, repair homes, or build dams? We are going to build dams or we are going to build homes for the veterans. You cannot do both. There just is not enough lumber and building material to do it. Let us be honest, and decide what we are going to do. We cannot, as stated above, do both. Either we build houses or we take people's property and build houses—or build dams. I am for protecting the property owner and build homes—not dams. So all I am asking in this very simple amendment, although it has broad features, is that no funds authorized under this act shall be allocated unless actual construction has been started prior to this date.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON. If the gentleman's amendment should carry, it would not be possible to start some projects. As a matter of fact, they need this money in order to make a start.

Mr. McGREGOR. This amendment will not hurt any project unless it has not been started. If it has not been started it will not be started. The engineering cost is covered entirely outside of the allocation of the construction cost. If you have not started, you will not get started, but if you have started, it will not hurt you a particle.

Mr. ELSTON. The engineers would not be able to go ahead and start any of these Ohio River flood-control projects. There are many of them that have not been started where they have comprehensive plans, but unless this money is authorized and is later appropriated, those Ohio River projects cannot be started if the gentleman's amendment should carry.

Mr. McGREGOR. Certainly they will not be started, but you are going to have to decide here in Congress whether you are going to build flood-control walls or whether you are going to build houses for veterans. That is the subject that is here before us.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGREGOR. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am sure all of us are interested in securing houses for veterans, but for the life of me I cannot see how this conflicts with flood control. Will the gentleman tell me the name of a single flood-control project where any appreciable amount of lumber has ever been used in flood control that could be used otherwise?

Mr. McGREGOR. I will be very happy to, because I am personally interested in one. They are just getting ready to relocate 10 miles of the B. & O. Railroad down in Licking County. If the gentleman will sit down and figure it out he will get this result. I will go through it in my head. Ten miles of 7-by-8 cross ties which you have to move will mean approximately 2,000 houses for veterans. On this amendment you are either going to vote for 2,000 houses for veterans or you are going to vote for 10 miles of relocation of the B. & O. Railroad. I will be very glad to answer the gentleman's question further if that does not answer it. It is a very simple proposition. You are going to do one thing or the other, as stated above. You are going to vote for veterans' housing or you are going to vote for flood construction which means flood control in certain areas.

Let us be honest and vote; are we for flood control or for house repair and houses for our veterans? No other issue is involved. It is up to you.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to insist upon my point of order. The language of the amendment has to do with allocations and appropriations. No funds are being allocated or appropriated in this bill. A moment's reflection will show that this language is utterly contradictory. This is an authorization bill authorizing something. Now he undertakes to say that that thing shall not be started. In the very nature of the case it could not be started until it is authorized, so that the language is not only not germane—it might be applicable to an appropriation bill and it was made applicable to appropriations in the Deficiency Act last December because we confined that act to projects on which work had been begun—but I respectfully submit that this language here is not applicable to an authorization bill, and that the point of order should be sustained because this language is utterly inconsistent and contradictory in an authorization bill, and is certainly not germane to section 17. It is not offered as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CLARK). The amendment may not be germane to the particular section to which it is offered but the Chair does think it would be germane to the bill as a whole in the nature of a limitation. The Chair sustains the point of order, but calls attention to the fact that it could be offered as a new section to the bill. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Section 17 authorizes appropriation to be made in the future in the sum of $150,000,000 for the prosecution of the comprehensive plan adopted under the Sloan-Pick plan for the development of the Missouri Basin. It is necessary that this authorization be made at this time so that planning for the development of this basin can be carried on in an orderly manner. The plan for the development of the water, soil, and power resources, and flood control and navigation features of the basin has been adopted by the Congress and approved by the President. If the development of this basin is to proceed, it is necessary that Congress authorize the expenditure of funds from time to time, so that the appropriation may be made as manpower and materials are available for the construction. It is necessary that this authorization be included in this bill and passed at this time so that the unified development of the basin as a whole may proceed, that is the development of the upper basin should proceed in conjunction with the flood-control and navigation projects of the lower basin.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair Mr. CLARK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6597) to authorize the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 668, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BUCK) there were—ayes 68, noes 10.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings on the bill be continued until next Thursday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK] withdraw his point of order of no quorum?

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to have the vote taken on Thursday. I withdraw the point of order.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on this bill and that all Members who spoke on this bill may have permission to extend their remarks at the point where they debated on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

AMENDING BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill H. R. 4160, an act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

Page 2, strike out lines 10 to 12, inclusive, and insert:

"(8a) 'Council' shall mean the judicial council of the circuit provided for by section 306 of the United States Judicial Code."

Page 3, line 5, strike out "council", and insert "senior judge."

Page 3, strike out lines 8 to 13, inclusive.

Page 3, line 14, strike out "'c.'" and insert "'b.'"

Page 4, strike out lines 4 to 7, inclusive.

Page 4, line 13, strike out all after "charges" down to and including "review" in line 15.

Page 9, line 24, and page 10, line 1, strike out "less than $3,000 nor."

Page 10, line 2, strike out "$2,500" and insert "$5,000."

Page 13, line 16, strike out all after "fund" where it occurs the second time, down to and including "funds" in line 18.

Page 13, line 19, after "of" where it appears the first time insert "annual appropriations from."

Page 13, line 21, after "of" insert "annual appropriations from."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]?

Mr. SPRINGER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I do not intend to object, I would like to have the distinguished gentleman from Alabama explain the situation at this time.

Mr. HOBBS. The distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER] is a member of our committee and knows that the full committee this morning authorized this bill to be called up in pursuance of the unanimous report by the subcommittee. This bill is the salary bill for referees in bankruptcy, which takes out of our judicial system the last vestige of the fee system which has been so long a thorn in the flesh.

The amendments by the Senate, except three that are of some substance, are merely clarifying and perfecting amendments. There is no objection to them. Both the subcommittee and the full Committee on the Judiciary have asked that the bill be called up and the Senate amendments agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. The subcommittee and the full committee have both passed upon this bill?

Mr. HOBBS. Unanimously.

Mr. SPRINGER. And this morning unanimously requested that the gentleman from Alabama call the matter up and agree to the Senate amendments?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes; that is true.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am so happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Under this bill as it is now written and will be accepted if adopted by the House, it will place a ceiling on the salaries of referees in bankruptcy at $10,000; is that correct?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. At the present time how much in fees do many of the referees receive in the United States?

Mr. HOBBS. According to the hearings and testimony before our subcommittee, there were several referees in bankruptcy who in years past had made more than $100,000 a year each. Many of them make three or four times as much as their creators, the district judges.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will this bill increase or lessen the number of referees?

Mr. HOBBS. This will greatly decrease the number of referees, and I think will insure a more judicial attitude on the part of all of them and a better staffing of their offices, and better accounting.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. With the salaries limited to $10,000, will this bill be self-supporting from the fees paid in?

Mr. HOBBS. According to the testimony, and we think it is accurate, there not only will not be a deficit in the fund but probably a profit to the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HULL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement.

Mr. SHORT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a memorial address recently delivered by a former colleague, Hon. Lewis E. Miller.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota asked and was given permission to extend the remarks he made in Committee of the Whole, and include certain letters which he wrote.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include editorials.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech he made at the Stock Growers Convention on the value of meat in the diet.

Mr. GORSKI asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL] is recognized for 20 minutes.

FOREIGN RELIEF AND DOMESTIC FOOD SHORTAGES

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, the question of food is giving the people of America great concern at the present time. This afternoon I wish to speak on one small phase of the food problem, but before proceeding I should like to announce to the House that a communication comes in today from Armour & Co., of Chicago, one of the major meat packers of this Nation, stating that 6,500 head of beef cattle have passed through the Chicago yards but that, under OPA compliance, they were not able to buy a single head.

Mr. Speaker, the administration here in Washington, acting for the Government, has bought up and cornered the wheat market and the corn market by paying a premium of 30 cents a bushel above the normal price, when the stocks of wheat and corn were short.

Now they have control of the wheat and corn, which they purchased to relieve the famine areas in Europe and Asia. Unless they release and allow some of these products to be diverted for the use of the American people, industry will be seriously crippled throughout the Nation and we will have a near famine if not a real one here in America.

Most of the flour mills throughout the Nation are shut down today and bread lines are appearing, according to newspaper reports, with a meat shortage as well. Coal miners in Illinois threaten to strike unless they get meat.

Corn is not only necessary for the feeding of livestock and poultry, but it is necessary in many ways in keeping industry going. The farmers are asked to raise less hogs and less poultry. A bad food shortage can happen in this year or in 1947 unless we act with due caution.

Let me give you one of many illustrations which is applicable throughout the Nation. The Hollywood Candy Co., of Centralia, Ill., in my congressional district, for some time has been running only about half time because of the lack of corn sirup. This company employs 550 people and unless it can get relief right away it must close down, throwing these people out of work. The president of the company had wired me asking that I intercede with the administration and the Department of Agriculture in an effort to have sufficient sirup allocated to his plant to continue operation.

My first move was to contact the Department in an effort to find the cause of this shortage, and here is the interesting information from the Department of Agriculture which is authentic and can be verified.

They told me that in an effort to help the people in the famine areas abroad that between April 22 and May 11, by paying a 30-cents-per-bushel bonus, that the Government bought about 34,000,000 bushels of corn at approximately $1.51 per bushel, including bonus. Part of this corn has been shipped to Europe for processing, but the greater part of it is to be processed in this country and, as I understand, largely made into sirup.

Having bought up the corn, which is extremely scarce in this particular instance, the Government contracted with the Union Starch & Refining Co., at Granite City, Ill., to have 600,000 bushels of this corn made into 21,000,000 pounds of sirup to be shipped to Europe to be distributed by UNRRA.

This Union Starch & Refining Co., at Granite City, had been supplying the Hollywood Candy Co. with its sirup. Because of a shortage of steel this company processed and shipped 24 carloads of sirup in wooden barrels and because of continuing shortage of steel for the making of steel drums which were preferable, and also because of the shortage of wooden barrels, the company has processed and filled with sirup 35 steel tank cars which are on the siding at Granite City, Ill.

The CPA has allocated steel to make 26,000 more steel drums for this company of which 5 carloads are expected to arrive this week.

Mr. F. A. Martoccio, president of the Hollywood Candy Co. wired me urging that his former supplier located only 50 miles away be permitted by the Government to divert some of this sirup to his company so that he may continue to keep his plant going insuring employment for 550 people.

Up to Saturday last the Department here in Washington which controls the situation did not feel they could make such a diversion. Monday, however, they gave me the good news that the sirup contained in the tank cars would be diverted to supply the domestic or home-front trade temporarily which will give the Hollywood Candy Co. some much needed immediate relief. This diversion will only be a drop in the bucket to what the trade generally needs for home consumption. It is, however, greatly appreciated by me and will be appreciated by Mr. Martoccio, the president of the company, and the 550 people who work for that company.

I would like to pay the highest compliment to the men in the Department of Agriculture who are handling this most difficult problem. I have found them at all times honest, frank, sympathetic, and deeply interested in the welfare of the Nation.

In fact, those in charge of this corn and wheat program, I am sure, are deeply concerned as to the effect the carrying out of the administration's program is going to have on the economy of our Nation. I am sure they fear under the present situation, that they will not be able to secure enough of the refined products of corn to even supply the industrial and pharmaceutical plants which need it until the late fall corn crop comes in.

The American people contributed about $50,000,000,000 to the European allies in food and equipment to defeat the Axis Powers; they contributed in the sacrifice and lives of their sons a priceless loss that money can never repay. They are still willing to share as much as is possible of our food, medicine, and clothing to the famine areas abroad.

There is, however, a limit to our generosity. Charity begins at home. Our first obligation is to the American people. There is no glory and no sense in dragging down the American people to a low level at home throwing countless thousands of people out of work by those in charge of our Government.

Since the Government has bought up the surplus wheat, bought up the surplus corn, and controls the market, it is the first duty and responsibility of the Government to release enough of the wheat to the millers to stop the bread lines in this country. To release to the processors enough corn to reasonably protect the established business concerns which must have such corn products to continue to employ their people and supply the food products in the confectionery line which the people need and want for their physical well-being.

Servicemen who helped to defend this country are writing to me asking for more sirup and sugar for businesses they are operating.

It is the responsibility of this Government, which has cornered the market, to see that the bakers have sufficient corn sugar, corn sirup and such by-products as will permit them even in a limited form to continue their regular established business practices. If they do not, thousands of bakeries will close.

I note the bakers are to be allowed to make only 60 percent of the cakes, pies, cookies, and more highly sweetened products that they were permitted to make in 1941. This will save no bread. The loaf of bread has been reduced in weight and raised a penny in price. Another contribution to famine abroad.

Carrying the illustration of the Hollywood Candy Co. a little further, let me point out just what the Administration, which has placed on these rigid controls, is doing to the officials in management and to the 550 men and women who work in that plant.

THEY TAKE AWAY THEIR JOBS

The management and the men and women throughout the war bought bonds mostly checked off from their salaries every month. The money they have loaned the Government by buying bonds is now used by the Government paying 30 cents a bushel bonus for corn and this corn is being processed by the Union Starch & Refining Co., at Granite City, making 21,000,000 pounds of sirup which is being shipped to Europe to the famine areas. The result is that 550 men and women are having their pay checks stopped by being thrown out of work because the Government has stepped in buying up the corn, taking over the processing plant and shipping the product to Europe. Many will have to cash their bonds and go on unemployment relief unless this sirup is made continuously available.

This practice is going on all over the Nation. It is the continuation of the policy which has been in force for years of taking too great an interest in the people of other countries at the expense of the American people. It is a continuation of the give-away policy which goes far beyond reasonable, sensible charity. The American people are generous and want to help but there is a limit to their generosity.

The Government has planned to ship out 100,640,000 pounds of sirup which they say is being bought by the UNRRA organization. The cost of laying it down in Europe is largely borne by the Federal Government. The American Government has donated billions to UNRRA. In fact, of the 50 nations pooling their finances from the beginning, the United States has put in 72 percent of all the money and probably a great deal more. We furnish UNRRA the money to buy our products. That completes the gift.

Mr. Speaker, the time has arrived when we Members of Congress demand an immediate investigation. We want to know just what the Government is doing with the millions of bushels of wheat bought at a bonus of 30 cents a bushel and what they are doing and are going to continue to do with the 34,000,000 bushels of corn bought in the same manner. We should find out how much of this wheat and corn is in the United States, how much is being processed here, and how much is being processed in Europe. Yes; how much of it is being wasted and allowed to spoil, and whether the Government will divert some of it to our own people and our own industries to keep them going.

There has been colossal waste connected with practically every activity of UNRRA, and, doubtless, colossal waste will be practiced in handling of the food we are sending to the famine areas abroad.

I am satisfied if the Members of Congress had the figures now these figures would show that more of the wheat and more of the corn which is now cornered and hoarded by the Government could be loaned to the millers and processors to prevent the shortage of bread, the shortage of sirup, and the shortage of many things that are happening because more of this grain is hoarded than is necessary at the present time. The grain could be paid back later if necessary and our industries could be kept going.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. MERROW] last Friday, introduced a resolution to appoint a committee of the House to immediately start such an investigation to learn what commitments have been made on famine relief. It can do no harm but could do a great deal of good. If we will put this resolution through the Congress immediately and start such an investigation, maybe this time we can "lock the door before the horse is stolen."

I want to endorse this resolution and commend it to the Members of the House. Let us get behind it and take action now, because time is of the essence.

Let us try to prevent waste, and investigate first. There has been an investigation uncovering a tremendous waste in the handling of surplus property. There is a demand for an investigation of the waste of some $5,000,000,000 alleged to have happened through War Shipping Administration. There has been waste and investigation of waste on a scale never paralleled before in the history of this Government. Let us not hysterically waste ourselves into a food famine in the country.

Mr. Speaker, the American people were willing to be regimented during the war. They had hoped that controls would be lifted as rapidly as possible afterward. To the amazement of Congress and to the amazement of the American people controls have been tightened. New controls never thought of in this country have been clamped down on the American people. Regimentation greater than any time during the war is beginning to give the people great concern.

They had hoped for something better. The Congress must continue to do its best to combat further controls so that the people may get back, maybe once again to their normal American way of life.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I believe the gentlemen meant to indicate that they had passed through the Chicago livestock yards and not through the yards of Armour & Co.

Mr. VURSELL. That is right. They further state that is hardly probable that they will be able to buy under OPA compliance and butcher any cattle during this entire week.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I yield.

Mr. SPRINGER. At a food hearing meeting at Indianapolis on the 8th day of June the representatives of Kingan and Armour were present and testified. They gave evidence that at the Indianapolis stockyards on one day something over 3,000 head of livestock had passed through and they were able to secure but 256 head for slaughtering purposes; that the others were loaded into trucks, taken into the large centers; and they were ostensibly used for black-market purposes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Along that same line, I had a telegram from the Black Hills Packing Plant, Rapid City, S. Dak., calling attention to their situation and to a report in the newspaper there to the effect that it had been impossible for them to be in compliance. This is a federally inspected plant. They found it impossible to purchase live animals and to dress them out and have the required percentage of dressed meat. They say that because of the conflicting regulations and the large number of regulations it is impossible to stay in business and do it lawfully today.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The same situation prevails on the west coast. I am glad the gentleman is taking this up, because it involves loss because of the meat being diverted from the usual channels and very important parts of the meat industry, and it involves the loss of fats and oils which we need now.

Mr. VURSELL. That is quite correct. Millions of pounds of food are being lost by the small slaughterers over the Nation that the people need because the regulations of the OPA have forced them out of the legitimate channels into the black market.

I shall not go further with this subject, but I wanted to make this announcement. I should like now to confine my remarks to wheat and grain and to other problems of byproducts that are being shipped out of the country.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I yield briefly.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Speaking of the black market, a packing plant has come to my attention which has been unable to make any money because it wanted to abide by the law. A party approached the owner of that packing plant and offered to pay the owner of this small plant $2,500 a week, $10,000 a month, or $120,000 for 12 months, he to have nothing to do except turn his little packing plant over to this party to operate, ostensibly to go into the black market for the disposal of his meat.

Mr. VURSELL. In other words, instead of regulations set up so that business can operate under them, they have been set up in such manner as to breed the circumvention of the law and make marketing difficult for people of this country who otherwise want to be good, law-abiding citizens.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. I want to compliment the gentleman on his splendid remarks. I am particularly interested in the statement that the gentleman made with reference to the contribution this country has made to the stricken people of Europe and Asia. I understand that the United States has made nearly 50 percent of all of the world shipments during the past year. Of the four countries of the world producing wheat, this country, Canada, the Argentine, and Australia—by reason of these orders the gentleman has just mentioned, we have stripped our carryover of wheat down to the point where we have about two-thirds of a bushel per capita in this country, whereas Canada has 6 bushels per capita, Australia 1.5 bushels, and the Argentine 5.6 bushels per capita.

Will the gentleman explain to me why it is that the powers that be feel constrained to strip the people of this country when other nations are not contributing their fair share?

Mr. VURSELL. I am sorry to say that I cannot answer the gentleman's question. I do not see how anyone can answer the question because I cannot believe that anyone can answer it. There certainly is no valid reason why this great country which has to lend its leadership to world peace and the rehabilitation of the world, and at the same time should be brought down to a level of two-thirds of a bushel of wheat in this country as compared with several bushels in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I would like to comment on what the gentleman has just said. Unless we produce a large spring wheat crop this year, considering the commitments that have been made out of the 1946 crop by the administration of 250,000,000 bushels, we may be headed for a decided bread famine within 9 months.

Mr. VURSELL. I think that is entirely possible.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Because they are going to ship out the winter wheat first, and our spring wheat will not be made into a crop until about 6 weeks from now.

Mr. VURSELL. We are taking a tremendous gamble with famine in the United States. It is unfair to this great business organization of bakers throughout the country and it is certainly unfair to the people who are standing in the breadlines and who will stand in the breadlines in much greater numbers unless something is done.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. RIZLEY. I think it ought to be stated at the point where the gentleman pointed out that this Government had furnished 72 percent of the money used by UNRRA that we have also furnished more than 80 percent of all of the grain that has been used by UNRRA and distributed to the foreign countries.

Mr. VURSELL. That is quite right.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. MERROW] is recognized for 45 minutes.

THE FOOD CRISIS

Mr. MERROW. Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the subject of food is being brought to the attention of the House this afternoon. The food crisis in the United States is growing worse as the days pass. The people of this country expect their Congress to do something about this all-important matter. We are in a state of confusion and disorganization insofar as the handling of the food crisis is concerned. I believe if this administration had called a conference and set forth as the object the working out of a plan to produce the greatest possible confusion and disorganization in the handling of food, they could not have done any better than they have already accomplished. It has been handled very badly from beginning to end. We have reached a point now where there are great shortages not only as far as food for livestock in this country is concerned but also food for human beings. It is essential that we taken action immediately in this particularly grave situation. I compliment the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL], who preceded me, for the remarks on this subject. He pointed out some pertinent facts in connection with the phases of this problem. He alluded to a resolution which I introduced last week. I am going to read this resolution and discuss certain sections of it:

House Resolution 665

Resolved, That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of seven Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made. The committee is authorized and directed to make a study and investigation of the commitments and agreements of the United States to furnish grains and other foodstuffs to foreign countries and to ascertain the amount of such grains and foodstuffs furnished foreign countries by the United States between September 1, 1945, and the date of the committee report to the House. The committee shall in particular study and investigate the following:

I would like to call the attention of the House particularly to the following points:

(a) The extent of our commitments and agreements to furnish grains and other foodstuffs to foreign nations.

(b) The amount of grain and other foodstuffs shipped abroad for distribution to foreign countries in pursuance of any commitment or agreement from September 1, 1945, to the date of the committee report.

(c) The amount of grain and other foodstuffs currently held in warehouses and other storage places in the United States awaiting shipment abroad to fulfill any existing commitment or agreement for such shipment.

(d) The amount of grain and other foodstuffs currently held in warehouses and other storage places abroad awaiting processing or distribution.

(e) Whether the current food shortage in the various types of grains or other foodstuffs in the United States can be alleviated by transporting grains and other foodstuffs awaiting shipment abroad to sections or areas in the United States where there is a shortage of grains or other foodstuffs.

I call attention to point (f) which is as follows:

(f) The advisability of curtailing such shipments of grains and other foodstuffs abroad as may be necessary to alleviate the food shortage in the United States.

The last two paragraphs of the resolution are as follows:

The committee shall report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session) as soon as practicable the results of its investigation and study together with such recommendations as it deems necessary, but in no event shall the report with recommendations be made later than one month from the date of passage of this resolution.

For the purposes of carrying out this resolution the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the Chairman of the committee or any member designated by him and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

I have asked that this committee report within 30 days to the House of Representatives because time is of the essence.

I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I feel the gentleman has a very good resolution but it seems to me we already have a special committee to investigate food shortages. I happen to be a member of that committee.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] is chairman of the committee. It is well within the purview of that committee to make the investigation which the gentleman seeks to have made by his resolution. I would suggest that the gentleman confer with the gentleman from Georgia, chairman of that committee, to see if the committee will go ahead and make the investigation. I am strongly in favor of it.

Mr. MERROW. I believe such an investigation should be made. I am not particular about who shall make it, but it ought be made in order that the country may know that the House of Representatives is doing something. We should have a committee and that committee should be instructed to make the investigation even before the Congress recesses.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERROW. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. RIZLEY. Of course, every Member of Congress is sympathetic with the objectives which the gentleman has in mind by his resolution. I may say that in addition to the so-called Pace committee which has for its specific purpose the investigation of the identical things which the gentleman seeks to cover in his resolution, the House Committee on Agriculture for several days, covering at least a couple of weeks, has been conducting an investigation of the very things covered in the gentleman's resolution. I think the gentleman would profit by taking the matter up with the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Mr. FLANNAGAN. It was the very things the gentleman has pointed out that caused the Committee on Agriculture to start this investigation. We seem to have commitments to furnish grain and other foodstuffs all over the world, but apparently no one knew who was responsible for those commitments, and apparently no correct investigation had been made of foodstuffs. As a consequence, someone was making commitments. We have had some of the gentlemen from the World Food Committee before our committee, trying to ascertain the things the gentleman has referred to in his resolution. Someone has made commitments. That is a long story. We could go into wheat. If we had followed out what some people term commitments on wheat, we would be two or three hundred million bushels in the red today instead of having any wheat at all.

Mr. MERROW. I appreciate what the gentleman has said and it leads me to ask him this question, since he has been speaking on this matter. Do you have any idea that the committee will be able to tell the House to what extent commitments have been made, before the Congress adjourns?

Mr. RIZLEY. I am very hopeful that we can. I would say we have had at least a half a dozen days of hearings before the committee thus far. We were trying to get Mr. Bowles and Mr. Porter, in addition to others, before the committee, but unfortunately they have been engaged elsewhere at the times our chairman tried to get them before the committee, but we hope to have them before the committee some time before long. Among others, we had Dr. Fitzgerald, who made this inspection trip with former President Hoover, who gave us a great deal of information concerning stock piles of wheat all over the country. He told us that the mills in Great Britain were running 95 percent capacity at the time they were over there, while the mills in this country were shut down. He is also a member of the World Food Committee. We obtained a great deal of information, which is in the record, from Dr. Fitzgerald, and others from the Department of Agriculture, and others connected with this food situation. We hope to have Secretary of Agriculture Anderson himself before the committee to testify. We are hopeful of getting some report made to the Congress before adjournment.

Mr. MERROW. I am glad to hear that. I suppose you do not know whether or not there are large stock piles in the United States, whether or not there are stock piles abroad that are rotting because they cannot be processed. I suppose you are not ready to make a recommendation as to whether or not the shortages in this country shall be taken care of before we ship foodstuffs all over the world.

Mr. RIZLEY. I may say to the gentleman that some of the information was brought out by the preceding speaker. Dr. Fitzgerald told us as I remember that in Great Britain their mills were running at 95 percent of capacity, that their stock pile of wheat alone was higher per capita there now than it is in the United States of America. Because of someone not understanding the facts the commitments we made on wheat, for instance, gave us a carry-over of less than three-eighths of one bushel of wheat per capita in this country. Canada was a little wiser than we. They have about a 6-bushel carry-over per capita. All of that information we are gradually accumulating.

Mr. MERROW. This would indicate to me that it might be the opinion of the committee to recommend to the Congress that we curtail shipments abroad until deficit areas in this country are cared for.

Mr. RIZLEY. Let me say to the gentleman I think it is fair to say that the different branches of the executive department of this Government apparently do not know what each other is doing; for instance, the Department of Agriculture, from information we have, did not know anything about some commitments that were made over at Potsdam and some other places; and the State Department is making some commitments for the Federal Government. The Department of Agriculture is supposed to be the one department of this Government that knows something about the food supplies of the country. We are going into those things and going to try to find out what can be done to rectify some of the things that need attention.

Mr. MERROW. I am certainly glad the committee on which the gentleman is serving is doing that work but I wish it were possible for a resolution to pass this House insisting that such reports be made to the House of Representatives before we adjourn this summer. It is all-important that this information be available to the House and the country before this Congress adjourns.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERROW. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Is the gentleman's resolution broad enough to compel a disclosure by the Army and Navy as to the foodstuffs held by the services?

Mr. MERROW. I do not think so. I should be very happy to have such a provision in it.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. MERROW. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. First I want to compliment the gentleman from New Hampshire for the interest he has shown in providing food for his people and feed for their livestock. I have been listening to him attentively. It seems to me his problem consists of two parts: One, the general over-all picture; and two, the immediate corrective steps to be taken. I wish to read from the Journal of Farm Economics, the issue of May 1944, this statement by G. L. Nelson:

> We were consistently a net exporting Nation in these products during the period of 1912 to 1924, and a net importer during the period 1925 through 1941.

The article is about food. In other words, we were on an importing basis every year from 1925 up until 1942.

Then another sentence:

> The above comparisons point to the significance of two widely recognized facts: that United States foreign trade in foodstuffs during the past three decades has been small relative to production—

And that means production in the United States—> and that except for the two war periods the country has been a net importer of foodstuffs.

The fact that we have been in a food-import position for so many years makes it necessary to call attention to the problems incident to being a food-export Nation. As a matter of fact, more recent records show that even in 1944, so far as food is concerned, we imported more food than we exported. I hesitate to make that statement because I presume many people do not believe it. Probably many people have been misled because they have heard so much New Deal and administration propaganda to the contrary. That is the backlog, the base, from which we have to operate as this situation is responsible for the food problems that have arisen within the last year. Second, during the war the practice was to ship concentrated food. We imported in 1944 a quarter of a billion bushels of feed grain and exported only a few million bushels of grain, but large amounts of manufactured foods.

The people in New England had access to imported grains from Canada at that time, but none are available from that source now.

Now the situation is in reverse. Now the demand is to send the crude food materials, like wheat, and all the oatmeal that can be made. The countries want the grains and the shipping space is available now.

We still, then, have the two situations to face. One the historical background, in which we did not feed ourselves for many years. Second, all at once we are to become a food-exporting Nation. Beginning on January 1 of this year our food exports during the first 3 months were twice what our food imports were. If we are going to assume a position of being a food export nation, naturally it has to come from either increased production, or by taking food away from our stock piles, or by preventing waste of foods, or by reducing the United States consumption of food. New England faces this problem more quickly than some of the other sections no doubt.

Mr. MERROW. We feel it very keenly, yes, and I am going to give a picture of the situation in New England. I appreciate the gentleman's comment very much. I know of no one who is more familiar with the food situation than my colleague from Wisconsin who has just spoken and I am glad that he has made such an excellent contribution to the discussion of this important question.

Mr. Speaker, I read a letter I received from Alfred L. French, secretary of the New Hampshire Farm Bureau Federation:

MAY 23, 1946.

Hon. CHESTER MERROW,
Member of Congress,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Our grain situation has become so acute that we are actually desperate. We are writing out in this letter the contents of telegrams to Secretary of Agriculture and Chester Bowles. We have also appealed to the President, giving him the content of the wires to Anderson and Bowles. We have certainly got to have something done in addition to what has taken place already or we won't be able to keep our poultry and dai[ry] industries. Can you help us to follo[w] through on this.

"Feed buyers for Eastern mills who have been in the grain production areas continuously are unable to make purchases. Our feed supply almost completely exhausted. The time has come when the Government must take action that will get grain into the deficit New England areas. This action must be immediate. We suggest these possibilities: (1) Government seizure and allocation of oats and corn. It appears there is a good supply of oats and there must be some corn; or (2) Further lifting of grain ceilings in an amount sufficient to cause offerings on the market; or (3) Complete removal of ceilings on oats and corn. Certainly oat ceilings can be removed for a time and if results are uncontrollable they can be returned; or (4) Any other action which will guarantee movement of feed grain into this area."

Sincerely yours,

ALFRED L. FRENCH,
Secretary, New Hampshire Farm Bureau Federation.

CONCORD, N. H.

Here is a telegram I received from Robert F. Thurrell, Wolfeboro, N. H.:

JUNE 13, 1946.

CHESTER E. MERROW,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

It is regrettable that you have not been able to protect the poultry industry of this section. Pullets on range too small to market are being burned by the thousands on account lack of feed; unless OPA is eliminated this whole country is headed for disaster.

ROBERT F. THURRELL,
Cotton Mt. Farms.

WOLFEBORO, N. H.

Mr. Speaker, I did my best to eliminate the OPA. I voted against it and hope I will have a chance to do so again. I think it would have been a fine thing if we could have kicked it out a few weeks ago.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERROW. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. VURSELL. Did I understand the gentleman to say that they are burning chickens because they cannot get feed for them?

Mr. MERROW. That is the information contained in this telegram.

Mr. VURSELL. I do not doubt that statement, but it is alarming.

Mr. MERROW. I have heard that chickens have been chloroformed and drowned. Here is another communication I received from Owen Johnson, of Manchester, N. H.:

MAY 27, 1946.

Hon. CHESTER E. MERROW,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The grain situation is getting serious to the point that we will have to shut down our logging crews if grain cannot come through.

Very truly yours,

OWEN JOHNSON,
Johnson Lumber Co.

MANCHESTER, N. H.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MERROW. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I think OPA is only one of the contributing causes for our food problems, however.

Mr. MERROW. It goes in the black market.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. To be fair about it, I will say to my colleague I think we will have to admit that this food and feed problem goes back years before the OPA. This administration adopted a policy or program that has not encouraged agriculture to keep pace with the increase in population of our country. The present administration has not encouraged agriculture to keep pace with the industrial developments of our country. The OPA is only one of the links in the chain.

Mr. MERROW. I think probably the gentleman is right, although I will ask him this question: He would not be sorry to see the OPA ended, would he?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I would like to see its errors corrected by constructive amendments. I think a formula for decontrol should be put in operation when a certain point is reached in production. The Gossett amendment is an acceptable approach to anyone that does not want the OPA to be a permanent institution.

Mr. MERROW. I would like to know how you are going to correct it.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERROW. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I would like to point this out. The gentleman said that the poultry farmers are not able to get grain to feed their poultry, so they are burning all their chickens.

Mr. MERROW. That is right.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I happen to know the poultry producer the gentleman referred to, a very reliable and respected man. But I would like to point out to the gentleman that we have a philosophy or school of thought down in one of the agencies that they want the people to take the corn and grain directly into the human system rather than take it in as dairy products or as red meat or poultry. So this philosophy or system is going into operation and they are going to practice on the people by destroying meat and poultry and eventually they are going to feed us directly corn and wheat and barley and rye and oats into the human system, because they claim we can get more value out of it and save more than we could in any other manner.

Mr. MERROW. I thank the gentleman. I think if we do not get away from some of this control of the economic system from Washington, perhaps there may not be any America left.

Mr. SAVAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERROW. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SAVAGE. I have a very high regard for the ability of the gentleman from New Hampshire. I am sure the gentleman knows that the OPA has nothing to do with our commitments of wheat or grain to foreign countries. The commitments have just made OPA's job harder in this country. I think the gentleman also knows that as long as almost everything else is being laid onto OPA, we should not lay the blame for these commitments on OPA.

Mr. MERROW. I do not intend to lay the blame for these commitments on OPA, but I think the movement of grain into the New England area could have been facilitated if it had not been for price ceilings.

Mr. SAVAGE. The OPA can be blamed for plenty of things without blaming them for something they did not do.

Mr. MERROW. I think it was on account of the price ceilings they put on grain.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERROW. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LANDIS. The OPA put a price ceiling on wheat that forced the wheat to go into livestock, and we have lost several million bushels of wheat that could have been held for human consumption, and that was caused by the OPA price ceilings.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERROW. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS. We lost over 100,000,000 bushels of grain that should have been used for human consumption, and that is solely the OPA's responsibility.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I would also like to point out that the OPA is primarily responsible for the situation, because the scarcity policy of Chester Bowles as Economic Stabilizer and as Director of OPA was responsible in holding down production in this country.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I just want to keep the record straight. Last year we had one of these super-duper special committees that the gentleman is asking for, and Mr. Anderson, the present Secretary of Agriculture, was its chairman, and if you will take the time to read the report of this special committee you will see that they recommended the use of grain to fatten cattle even.

This available grain should have been kept for your people and for your poultry.

Mr. MERROW. That is right.

I want to speak briefly about a report made by the Commissioners of Agriculture of New England on the subject of poultry, and then I will move to food for human beings in New England. The following situation was found to exist when this report was made on the 7th of June:

The Commissioners of Agriculture of New England met at the State House, Boston, Mass., Friday, June 7, 1946, in conference with representatives of the State colleges and dairy and poultry industries to consider the food situation in New England.

The following situation was found to exist:

1. Laying hens have been cut 50 percent of the January 1 number; 3,200,000 hens were slaughtered between January 1 and May 1; 2,200,000 hens were slaughtered during the month of May. This rate is 250 percent of normal, with present rate of slaughter more than 300 percent of normal. The rate of liquidation is increasing daily.

2. Present replacement flocks are down 15–25 percent from last year. Some pullets have already been slaughtered due to lack of feed. Farmers are trying to hold replacement stock. Ultimate size of replacement flocks depend upon available grain.

3. Broiler production is down 60–75 percent from last year.

4. Egg receipts at four major egg-marketing cooperatives (Hartford, Conn.; Springfield and Brockton, Mass.; Derry, N. H.) were 42 percent less during the first week of June than in the first week of May this year.

5. Considered estimates of grain supply for June will be less than 50 percent of last year. More than 3,000 carloads of grain are needed to hold present livestock and poultry number for 30 days.

This means a milk shortage greater than last year, and a shortage of eggs and poultry this fall and winter as well as serious damage to farm businesses.

Suggested solutions of this grievous problem to both consumers and producers are:

1. Loan of Government-owned corn (2,000,000 bushels).

2. Subsidy on corn, oats, barley, and other available grains except milo, either on Government or private basis.

3. Direct Government purchase of grain for shipment to deficit areas.

NEW ENGLAND COMMISSIONERS OF AGRICULTURE,
FREDERICK E. COLE, Massachusetts.
A. D. GARDNER, Maine.
STANLEY JUDD, Vermont.
FRANK H. PEET, Connecticut.
ANDREW L. FELKER, New Hampshire.
RAYMOND G. BRESSLER, Rhode Island.

So it goes. There is a great liquidation of flocks throughout New England. This is going to cut down the supply of livestock and of course it will decrease the supply of milk, and so on.

In all the larger cities of New Hampshire one can find butter lines any day. You go out into the various towns and you will not find any meat in the showcases. I have heard reports only recently that some people have not been able to purchase meat during the last 3 or 4 weeks. They have been 3 or 4 weeks and sometimes months without meat. There is a definite shortage. The food situation at the moment in my section of the country is much worse than it has been at any other time.

We have discussed OPA in reference to the food shortage. On May 8 I introduced H. R. 6374, to remove the ceiling prices on grain. I hoped that that might increase the supply of grain.

I also introduced H. R. 6322 a short time ago to remove ceiling prices on meat. The Government has so regulated and so badly handled the meat industry that very little meat is available. Much of it is moving in the black market. We are just not getting distribution of meat throughout New England.

Because of the critical food situation I introduced House Resolution 665, in which I have asked for a study and investigation of our commitments and the amount of grain and other foodstuffs shipped abroad during the past few months.

I have here and will put into the RECORD a statement which many of you have seen. It was issued on the 6th of June 1946 by the Department of Agriculture:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
PRODUCTION AND MARKETING DIVISION,
Washington, D. C., June 6, 1946.

GRAIN EXPORTS IN MAY TOTALED NEARLY 600,000 TONS

Exports of United States grain and grain products totaled an estimated 363,000 long tons during the last 11 days of May. This raised the total for the full month to 595,000 tons (22,222,000 bushels). The total for May included (in terms of whole-grain equivalents): Wheat, 311,000 tons; flour, 209,000 tons; corn, 63,000 tons; corn products, 12,000 tons.

Department of Agriculture officials said that exports in May were reduced sharply below scheduled shipments by rail strikes and floods. Heavy concentration of shipping schedules during the last 11 days of the month, when grain was ready to move in volume, brought the projected total to 840,000 long tons for the month as a whole. Strike and flood interference affected this period of heaviest schedules. As a result, approximately 250,000 tons of May shipments had to be carried over into June.

Exports of more than 1,500,000 tons have been scheduled for June. Shipment of this volume would raise the total exports of United States grain and grain products for the period January 1 through June 30, 1946, to more than 5,400,000 tons (about 200,000,000 bushels). Added to the shipments during the last 6 months of 1945, this would bring total exports for the marketing year to close to 400,000,000 bushels. While the heavy volume of June exports has been definitely scheduled, shipment of the full amount will require continuous flow of grain and grain products up to the limit of capacity, without further interruptions or delays.

Exports of United States grain and grain products during the first 5 months of 1946 totaled 3,885,000 long tons (145,235,000 bushels). In addition about 188,000 long tons of Canadian wheat milled in bond in the United States was shipped, making total shipments from the United States during the 5 months of 4,073,000 tons of grain and grain products.

The total for the first 5 months of 1946 included: Wheat, 2,692,000 tons; flour, 1,303,000 tons; corn, 65,000 tons; corn products, 13,000 tons.

The accompanying table shows exports of wheat and flour equivalent by destinations during the first 5 months of 1946. The largest shipments were for UNRRA countries, with a total of 1,460,000 tons. France and French North Africa received 938,000 tons, United States occupation zones 434,000 tons, the British Empire 348,000 tons, Brazil 148,000 tons, and other countries smaller quantities.

I would like to see the Committee on Agriculture or a select committee determine the accuracy of the above figures and find out just how broad our commitments are; how much grain and other foodstuffs is being sent abroad; and determine whether or not we have the facilities to export this amount. We should know what is currently held in the warehouses in this country. We should find out if it is true that grain is piling up abroad and that some of it is rotting. These may be rumors, but if they are true, certainly we are not feeding the starving people of Europe because we just are not getting the materials across. Certainly we ought to take care of the sections in our own country where we have definite shortages.

I would like to know, and I would like to have a committee find out, if we possibly can find out whether or not it is advisable to curtail the shipments of grain and other foodstuffs abroad as may be necessary to alleviate the present food shortage in the United States. I am going to give some opinions on the possible curtailment of shipments of grains and other foodstuffs as may be necessary to alleviate the food shortage in the United States.

I have received the following telegrams:

JUNE 13, 1946.

Hon. CHESTER E. MERROW,
House of Representatives:

In order to save our poultry flocks from further liquidation I approve your suggestion of curtailing shipments abroad of feed grain until supplies are sufficient to meet present demands of poultry flocks in New Hampshire.

ANDREW FELKER,
Commissioner of Agriculture.
CONCORD, N. H.

JUNE 15, 1946.

Hon. CHESTER E. MERROW,
House Office Building:

Would recommend curtailment of shipments of grain abroad until critical situation in deficit areas in our own country have been relieved.

CHARLES M. DALE,
Governor of New Hampshire.
CONCORD, N. H.

JUNE 15, 1946.

Hon. CHESTER E. MERROW,
House Office Building:

Recommend curtailment shipments abroad as suggested. Hope your plan provides for replacement out of new crop. Any action should be reasonably speedy.

A. K. GARDNER,
Commissioner of Agriculture.
AUGUSTA, MAINE.

JUNE 17, 1946.

Hon. CHESTER E. MERROW,
House Office Building:

If Government agency cannot otherwise relieve deficit areas in United States recommend curtailment of grain shipments abroad. Prompt action desirable.

HORACE HILDRETH,
Governor of Maine.

JUNE 17, 1946.

Hon. CHESTER E. MERROW,
House Office Building:

Believe Government holds grain in excess of available shipping space for foreign shipment. Recommend this excess be sent now to deficit areas. Replacement later. If this plan not acceptable favor curtailment.

S. G. JUDD,
Commissioner of Agriculture.
MONTPELIER, VT.

JUNE 17, 1946.

Hon. CHESTER E. MERROW,
House Office Building:

Favor curtailment seed shipments abroad for 1 month. Rhode Island poultry situation daily getting worse.

R. G. BRESSLER,
Director of Agriculture and Conservation.
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

It would require some study probably to ascertain just how much grain and other foodstuffs are being held and just how much of it can be shipped to deficit areas in the United States. Here is a country, the wealthiest in the world, and well able to take care of itself. I think it is time that we became interested in our own affairs to the extent of helping the deficit food areas in this country. It is time for action by this House. This is June 18. We may not adjourn until some time late next month. Certainly people in the United States are entitled to know the facts in this serious food situation. Knowing the facts, they will be able to help decide what ought to be done. If I am any judge of public opinion, I think the Nation expects action from the Congress. I think the Nation believes that we should care for our own country and our own interests, then if we have a surplus, we will try to take care of others. I believe they wish to see the curtailment of shipments of grain and other foodstuffs until the shortage in the United States is alleviated.

I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS].

Mr. LANDIS. I compliment the gentleman on the statement he is making, which is a very able one.

I would like for the gentleman to get for us how many chickens have been destroyed in the last year so that it will be valuable information to give the public. Of course, we are trying to do everything we can to save those chickens now, but when we have a severe meat shortage next winter and there is no poultry to take its place, the people will know how many chickens have been burned or chloroformed in the United States. It will be information to give the people.

Mr. MERROW. I will endeavor to secure that information. I receive reports from New England every day. When I am in the State of New Hampshire I constantly get reports from the farmers in reference to the destruction of flocks.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERROW. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. I would say to the gentleman that probably no section of the country is so well organized in the poultry industry as is New England. You have some of the finest authorities on poultry there that there are in this country.

Mr. MERROW. We have heard statements made by two or three members of the Committee on Agriculture this afternoon. They have indicated that the committee is trying to find the information I have asked for in my resolution. I hope there will be enough interest in this subject so that we can secure the information before adjournment. If the Committee on Agriculture will obtain it, well and good, but is there not some method by which we can insist that this information be furnished at once? Is there not something we can do to get House action on some of these important problems? I think you will agree with me that the curtailment of shipments abroad is an important phase of this whole question.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERROW. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I just want to keep the record straight again. Speaking of the poultry industry, during the war we had a 50-percent increase in egg production. Everybody subscribed to the expansion of the poultry industry. Millions and millions of pounds of powdered eggs were shipped, as concentrated food. It had the universal approval of everybody. The poultry business expanded. Now the war is over. The demand now is not for these animal products, this concentrated food.

The Agricultural Department appears now to be following a policy of reducing poultry too rapidly and too drastically. This liquidation of flocks can create a serious situation if judgment is not now exercised.

Mr. MERROW. I think this liquidation of flocks that is going on should be prevented, particularly when we need food in the United States.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERROW. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Certainly the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY] is not proposing that there is no increase in the consumption of these products? The gentleman is not suggesting that Wisconsin cheese shall go back to where it was 5 or 10 years ago? There is a demand for food at the present time which the gentleman from New Hampshire speaks about. I certainly hope the production of poultry will not go back to where it was before this increase was asked for.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield to allow me to answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. MERROW. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I will say to the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS], you have not heard the gentleman from Wisconsin ever ask for anything for Wisconsin that he did not want the rest of the United States to have, in the time he has been here—cheese or any other commodity. However, milk production per capita of population has not increased to any great extent.

Mr. MERROW. I must say this, I am not asking anything for New England that I would not ask for any other section of the country.

There are great food shortages in other sections. In all fairness we should alleviate our own shortages out of what we produce at the earliest possible moment. This is why I am making this statement today.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERROW. I yield.

Mr. LANDIS. The poultry producers of Indiana were asked to decrease their production 25 percent over last year. They have done so. I suppose it is the same in New England. The poultry producers in Indiana and New England, of course, expect to get the food necessary to maintain the 75 or 80 percent of their flocks remaining, because they have already made the reduction.

Mr. MERROW. But in addition to the poultry situation in New England the people are not securing the meat, they are not able to buy butter. There are shortages all over this country. Whereas I am entirely in sympathy with doing all we possibly can to assist a world stricken by famine, nevertheless I am opposed to seeing shortages of food develop in this country to such an extent that perhaps some time in the near future our own people will be suffering. If stocks of food are piling up they should be used and used immediately.

The people throughout the country are disturbed and, shall I say, getting angry? They expect action and they are not getting action. I think we, as representatives of the people, ought to exercise leadership in this critical period. We ought to present the facts and make recommendations. If the recommendations are made and if they are not followed, at least we will have fulfilled our duty and will have done what is expected of us.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Hampshire has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an excerpt from a telegram.

FOREIGN INFORMATION SERVICE OF STATE DEPARTMENT

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 669, Rept. No. 2298), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4982) to enable the Department of State more effectively to carry out its responsibilities in the foreign field by means of (a) public dissemination abroad of information about the United States, its people and its policies, and (b) promotion of the interchange of persons, knowledge, and skills between the people of the United States and the peoples of other countries. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed three hours to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

COMMITTEE ON RULES—PERMISSION TO FILE REPORT

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight tonight to file a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

FOOD AND FEED CRISIS IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to make a few observations on the food situation for the benefit of those who are present. The facts are that there are bread lines, meat lines, butter lines, and other food lines forming throughout the whole United States. Napoleon said that an army travels on its stomach. That great soul-searching thinker Henry Wallace correctly said: "Food will win the war and write the peace."

This slogan is true and correct in every respect, but has the administration adequately provided for the production of food?

The administration paid no particular attention to the production of food but trusted to the patriotism of the farmers of America that they would do their job, as they did, and provide the necessary food for our armed forces and for our allies and to take care of the needs at home.

The war has been won. Now we come to the matter of writing the peace and we suddenly find that the slogan of our distinguished former Secretary of Agriculture and Vice President that food will win the war and write the peace is actually true. But what is the administration doing to help promote the program to produce the food that will win the peace or stop the world from being taken over by the Communists? Very little, because we find that the administration fails to recognize that it takes experienced manpower and adequate machinery and proper incentive for the farmers of the country to produce the food to feed the starving millions; yes, hundreds of millions, in other countries of the world and at the same time take care of our own domestic needs.

We find some of the leading farm machinery manufacturing companies in this country with their plants on strike and we also find, as I understood a few days ago, that an order is in the making by the administration to set aside and require the shipment of 7½ percent of all tractors made in the United States to Russia. That order has been kept a secret, but one of the big manufacturers told me that such an order is in the making by the Civilian Production Agency, requiring them to set aside 7½ percent of all the tractors produced in the United States for shipment to Russia.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. We all recognize that the gentleman now addressing the House is one of the greatest authorities on agricultural matters in the country. I would like to ask him whether in his studies of this question he has found any good reason why we should send tractors to Russia at this time?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I have yet to find one single reason for sending anything to Russia at the present time, because Russia has an iron curtain around its area and fails to cooperate in international affairs. If Russia sincerely desires to cooperate for world peace, we will go the limit to show our friendship.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS. May I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that these plants and industries manufacturing tractors and farm equipment have been on strike since last fall?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Yes. The main plants in this country have been on strike since last fall, and in those plants the employees are not striking for higher wages; they are striking for a closed shop and other things that have nothing to do with wages. Yet the administration is not doing anything about it.

Mr. PHILLIPS. And at a time when the production of food is vital?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Yes, and unless something is done to provide the farmers with farm machinery so that they can produce the essential foodstuffs we may have a famine in the United States within 9 months.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LANDIS. In our neighboring States, Virginia and Maryland, I understand there are wheat fields that have not been cut and hay fields that have not been cut. How are we going to get the labor to reap the crops that have been sown? Can the gentleman inform us?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I can give the gentleman one suggestion. We have approximately 3,000,000 people on the Federal pay roll. Let us declare a 30-day or 60-day holiday and send those 3,000,000 people out on the farms of America so that they can help produce the food to feed the people of the United States and the world. I would like to join them, although I do not know that I could take it very long and I do not think they could take this kind of hard work very long either, because most of them have no realization of the hard work and the toil and the long hours that go into the production of food. Most of them think that they can turn on a spigot and get milk.

I will tell you another thing that the administration can do. At the present time they are taking essential farm workers from the farms of America and inducting them into the military service during peacetime. The farmers are not able to secure replacement labor because of unemployment benefits paid which are larger than the farmers can pay under existing price levels. If the people want food, then the administration should adopt a policy to retain essential farm workers on the farms. Our farmers who have become worn out after 4 or 5 years from hard work are getting discouraged and disgusted and confused. That is what is happening over here in Maryland and in every other part of the United States. But let me discuss for a moment the general food picture which the other two gentlemen have covered so well. I think I have something that I can contribute to what they have already said.

The failure of administration officials to make plans immediately after last year's abundant harvest to cover food and feed requirements and commitments for domestic and foreign consumption, coupled with the devastating and uneconomic scarcity policy of Economic Stabilizer Chester Bowles, is now bringing the country face to face with the most serious food crisis in history. It was not until the middle of January that the Department of Agriculture recognized the impending shortage of food and grains. Drastic action was taken to curtail domestic consumption of wheat, corn, and feed grains, in order to fill commitments made by the President at Potsdam to provide food for several hundred million starving people in Europe, the Balkans, and the Far East.

The Department of Agriculture is responsible for food planning and production. Careful planning last fall, after our farmers had produced one of the largest crops in the Nation's history, could have avoided the serious food and feed situation which realistically confronts us today. I am convinced that the failure to make necessary plans last fall for proper utilization of grain supplies was due to the fact that the President and the State Department neglected to apprise the Secretary of Agriculture until after January 15, 1946, of the food commitments which had been made by them to take care of the needs of starving people in the world.

Prior to January 15, 1946, the British, French, Dutch, and every other country in the world, purchased millions of tons of wheat, flour, corn, and other food products with dollars borrowed from the United States Export-Import Bank. Since VJ-day the Export-Import Bank has made foreign loans in an amount of $3,467,500,000, a good portion of which was spent in the United States for the purchase of food. Records of the Bank disclose the following loans were made since VJ-day: France, $1,912,500,000; Great Britain, $650,000,000; Netherlands, $300,000,000; Russia, $280,000,000; Belgium, $100,000,000; Norway, $50,000,000; Finland, $50,000,000; Greece, $35,000,000; Italy, $25,000,000; and many others in varying amounts.

I know as a matter of fact that every flour mill in the country was besieged with orders for flour from the British and other countries, and cash was paid on the barrel head. All of the food acquired by foreign interests was purchased at the OPA ceiling price, and we have authentic information to the effect that the foreign buyers of our food sold it to their own people or in other countries at prices which realized tremendous profits for the sellers in dealing with hungry people, or with those who had money to buy.

I am satisfied that the American people are not generally aware of the fact that a large percentage of the food which is being sent out of this country is being resold at fancy black-market prices to people in other countries. I have often wondered if the hungry people who have no money actually secure any material amount of this food. We are a charitable people and stand ready to make great sacrifices to help our destitute neighbors, but we harden when we learn of some of the things that are taking place. For instance, Russia took all of the grain out of Poland after last year's harvest, and we are called upon to provide food for Poland. We do this gladly, but we wonder how much of our grains and food are left for the starving Poles. Britain takes credit for American food shipped to Greece, Italy, and other countries. Undoubtedly, the distribution of food to hungry people has now become a matter of international power politics.

During the past 12 months, approximately 400,000,000 bushels of American wheat and corn have been exported to fill foreign commitments. Failure in planning last fall to meet export requirements of grains brought about the initiation of many uneconomic and unsound policies by the Administration, which will seriously reduce the Nation's food supply for many months to come. Bread lines are already forming in most parts of the country. Flour mills are unable to buy wheat, because the Government purchased all available wheat—1945 crop—from farmers at a black-market price of 30 cents per bushel above the legal OPA ceiling price. The Government would not let our flour mills grind flour for export, and, consequently, thousands of mill and bakery employees have been thrown out of work. On the other hand, the Canadian mills are running full time in the production of flour for both domestic and foreign consumption. Canadian mills are producing their customary white flour, while mills in this country were forced to change from 72 percent extraction white flour to 80 percent dark flour, which type of flour does not keep as well in warm weather.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Would it not be a good idea to insert immediately following that statement—and I think the gentleman is doing a service to the whole country to put this in—just how much loss that meant in human-consumption food?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I will try to cover that, because I think I have that here. I can bring it in as to what it meant in loss of millfeed for livestock. When it comes to spoilage of flour, I am satisfied it will run into thousands of tons.

The Government also cornered the market on corn by making purchases of all available corn—35,000,000 bushels—at a black-market price of 30 cents a bushel above the legal ceiling price established by the OPA. The cornering of the wheat and corn supplies by the Government has brought the wildest black-market operations in all other feed grains. Legitimate feed manufacturers, dealers, and farmers are unable to secure feed grains for dairy and beef cattle, hogs, and poultry. We have lost about 700,000 tons of millfeed during the last 6 months because the Government required mills to produce 80-percent extraction flour, and much more was lost when the Government refused, until a few days ago, to sell or loan wheat to mills for grinding into flour.

When the administration ceased its black-market purchases of wheat and corn, the OPA increased the ceiling price on corn by 25 cents per bushel, and also materially increased the ceiling price on other feeds, without making any compensatory increase in the ceiling price of beef, hogs, poultry, and dairy products. Of course dairy products were increased just yesterday, as you know. This policy throws feeding ratios out of balance and under it farmers will lose money when forced to pay the higher prices for corn and other feeds.

At least 7,000,000 little pigs farrowed in the spring of 1946 on American farms will never reach maturity for human consumption because Economic Stabilizer Chester Bowles and the OPA failed to adjust hog prices in line with newly established grain and feed ceilings. This manipulation of feed prices on the part of the administration was a deliberately conceived plan to force large liquidation of hogs, cattle, and poultry in this country. Because of this unsound and destructive policy we approach the coming winter with greatly reduced supplies of pork, poultry, eggs, turkeys, and dairy products. Turkey, poultry, and egg production will be cut by more than 15 percent because producers cannot buy feed at any price. The production of dairy products will be reduced by more than 10 percent for 1946 as compared with 1945.

I trust that you will appreciate by this time what I meant when I referred to the scarcity policy of Chester Bowles and his policy-making associates. The Economic Stabilizer is determined to create a scarcity of vital food, so that he can remain in power to control the lives and business of every citizen. Forcing the liquidation of livestock and poultry mean nothing to him, but it does to consumers.

I wonder if the people have forgotten what took place in the early thirties, when Henry Wallace was Secretary of Agriculture. He conceived the policy which brought about the killing of 7,000,000 little pigs and nearly a million head of cattle. We are about to witness a repetition of such a policy, but instead of killing little pigs, administration policies provide for slow starvation or premature marketing of the pigs, which means less pork and lard. At the present moment, millions of chickens and turkeys are being killed on account of the man-made feed shortage. All of which is to the detriment of the American people and starving millions in other parts of the world, and could have been avoided by proper planning.

Congress is attempting to provide remedies in dealing with the problems I have discussed. Production and more production of grain and food products and the elimination of unsound bureaucratic control are the only solution. We must have the courage to do this job, in order to avoid permanent domination over our economy by the pennywise dictators who feel they have been endowed to direct the lives and pursuits of every citizen.

If present unsound restrictions and discriminations in price policies are continued, shortages in pork, lard, poultry, eggs, turkeys, and dairy products will have their telling effect upon the American diet within the next 9 months. Wheat for flour and bread will also become critical unless a large spring wheat crop is produced, and no one can predict, at this date, what the wheat or corn harvest will be. To correct the discrimination which now threatens livestock and poultry production, I desire to make the following suggestions:

First. An immediate adjustment in the price of hog, cattle, and poultry products to compensate for the increase in the price of corn and other feeds. This must be done to encourage production.

Second. The cancellation of the 80-percent extraction order to save wheat and flour and provide at least 1,400,000 tons of millfeed in the next 12 months for domestic use. This is the plan under which Canada operates.

Third. Permit flour mills in the United States to operate full time, as they do in Canada, in the production of flour for domestic and foreign consumption, thereby providing work for Americans employed in our flour mills.

Fourth. Stop Government black-market operations in grain or any other commodity. Administration officials should not be permitted to corner the supplies of grain or any other commodity, for which acts private individuals are sent to the penitentiary.

Fifth. Encourage full production of grains, food, and civilian goods, including farm machinery, under which method price controls can and should be removed. This is the only known system whereby inflation can be prevented.

Sixth. Last, but not least, the future solvency of our country demands cutting Government spending to the bone; the reduction of Government personnel to peacetime requirements, which includes the elimination of the bureaucracy that now seeks to restrict or destroy American freedom. We must keep our country strong in its economy, if we are to take the leading role in the council of nations.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. LANDIS. With regard to the wheat situation, last December the Department here asked the farmers to be patriotic and sell their wheat at that time. Those who sold their wheat last December lost about 48 cents a bushel as compared with those who sold their wheat in May. How much faith would those farmers who sold their wheat last December have in the Department down here?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am inclined to think that our farmers have lost considerable of their faith in the present administration. I believe you will find when this year's crop is harvested that a good percentage of the farmers will retain their wheat in their granaries rather than have it seized by the Government.

Mr. LANDIS. In other words, if they do not take the ceiling off feed, then there should be something done to guarantee to the farmers that they will get the same price later on as they can get now, that is, that they can get the same price all the way through.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. They did that last year and up to April 3 they asked the farmers to surrender their wheat and sell it at prevailing prices and told them that there would not be any increase in price. Many patriotic farmers did that. Thereafter, the administration came out and paid the black-market price of 30 cents a bushel plus an additional 15 cents a bushel, which made some farmers who kept their wheat get 40 cents more than other farmers who had sold their wheat.

Mr. LANDIS. But in order to see that they get the same payments in July, they must have some kind of guaranty that they will get the same price that anybody else is going to get in the future.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. VURSELL. I compliment the gentleman for doing a great service in giving this talk on the floor of the House so that it will go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and perhaps filter out through the press to the people of the country so that they may know that there are really able men in Congress such as the gentleman from Minnesota who is telling them the truth in the hope that by having the truth through the Congress perhaps better conditions may be brought about for the agriculture of the Nation.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I thank the gentleman for his statement. But I do not want to leave the impression here today that I am not willing to make every possible sacrifice to help feed the hungry people of the world. I think it is our Christian duty to do this. But I insist that when we are called upon and want to do it we should initiate a policy in this country which would encourage all types of vital production and help the farmer of the United States to secure that production in every possible manner. Then we will be in a position to go ahead and make the proper plans and do our part.

I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman think the rye operations have added to the wheat confusion? Rye, which is not worth as much for man or beast as wheat, has had an open market all during these years and has sold for as high as $2.60 a bushel while the farmer was asked to sell his wheat, with its superior food value, for $1.50 or $1.60 a bushel. This has been allowed to happen. All these bucket-shop operations have been carried on in connection with rye. This was brought out a year ago on the floor of the House by our colleague from Wisconsin, Hon. FRANK KEEFE. The rye speculations, however, were allowed to go on month after month and that has just added to the confusion of the whole wheat picture. Is that not correct?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. May I point out to the gentleman in connection with the refusal of the administration to do anything about the May rye situation. They had to have something for their friends to speculate in. So they did not put any ceiling on rye. I know of several prominent men who purchased rye at 85 cents a bushel. They purchased millions of bushels of rye and sold it at nearly $3 a bushel, speculating with the welfare of the American people, under a policy initiated by the administration itself making such manipulation possible.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Is that not what has caused considerable confusion in connection with this whole program?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is true. It also forced a great demand for other grains. But let me point out one further item: When the Government cornered the market on corn and wheat it also brought immediate pressure on all other grains—a demand for other grains. For instance, some of the big companies engaged in producing oatmeal and other breakfast foods could not buy a bushel of grain unless they went to the black market to buy it. So these plants are closed down today, just as the flour mills are closed down today. They are getting a little flour now under this so-called lend-lease arrangement which must be paid back.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I think equally serious is the matter already spoken about this afternoon which I would like to have the gentleman comment on, that is, the throwing of corn and rye and oats out of balance, threw hundreds of millions of bushels of wheat into the feeding of cattle, which otherwise would have gone into food for people.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Nobody can say how much wheat was purchased before they started with this program, or how much flour. But I know that possibly $2,000,000,000 worth was purchased. Certain individuals living in different countries in the world, like Great Britain, France, Belgium, Holland, Mexico, and other countries were loaned that much money by the Export-Import Bank, and they bought wheat and flour and other foods in the open market.

Today we are shipping wheat and other foods to South American countries. That is outside the relief program. The relief program contemplates shipping out 400,000,000 bushels of wheat and corn in the 12 months up to July 1 of this year. I would like to see the accurate figures, to find out exactly how much feed and wheat and other grains were shipped out of the United States, rather than blaming all of the disappearance of wheat on the livestock and poultry industry of this country, because I do not think they did consume it all.

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri. Can the gentleman give us an over-all formula for a way out of this mess we are in? Is it to get rid of this controlled economy? Is it to have less direction from Washington?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I made several suggestions in my remarks earlier, but production and more production is necessary. However, we are past the planting stage. While some of the men down in the Department who make these policies think they can control the laws of nature, we recognize that we must follow the laws of nature when it comes to production, not only of grain but also of livestock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CARNAHAN). The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to express my interest in the very important bill to the many needy aged citizens of the country, a bill that has passed the Senate and will be messaged to the House from the Senate tomorrow. I refer to H. R. 5626, as amended by that body, known as the McFarland amendment. The original bill passed this House as I recall by unanimous vote, and I am sure that if Members of this House are given the opportunity to vote there will be no real opposition to the amendment in question. The McFarland amendment merely provides an increase of $5 per month in Federal old-age assistance, without regard to any matching on the part of the States.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Is that the bill that was reported by the Ways and Means Committee increasing the amount $5?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No; I refer to an amendment that has been added to a bill by the United States Senate. Some of us are getting tired waiting for the Ways and Means Committee to liberalize or, rather, recommend the liberalizing of the Social Security Act. I speak of the Senate added amendment, offered by the junior Senator from Arizona. As I stated a moment ago, it proposes to increase by $5 per month the benefit payments made to the aged people of the Nation as the Federal Government's share in assistance to each State. It proposes increased payments for dependent children $3 per month for each such child. This bill would increase payments to the blind $5 per month each, also without matching. It contains the proviso that only those States that continue to pay as much old-age assistance as they did during the month of May of this year shall benefit by the extra $5 increase. In other words, a State could not lower its payment by $5 or any amount and at the same time get the benefit of the Federal increased payment. The extra $5 per month to each aged person is, of course, not much; it is only a mere pittance, but it is something, and even such a small increase would be gratefully received. Furthermore, it is desperately needed. It has given many an aged person renewed hope since the publication of the story that this amended bill passed the Senate by a unanimous vote. These millions of aged people cannot come here, but they are looking to the Congress to do something about it and I sincerely hope that there will be no opposition and that this bill as amended will become law and not be permitted to die in a conference committee.

Mr. SAVAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SAVAGE. Certainly the gentleman is correct when he says it is not very much; but I would like to state also that it would mean a lot to people who are trying to live on anywhere from $10 to $50 a month. $5 would mean a lot to them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes, I agree wholeheartedly with the gentleman. Let me add that this little bill, if passed, will bring cheer to a lot of worthy and deserving citizens and has real merit. In fact, it is much more meritorious than the so-called Congressional streamlining bill which in its present form is a misnomer. It is worse than that, it is a monstrosity sailing under false colors. It is scheduled to be brought in here within a few days for House approval. It is going to be a real streamliner. It will streamline the pockets of Congressmen and Senators to the tune of 50 percent of our salaries while at the same time most of the Government workers got an increase of 14 percent, and give us an additional $8,000 assistant Congressman. That is not all. It will be a camouflage pension-for-Congressmen bill, despite the fact that this House recently defeated such a bill by an overwhelming vote.

This bill for the aged, though as I said, a mere pittance, is one that this Congress should pass without a dissenting vote.

It will be of some help to all the aged of the nation, whereas the so-called highly advertised congressional streamline bill as it passed the Senate turns out to be a measure primarily for the purpose of merely streamlining the pockets of Members of Congress.

Mr. SAVAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; I yield again.

Mr. SAVAGE. I think also that the States will very likely themselves add $5 which will probably mean that $10 will go to the aged instead of $5. Is not that right?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Some States no doubt would do so. I would wish for it to turn out that way. But even that is a very small amount considering the increased cost of living.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

Bills and joint resolutions of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 763. An act to provide for the leasing of allotted lands on the Crow Indian Reservation; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 2264. An act to amend the act providing for the appointment of court reporters; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2291. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to transfer a vessel to the American Antarctic Association, Inc.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 2292. An act for the relief of the Miami Herald, the Key West Citizen, and the Miami Daily News; to the Committee on Claims.

S. J. Res. 154. Joint resolution to establish the Andrew Johnson Memorial Commission to formulate plans for the preservation of the birthplace, at Raleigh, N. C., of Andrew Johnson, seventeenth President of the United States; to the Committee on the Library.

S. J. Res. 160. Joint resolution to amend the act of March 22, 1946, for the purpose of correcting the description of the small parcel of land authorized to be conveyed to the State of Wyoming by such act; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

Mr. ROGERS of New York, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 233. An act for the relief of Hamsah Omar;

H. R. 797. An act for the relief of William W. Willett, Jr.;

H. R. 1095. An act for the relief of the Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation in North Dakota;

H. R. 1258. An act for the relief of Cecil Atkinson;

H. R. 1460. An act for the relief of D. C. Todd;

H. R. 1689. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to purchase improvements or pay damages for removal of improvements located on public lands of the United States in the Anderson Ranch Reservoir site, Boise reclamation project, Idaho;

H. R. 2677. An act to authorize the Federal Works Administrator to accept and dispose of real estate devised to the United States by the late Maggie Johnson, of Polk Country, Ark., and for other purposes;

H. R. 2678. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in any and all claims which the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes of Indians on the Flathead Reservation in Montana, or any tribe or band thereof, may have against the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 2772. An act for the relief of Juan Calcaño;

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 19, 1946

(Legislative day of Tuesday, March 5, 1946)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, who committest to us the solemn trust of life, so swiftly pass the hours of our sojourn in this narrow space of time that our day mounts to noon and the signs of evening tinting the western sky warn that the night cometh ere our work is planned. Forgive us for squandering on trivial concerns the fabulous riches of golden hours. Because so much of our span is gone and so little left, may we redeem the residue by intensity of living, realizing in this new day's toil the presence of eternity. May the sun of Thy glory break through clouds that hide our earth-filled eyes from Thee. So "at noonday, in the bustle of man's work time," we would "greet the unseen with a cheer." In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, June 18, 1946, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 5112) to authorize the city of Anchorage, Alaska, to issue bonds in a sum not to exceed $5,000,000 for the purpose of constructing, reconstructing, improving, extending, bettering, repairing, equipping, or acquiring public works of a permanent character, and to provide for the payment thereof, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 1460. An act to fix the salary of the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior; and

S. 1523. An act to modify the time limitations governing the award of certain military and naval decorations for acts performed during the present war.

Mr. President, I wish to give notice that beginning Monday, June 24, 1946, at 10:30 a. m., hearings will be conducted by the full Committee on Commerce in the committee room of the Committee on Commerce, northwest corner of the Capitol Building, with respect to H. R. 6597, being a bill authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, the omnibus flood-control bill of 1946. The hearings will continue probably 2 days. In addition to the projects contained in the House bill, the following new projects are specifically scheduled for hearings in the order named:

First. Yadkin-Pee Dee, N. C.
Second. Cardens Bottom, Ark.
Third. Polecat Creek, Okla.
Fourth. Boise River, Idaho.
Fifth. Queen Creek, Ariz.
Sixth. Tucson, Ariz.

Where there is no opposition to any project contained in the House bill, no testimony will be received by the Senate Committee on Commerce. The members of the press are requested to give notice of these hearings.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, it will be necessary for me to be absent from the Senate until next Monday, and I ask unanimous consent that I may be excused.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Oregon is excused.

REPORT ON OPERATIONS OF UNRRA—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

(For President's message, see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives on p. 7163.)

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION OF ALIENS

A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report reciting the facts and pertinent provisions of law in the cases of 116 individuals whose deportation has been suspended for more than 6 months by the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization Service under the authority vested in the Attorney General, together with a statement of the reasons for such suspension (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Immigration.

EDGAR F. RUSSELL ET AL.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation for the relief of Edgar F. Russell, Lillian V. Russell, his wife, and Bessie R. Ward (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

ESTABLISHMENT OF VETERANS' CANTEEN SERVICE IN VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

A letter from the Administrator of the Veterans' Administration, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to establish and provide for the maintenance and operation of a veterans' canteen service in the Veterans' Administration, and for other purposes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Finance.

DEVELOPMENT OF PARK AND PLAYGROUND SYSTEM OF THE NATIONAL CAPITAL

A letter from the Chairman of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act approved June 6, 1924, entitled "An act providing for a comprehensive development of the park and playground system of the National Capital," as amended (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of papers and documents on the files of several departments and agencies of the Government which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition (with accompanying papers); to the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS

Petitions were laid before the Senate and referred as indicated:

By the PRESIDENT pro tempore:

The petition of Sirdar J. J. Singh, president, India League of America, of New York, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the naturalization and admission into the United States under a quota of Eastern Hemisphere Indians of India; to the Committee on Immigration.

A resolution adopted at the annual convention of the Great Lakes Harbors Association, Chicago, Ill., favoring the St. Lawrence seaway and power project; ordered to lie on the table.

CONDEMNATION OF SLAVERY IMPOSED BY CERTAIN ALLIED NATIONS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, the Illinois House of Representatives has adopted a resolution condemning the slavery imposed by some of the Allied nations of World War II. The resolution was sponsored by Representative Nick Keller, of Waukegan, Ill. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We have come to the end of another World War which was waged for the avowed purpose of liberating people from oppressive governments.

The Illinois House of Representatives, where Lincoln sat as a member for 8 years, has always espoused the cause of freedom and asserted that slavery must not exist. Some nations have enslaved prisoners of war and others retain their own laboring populations in serfdom for the purpose of selfish economic national gain and aggrandizement.

We hereby unequivocally declare that we are unalterably opposed to the enslavement of any people, in any form, by any nation. Forced labor by prisoners of war or any other person after hostilities have ended is a contemptible form of slavery and is to be abhorred by all free and democratic nations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

S. 2014. A bill to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to extend and renew to Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co. for the term of 10 years a lease to Henry A. Scandrett, Walter J. Cummings, and George I. Haight, trustees of Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co., of a tract of land in the United States Department of Agriculture range livestock experiment station, in the State of Montana, and for a right-of-way to said tract, for the removal of gravel and ballast material, executed under the authority of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1936; with an amendment (Rept. No. 1518).

By Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

H. R. 5640. A bill to reestablish the status of funds of the midshipmen's store, barber shop, cobbler shop, and tailor shop at the United States Naval Academy, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1519).

By Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

H. R. 6627. A bill for the acquisition of buildings and grounds in foreign countries for the use of the Government of the United States of America; without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

Mr. HAYDEN (for Mr. TYDINGS) introduced Senate bill (S. 2348) to authorize the continuance of the acceptance by the Treasury of deposits of public moneys from the Philippine Islands, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, and appears under a separate heading.

By Mr. WALSH:

S. 2349. A bill to permit the Secretary of the Navy to delegate the authority to compromise and settle claims for damages to property under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WAGNER (for Mr. MEAD):

S. 2350. A bill for the relief of George Haagen; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KNOWLAND:

S. 2351. A bill for the relief of Marian Antoinette McCloud; to the Committee on Immigration.

CONTINUATION OF ACCEPTANCE BY TREASURY DEPARTMENT OF DEPOSITS OF PUBLIC MONEYS FROM THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill to authorize the continuance of the acceptance by the Treasury of deposits of public moneys from the Philippine Islands, and request that a letter addressed to the President of the Senate by the Acting Secretary of the Treasury recommending the proposed legislation be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2348) to authorize the continuance of the acceptance by the Treasury of deposits of public moneys from the Philippine Islands was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

The letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 14, 1946.

The Honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: There is transmitted herewith a draft of a proposed bill to authorize the continuance of the acceptance by the Treasury of deposits of public moneys from the Philippine Islands.

The purpose of the proposed legislation is to remove possible doubt as to the authority of the Treasury Department to make available to the independent government of the Philippines the same depositary services which have been extended to the Commonwealth Government under existing legislation. The continuance of such depositary services is desired by the Philippine government.

In accordance with the act of June 11, 1934, 48 Stat. 929 (U. S. C., title 48, sec. 1157), and at the request of the government of the Philippines, the Secretary of the Treasury has accepted both time and demand deposits for the Treasurer of the Philippines. A deposit of $55,000,000 has been maintained in a time account bearing interest at 2 percent per annum since October 31, 1934, and another time deposit of $100,000,000 bearing interest at 1 percent was established on March 8, 1946. The balance in the demand account of the Treasurer of the Philippines was $273,532,733 as of April 30, 1946. These accounts represent funds comprising the Philippine currency reserves, sinking fund balances, and other funds of the Philippine government which are not used in day-to-day operations. Funds for ordinary operating expenditures of the Philippine government are maintained in accounts with commercial banks.

In view of the nature of the relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands, and the request of the Philippine government that they be permitted to maintain their time and demand deposits with the Treasury Department after Philippine independence is granted, it is respectfully requested that you lay the proposed bill before the Senate. A similar bill has been transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The Department has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there is no objection to the submission of this proposed legislation to the Congress.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH J. O'CONNELL, Jr.
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 5112) to authorize the city of Anchorage, Alaska, to issue bonds in a sum not to exceed $5,000,000 for the purpose of constructing, reconstructing, improving, extending, bettering, repairing, equipping, or acquiring public works of a permanent character, and to provide for the payment thereof, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

EUGENE MEYER

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have heard a great many favorable comments about the appointment by the President of Mr. Eugene Meyer, former editor and publisher of the Washington Post, to the important position of president of the Bank of International Reconstruction and Development. It seems to be the opinion of everyone that the President made an exceptionally fine selection. Many of the leading editors of both political parties throughout the country have printed able editorials expressing their approval of Mr. Meyer's selection. In this connection I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the editorial, written by the new management of the Washington Post, commenting in a very fine way about the former editor and publisher of the Post.

I also ask that an excellent editorial published by the Detroit News, which is typical of others published by daily newspapers in all sections of the country, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MR. MEYER'S TASK

With the announcement today Mr. Eugene Meyer leaves his duties with the Post and takes on new duties as president of the Bank of International Reconstruction and Development. The appointment, as will be seen from excerpts in another column, has been applauded by the American press. This testimony to the choice of the executive directors of the World Bank gives singular pleasure to Mr. Meyer's old associates on this newspaper. They know from daily experience with Mr. Meyer the organizational gifts which he will bring to the new institution.

Mr. Meyer is used to the task of building organizations from the ground up. When he took over the Post property, the newspaper had fallen on evil days, and it was in a moribund condition. All his old friends—even those who knew of what he had done with his private business and then with the successive departments of American Government which he had established—told him that this time he had undertaken a hopeless proposition. It was, they said, a pig in a poke. But, as the healthy condition of this newspaper testifies, Mr. Meyer builded better than perhaps he knew, and he hands over the direction of the Post to men who fully appreciate how well and truly he laid its foundations.

These comments are pertinent to the new assignment that Mr. Meyer is shouldering at the World Bank. No doubt exists in our minds that the organization he will create will be as sound as could be devised. Mr. Meyer is used to meeting organizational challenges, and, indeed, thrives on them, and he will give to the infant body the vitality that will insure sound and vigorous growth. But he will bring to his responsibility something more than his talent for organization. He will be the example to those who work with him of vision and faith. Mr. Meyer has what the poet calls "the rapture of the forward view." In time of war he foresaw, before most of his contemporaries, the need to prepare for peace. That is why he always counseled gradualness in the relaxation of controls till the American economy had been thoroughly reconverted. That is why he advocated the stock piling of food—he felt that liberation might prove a mockery if food did not come on the very heels of the liberators. Alas, there was so little preparedness for peace that the liberated countries had to go through ordeal by famine on top of their ordeal by fire.

Yet Mr. Meyer, foreseeing this, whipped up a national interest in the coming emergency, being the sponsor of the Famine Emergency Committee, which spotlighted the approaching crisis and brought home to the American people and the administration the crucial need for remedial steps. It was characteristic of him that, when this organization had taken shape, his questing and farseeing mind was concerning itself with another famine on the horizon—the famine in productive facilities. As he used to say, only the restoration of productive facilities could solve the problem of one food famine after another; in other words, of a permanent state of mendicancy in much of the world.

This was long before he had the vaguest notion that he would be one of the instrumentalities for curing this famine of productive facilities. That is the job of the new World Bank. The bank is not an eleemosynary institution for the purpose of giving money away to needy borrowers; financial aid of this kind is provided through relief agencies such as UNRRA. The new World Bank, armed as it is with the financial resources of the world of nations, will make productive loans in capital-poor countries so as to put them on their own feet and at the same time reestablish the link between capital goods producers and capital goods users. It is this link, and this link only, that can promote general prosperity. Public policy, it is said, must cater to being and well-being. This latter achievement is the aim of the World Bank, with a sphere of operations that is indeed world-wide. Mr. Meyer is thus the world's first world banker in the true meaning of this phrase. Hitherto international bankers have been nationals with foreign connections, but Mr. Meyer's loyalty is now supranational.

While Mr. Meyer will have to be more statesman than banker, it is a good omen that his appointment is favorably spoken of in both investment and banking circles the world over. In these circles Mr. Meyer is respected for a judgment and a prudence which, before he took up official life, earned him a rich success in the field of investment banking at home and abroad. This reputation will inspire confidence in the new institution on the part of the investors who will invest in the bonds that will be floated under the auspices of the World Bank when it sets up in business.

The Detroit News says:

Perhaps no other layman in the Capital has played the lead hand more frequently and with so little ostentation in the rescuing of causes which were for the national betterment.

His most recent personal project has been the rallying of national forces for the food relief of Europe. He saw months ago that while there was much talk, little was being done. He called for a definite program and he continued to ring doorbells until the program began to move.

This is the man who has been named first president of the World Bank. At 70, Meyer has the vigor and imagination of a man half his years. His new post should provide his greatest opportunity for service to society. The honor done him is richly deserved.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MITCHELL], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] are detained on public business.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is absent on official business, attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent on official business, attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK], and the Senator from South

Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

RECEPTION TO MEMBERS OF THE EMPIRE PARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senate will recall that several months ago an official invitation was received by the two Houses of Congress to send delegations to the Empire Parliamentary Conference which was to be held in Bermuda. By appropriate resolutions the Senate and House accepted the invitation, and sent delegations from the two Houses, which attended the conference in Bermuda all of last week.

The representatives from the Senate were the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY].

The delegation from the House of Representatives consisted of Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON, Mr. JAMES P. RICHARDS, Mr. ROBERT A. GRANT, and Mr. D. EMMERT BRUMBAUGH.

The members of the conference from the British Empire are on their way home from the conference, and they have come by way of Washington. They include the delegations from the British House of Commons, from the Canadian Parliament, and from the Parliament of New Zealand.

Among these gentlemen who attended the conference, and have honored us with their presence this morning, is Mr. Anthony Eden, with whom we are all very pleasantly acquainted, and of whose many visits to Washington we have very happy memories.

In order that the Members of the Senate may meet these gentlemen in person, and assure them of our appreciation of the courtesy they have shown us by calling upon us on their way to their respective homes, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess for a few minutes, and that the members of the three Parliaments be kind enough to come to the front of the Senate so that Members of the Senate may greet them in person.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess.

During the recess, the visiting members of the Empire Parliamentary Conference took positions in the well of the Senate in front of the desk and were greeted by the Members of the Senate who were presented by Senator BARKLEY and Mr. Anthony Eden.

The following is the list of the delegates to the Empire Parliamentary Conference:

United Kingdom Delegates: The Right Honorable R. Anthony Eden, Member of Parliament; the Honorable A. J. P. Howard, Member of Parliament; Lt. Col. E. M. King, Member of Parliament; Mr. Alfred Robens, Member of Parliament; Mr. J. J. Robertson, Member of Parliament; Wing-Commander J. R. Robinson, Member of Parliament; Mr. Tom Smith, Member of Parliament; Prof. Eastman Sheehan, Sir Howard d'Egville.

Canadian Delegates: Mr. Gordon Isnor, Member of Parliament, chairman; Mr. Elie O. Bertrand, Member of Parliament; Mr. G. H. Castleden, Member of Parliament; Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker, Member of Parliament; Senator C. B. Howard, Mr. Mark Senn, Member of Parliament.

New Zealand Delegate: Mr. K. J. Holyoake, Member of Parliament.

American Delegates: Senators THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN, J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT, HOMER FERGUSON, ALEXANDER WILEY; Representatives LUTHER A. JOHNSON, JAMES P. RICHARDS, ROBERT A. GRANT, D. EMMERT BRUMBAUGH.

At 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., the Senate reassembled, when called to order by the President pro tempore.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4512) to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide research relating to psychiatric disorders and to aid in the development of more effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of such disorders, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. PRIEST, Mr. BULWINKLE, Mr. CHAPMAN, Mr. BROWN of Ohio, and Mr. WINTER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5356) to provide assistance to the Republic of China in augmenting and maintaining a naval establishment, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DREWRY, Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON, and Mr. W. STERLING COLE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6429) making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. CURLEY, Mr. KOPPLEMANN, Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana, Mr. TIBBOTT, and Mr. HORAN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 6335) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I wish to invite the attention of the Senate to the most serious legislative log jam that has occurred in my experience. There is now pending before the Senate the Interior Department appropriation bill. Next in order is the Navy Department bill, to be followed by the appropriation bill for the State, Justice, and Commerce Departments, and the Treasury and Post Office bill. Those four bills are on the calendar. There are in the Committee on Appropriations a bill to provide funds for the Coast Guard, a bill for the Labor Department and the Federal Security Agency, and a bill for Government corporations. In the House there yet remain to be passed the War Department appropriation bill, a very important third deficiency bill, and a rescission bill.

That is a total of 11 appropriation bills, and we have 11 days between now and the 30th of June in which to pass them if they are to be enacted in time to take effect on the first day of July.

With respect to the pending bill, I ask Senators who may feel inclined to make lengthy speeches to please let us get this bill out of the way, because it is very important. We are about half way through. I am sure that the chairmen of other subcommittees will make similar requests. We simply must dispose of this public business at the earliest possible time. Not only is it true that all these bills must pass the Senate, but each of them must then go to conference for adjustment with the House of Representatives, and the conference reports must be agreed to before the bills become law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair endorses everything the distinguished Senator from Arizona has said. The law requires that these bills be passed before July 1. Otherwise the money will not be appropriated for the various agencies and departments, and great confusion and trouble may arise. The Chair sincerely hopes that the appropriation bills, concerning which there is a limit of time, will be passed, and that the Senate will not debate other bills or subjects until the appropriation bills are disposed of. Under the peculiar situation which exists concerning the appropriation bills, the Chair hopes that they will get through on time. It is almost a superhuman task to get through by July 1.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. I merely wish to say that what the Senator from Arizona and the distinguished President of the Senate have stated is absolutely true. But there is a deep fault somewhere. These appropriation bills involve many billion dollars. We have been in session since the first of the year, during which time these bills could have been considered.

They are postponed until the last two weeks before July 1, when we are called upon to rush them through without proper study. There is a fault somewhere. I hope that the congressional reorganization bill sponsored by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and others may help, once it is enacted, to remedy such situations. There is no reason why these bills should not come to the Senate long before they do; and there is no reason why the Senate should not have time carefully to consider appropriation bills involving billions of dollars.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The statement of the Senator from Arizona and the statement of the Chair, as well as the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire, accurately describe the situation, which is complicated by further time limitations. The bill for the extension of price control is now in conference, and it must be disposed of before the 30th of June. The draft bill is in conference. The time limit on that bill is June 30.

That situation leads me to suggest to Senators that they forego requests to sandwich other bills in-between the appropriation bills and the other measures which must be passed before the 30th of the month. Many Senators are interested in individual bills, and they are constantly requesting that the Senate consider this bill or that bill. It is imperative that the appropriation bills and other bills which have a time limit be disposed of before we undertake to consider legislation which can wait. In all probability there will be ample time to give consideration to bills which are not affected by dead lines. I hope the Senate will be willing to concentrate, and if necessary meet for longer hours, until the appropriation bills and other bills which have a time limit are out of the way. Then we can see what further legislation it is necessary to consider.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I wish to make a very brief statement about the pending measure. As it came from the committee the appropriations recommended were $21,000,000 under the Budget Bureau estimates. The House, of course, reduced the appropriations it contains to a very much greater degree, but I wish to have the Senate understand that the bill as reported is still under the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget.

In going through the bill we did not accept Budget estimates to the extent of $36,000,000, but in connection with other items we went above the Budget estimates to the extent of $15,000,000. I should like to explain to the Senate very briefly how that situation came about.

We knew that we would have some slack in the bill because there were certain Budget estimates which had been disallowed by the House, and with which the Senate also was not in accord. One was for $2,000,000, for transmission lines in connection with the Colorado-Big Thompson project. The Senators from Colorado informed us that they were very much more interested in building power plants, and that the transmission lines could wait.

In connection with the project outlined on the charts on the wall, the Southwest Power Authority, there was a Budget Bureau estimate of $23,000,000. We had extensive hearings before the subcommittee, and I am quite sure that it is the unanimous opinion of the committee that at the present time there is no adequate authority of law for building steam plants to firm up the power at Government dams. That being the case, we decided that we would not put any money in the bill for the steam plants.

As the bill came from the House, there was in it an item of $7,500,000 for a transmission line to connect a dam in Arkansas with a rural electrification line running into Oklahoma and down to Denison, Tex. That was an amendment offered by the Speaker of the House, and it amounted to $7,500,000. The majority of the committee has recommended striking out that item. We shall have a controversy over whether or not the Senate should follow the advice of the Speaker of the House or the advice of the majority of its committee with respect to this transmission line. The fact that we left out $15,500,000 gave us some slack on which to operate. With part of the slack, we said to the Reclamation Service, "Indicate to us the projects which can be finished and which we can get out of the way, so that homes may be provided for veterans." We found that there were a number of such projects which had been under construction for a long series of years and could be completed within the next year or two. So we not only restored the amount of the Budget Bureau's estimates but in some instances we went above their estimates and recommended the appropriation of sufficient funds to finish the job and get it out of the way. We thought it was good, sound business to do so, and we can still do so and leave the total under the figures of the Bureau of the Budget.

The transmission line between Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas will have to be voted upon by the Senate. It will not take us very long to determine what we shall do about that.

There is also an item involving a transmission line in California. The way the bill was reported from the committee, power will be transmitted about 25 miles from the Shasta Dam, and there it will stop, and then there will be one purchaser of the power who will transmit it from there on. Whether it shall be continued down to the Central Valley, the Senate will have to determine.

There is also some question about an item with reference to mine inspection.

Beyond those, yesterday the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] stated there were several items about which he wished to raise questions. One relates to the Geological Survey. I can state the situation about that.

An item was included for the making of topographic maps. Whenever any kind of development work is proposed in the United States, whether it be a road or a construction project, there is a demand for a map. We have learned to make maps better than ever and in less time for less money, because the Geological Survey, which was the principal map-making agency of the Government before the war, went into the service of the Army and the Navy during the war and made maps all over the world. The equipment is now available. The item in the bill provides for the transfer of the cameras and other equipment, so that the work may continue. It is essential that it be done. A map such as the Geological Survey makes is a good map, and it is good for all time. There may be changes in the cultural features, but generally speaking the map is good for all time. That is why the committee advocates the full amount of the Budget Bureau's estimate for that purpose.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wish to add to what the Senator from Arizona has stated that about 2 years ago, when the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation was considering the suggestions which afterward became the so-called O'Mahoney-Millikin amendment to the river and harbor and flood-control bill to provide for the water rights in arid-land States and the cooperation of the Federal Government and the State governments in the development and utilization of water resources, testimony given before our committee showed that even then, while we were in the middle of the war, thousands of letters were being received by the Bureau of Reclamation from servicemen all over the world seeking opportunities to settle upon the public domain. The servicemen wanted homes. They wanted an opportunity to establish farms. They wanted to engage in agriculture. Members of Congress from the public-land States likewise were receiving similar communications. So one of our main purposes was to adapt the law in such manner that water could be placed upon the land, so as to afford opportunities for settlement.

The unfortunate fact is that agricultural land in the public domain which is capable of being used for homesteading and is capable of being used for the raising of ordinary crops without irrigation has long since been exhausted, and there is now no opportunity anywhere upon the public domain to provide homes for veterans, except upon the reclamation projects. So the law was passed, with the cooperation of the able senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], who was acting as chairman of the Commerce Committee at the time. Then the vast program of the Missouri Basin was authorized, with opportunities for settlement in the public-land States.

A year or more ago I personally requested the Department of the Interior to submit to the committee a full statement regarding all possible projects which could be utilized for settlement by soldiers, and at that time a report was submitted. But because we were in the middle of the war, the Bureau of the Budget was unwilling to authorize the expenditures at that time.

Last year, when the deficiency bill for 1946 was under consideration, appropriations were made to begin some of these projects. This year, as the Senator from Arizona has so well stated, the committee, following the pattern of its action in previous years, requested the Bureau of Reclamation to give us a statement with respect to those projects which could be easily completed and made ready for settlement at the earliest possible date. That evidence was submitted. The committee has acted upon it, and the program is a highly desirable one, in my opinion, as well as in the opinion of the committee.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Arizona yield to me for a moment, while I make a request.

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. My colleague, the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], is necessarily absent from the floor at the moment. As chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, he has prepared a statement with reference to a National Parks Service item in the bill. I ask unanimous consent that his statement be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY HON. CARL A. HATCH, SENATOR FROM NEW MEXICO AND CHAIRMAN, SENATE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS

When this bill was under consideration in the House of Representatives, there was considerable discussion over the operations of the Yosemite Park & Curry Co. which leases certain tracts of land in the Yosemite National Park and operates thereon facilities for the public including a large hotel, lodges, camps, transportation facilities of various kinds, stores and shops carrying tourist supplies.

There was criticism of the company on the ground that it had not paid enough for its privileges. The discussion fell short of explaining all of the conditions under which the company operates, nor was there sufficient review of the background or history of the contract under which it operates.

Laws governing the National Park Service are given first consideration by the Committee on Public Lands. Having the honor of being the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, it is my pleasure to preside over meetings at which current national park legislation is studied and approved or modified.

This committee, as far back as 1883, considered legislation authorizing the operation of tourist facilities in national parks by private enterprise. The early laws affected Yellowstone National Park. Under them, the Northern Pacific Railroad built the first hotels in the Yellowstone and these were subsequently sold to another operating company. As other national parks were created, authority was granted for the operation of tourist facilities by private enterprise.

Finally, in 1916, the National Park Service Act created a bureau of national parks and gave to it and the Secretary of the Interior broad authority to lease lands and grant facilities for operating of such facilities by private concerns. At no time in the history of the national parks has there been any stampede of business interests to obtain franchises to operate the really essential facilities in these national parks; that is, to provide room service and meal service to fit pocketbooks of all the people who visited these great playgrounds. There has been strong willingness on the part of many people to take over what has been called the "cream" of the business; that is, supplying post cards, bread and milk and, later on, gasoline and other supplies for motorists.

The Department of the Interior early realized that in order to provide hotels and camps and transportation service, it was necessary that these other items—the so-called "cream"—should go into the large contracts in order to sustain the more expensive operations. However, in very few national parks has there been a case where one company has provided all services.

The hazards of operating a national park have always been recognized: the short seasons, the fact that most people travel only during the school vacation; the fear of forest fires in dry seasons; threatened strikes. Then, there is the peak load problem—heavy travel on Saturdays and Sundays with more people to accommodate than it is possible to provide facilities for, followed by midweek days when there are more employees than guests.

Through the years the Department of the Interior in issuing these leases and franchises has attempted to primarily keep in mind the importance of furnishing a wide range of service at moderate rates. The success of the policy prompted Democratic administrations to follow the practice of Republicans, and vice versa. For instance, during the Wilson administration franchises issued in the Republican administrations were renewed, and later contracts entered into in President Wilson's time were renewed by his successors. Since 1933 several franchises issued in the twenties were properly renewed by the Secretary of the Interior.

So we come to the Yosemite National Park contract of 1925.

Never, at any time, has the Congress considered having tourist facilities provided by the Government itself. Obviously, the margin of profits is so small and so nearly nonexistent in many years that Government operation would have been difficult, if not impossible. To give such service to a relatively small part of the American people, the expense would have to be borne by all of the people. We have not yet reached the stage where all the people should make a contribution to provide meals, lodging, and automotive service to national park visitors; we look instead to private enterprise to do this job.

I have visited Yosemite National Park myself. There is a fine hotel there which could never be operated at much more than cost. There are lodge, camp, and other operations that have been modestly profitable, but there have been exceedingly poor business years when a Government operation would have ended in a serious deficit.

One of the things about the Yosemite Park & Curry Co. is that it has been operated by people who have a deep love for the mountains and forests, the lakes and streams of the High Sierras. The Curry family first developed a tourist camp in 1899, and the members of this fine family still direct the management of the Yosemite Park and Curry Co., whose operations have recently been so largely misrepresented and so badly misunderstood. Mrs. D. A. Curry, now 85 years old, has devoted her life to the affairs of this concern and still is its principal adviser. The National Park Service itself has, since its creation in 1916 under the bill signed by President Wilson on August 25 of that year, been extremely diligent and careful in securing operators of park facilities who are not only competent in providing the various services but who have genuine interest in the national parks. It has been the frank policy not to solicit bids with a view to getting the largest amount of compensation for the lease of a tract or tracts of land, but rather to interest in the operation competent people who are genuinely devoted to the objectives of the National Park Service and who have deep, personal interest in preserving the national parks themselves. These are the kind of people who have always operated Yosemite Park & Curry Co.

For instance, in Yosemite the most beautiful portion of Yosemite Valley is set aside exclusively for public camp grounds under great trees and beside the rushing Merced River. There you may be assigned camping space and pitch your tent. If you have no tent you can rent one. If you have no camp equipment—dishes, lanterns, and so on—you can rent those, too, at low cost.

If you prefer a tent with room service and cafeteria meals, you can have that. If you would like a well-ordered cabin with bath, you can have that. And if you want first-class hotel accommodations, as good as you will find in any city, you can have those. Whether you hike into Yosemite with your knapsack on your back or come out from the East in a special party traveling first-class all the way, Yosemite has accommodations and services to fit your wishes and your purse.

Even in the high park, up among the snow peaks, there are camps, a few miles apart, so that you can travel along the High Sierras afoot or on horseback, for a week at a time, with no other baggage than a tooth brush.

In the House of Representatives, Mr. ROONEY, of New York, speaking on May 8, described to you the many other facilities—the ski slopes, the transportation system, the recreation halls, the swimming pools, the stores, the shops, all operated under the authority and direction of the National Park Service for the public convenience, as to which I am sure he is as much concerned as I am.

In 1 month the park has served the equivalent of more than 113,000 guests staying 1 day each. All this is carried on, as in other national parks, under contract with the Government by Yosemite Park & Curry Co. with certain smaller operators.

Now what does this operating company get out of all this? Is the cost of these services—without which few of our people ever would visit or enjoy Yosemite or our other national parks—is this cost too high? Is the company making too much money? Over the 13 years that the present contract has been in effect, the dividends received by stockholders represent an average annual return of 4.49 percent on their invested capital. In the year 1931, the company's net loss was nearly $100,000 ($97,636.54) and in 1933 their net profit after taxes was only $1,495.31 on nearly $2,000,000 worth of business. Even in the last few years the company has never earned the 6 percent beyond which, under the contract, the Government recapture begins. Compare that with any hotel operation you know of, in the last 5 years.

So, in pointing out that all rates, tariffs, and charges are under the supervision and subject to the approval of the National Parks Service, I feel justified in commending that Service and the Department of the Interior, for their wisdom and watchfulness in seeing to it that the public is served at moderate and reasonable cost. And while I think it is much better to hold these costs down, as has been done, than to seek a greater return for the Government, which could only come out of our own people, I would further point out that in 1945 the Yosemite Park & Curry Co. paid, in Federal, State, and county taxes, a total of $207,000, or more than its entire net earnings ($203,000) over and above the minimum fee of $5,000 paid annually under the terms of the contract written by the Government and signed by the company.

Specifically, the operations of this company may be stated as follows:

ACCOMMODATIONS AND HOUSE COUNTS

Total capacity of company's guest accommodations is approximately 4,000 ranging from Ahwahnee Hotel to housekeeping tents.

In the travel year ended September 30, 1941, the largest in the park's history, the number of guest days varied from a low of 2,960 for the month of November to a high of 113,267 for the month of July. In the peak month of July the occupancy was 91.3 percent of capacity, while for the year it was 29 percent of capacity. At all seasons there is wide fluctuation between midweek and week ends.

INVESTMENT

Total cost of the company's facilities was $5,571,000 as of September 30, 1945.

SERVICES AND RATES

All services provided and all rates and prices charged are approved by the Department of the Interior. Complete schedules of rates are filed each season and are subjected to careful scrutiny before they are approved or modified.

CONCESSION FEE TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

A flat minimum fee of $5,000 per annum is provided by the contract.

For the first 10 years of the contract the Government receives 25 percent of any amount distributed to stockholders in excess of 6 percent cumulative priority in stockholders' equity.

For the second 10 years of the contract the Government receives 22½ percent of any amount earned above the 6-percent priority, whether distributed or not.

PAYMENTS TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT FOR SERVICES

The company pays the Federal Government for electricity, water, telephone service, and garbage disposal. For the year 1941 such payments were as follows:

Electricity	$73,500
Water	10,500
Incinerator	3,600
Telephone	6,000
Total	93,600

Taxes paid by company in 1945

Federal	$148,000
California	40,000
County	19,000
Total (net earnings, $203,000)	207,000

The company has never reached the excess-profits-tax bracket.

Taxes paid by guests and employees through company

Federal (income, excise, social security)	$130,000
California (sales tax)	37,000

BRIEF STATEMENT REGARDING PRESENT CONTRACT

The original 2C-year contract was signed by Secretary Work February 4, 1926 The present contract became effective October 1, 1932, and is a revision of the former contract based on the inclusion of the Wawona properties in the park and the enlarged scope of the company's undertaking. During the first 10-year period of this contract the company paid $851,000 in dividends while it invested $1,726,961 in buildings and equipment. The second period of this contract has now run for 3 years and during that time the company has not earned its 6-percent priority.

Over the 13 years that the contract has been in effect the dividends received by the stockholders represent an average annual return of 4.49 percent on their invested capital.

All of this has come from a beginning of six- or seven-tenths through careful, economical management and by persuading other public-spirited citizens to supply funds for additional facilities, the present number of stockholders (1945) being 419.

If, in the light of experience, better leases can now be written by the Park Service, I am sure it will be done. In the meantime, we may well have in mind that in Yosemite Park alone, millions of our fellow citizens have enjoyed this splendid heritage on a schedule of rates and prices that has netted the operating company less than it would have realized by investing its money in good common stocks or other standard securities.

I see nothing for the Park Service or the Yosemite Park & Curry Co. to feel apologetic about in this record. On the contrary, I feel that both parties to the contract are to be commended for its faithful observance in the interests of the public.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk state the next committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Construction," on page 46, line 12, after the word "division", to strike out "$1,115,660" and insert "$2,782,659."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, in line 13, after the name "Anderson Ranch Dam", to strike out "$1,234,475" and insert "$2,847,000."

Mr. BRIDGES. The amendment just stated appears in line 13; does it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. BRIDGES. The committee proposes to increase the appropriation for the Anderson Ranch Dam from the House figure of $1,234,475 to $2,847,000. Frankly, I am willing to take up these items individually or in a group. But there are several such projects as to which, in my judgment, at least, the increases voted by the Senate committee are not warranted. I am willing to take them up individually or I am willing to take them up as a group, in connection with the construction program items.

Let me point out that the House gave this matter very careful consideration and made a drastic cut below the figure submitted by the Bureau of the Budget. But the House had a very definite reason for doing so. We know that at the present time materials are scarce and labor is scarce. So it seems to me to be a poor time to go forward in an extended way with this work.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is violent disagreement as to the facts insofar as the scarcity of labor is concerned. The soldiers are coming back. They are being discharged in large numbers. The Senator must remember that it was months ago that the hearings were held by the House committee.

Today we receive reports from all over the United States about the returned servicemen. We have stated in our report that insofar as the Reclamation Service can do so in connection with its own work and in connection with work done for it by contractors, preference on such jobs shall be given to veterans who desire to become farmers on the projects.

There is no question at all that there is now in the United States ample manpower to undertake the work. So the allegation of manpower shortage is out the window.

The other question is with respect to the principal materials which are used on these projects. A great deal of cement is used on them. Today, cement plants in the United States are shut down because there is not sufficient demand for cement. These projects also use reinforced steel. Reinforced steel comes off the top of the pot in the steel-making process. It is not the finest kind of steel, and there is a surplus of such steel on the market.

The Senator from New Hampshire must remember that this job is to be judged, not by today's conditions, but by conditions throughout the year. I can assure him that under those circumstances he need not worry about either labor or material.

The testimony before the House committee was not to the effect that these projects could be finished and that men could be engaged in farming on those projects within a year or a year and a half. However, if the requested appropriation is made with regard to the Boise project, the project will be in position to be completed. No more Federal expenditure will be required in regard to that project, and veterans will be able to obtain farms there within a year and a half. Therefore, why should we cause any delay in completing the project?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, the regular and supplemental Budget estimates for 1947 were $350,357,270, but the House voted $179,426,847, or a reduction of more than one-half. The Senate subcommittee, and in turn the full committee, restored the cuts made by the House so that the bill now provides for a total appropriation of $329,337,438, or a net restoration over the House figure of $149,910,591. I do not believe the increases can be justified. Yesterday we passed over many items in the bill. I do not believe it is necessary to take up each and every one of the three-hundred-odd committee amendments to the bill, but I do believe that the Senate committee went too far in its restorations of cuts which had been made by the House. I should like to see the Senate vote on a series of these amendments and enable us to find out whether we want to go ahead with the completion of the projects.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. REED. With the permission of the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Arizona, I should like to make about a 3-minute statement with regard to some of the items contained in the bill, and the policy which should be followed.

Not being a member of the subcommittee, or being present when the full committee disposed of the bill, I do not know in what way these projects will be affected. But heretofore a wrong policy has been followed in regard to irrigation plants, reclamation plants, flood-control dams, and construction of that type. In other words, when we appropriated, say a hundred million dollars, for certain types of projects, the practice has been to distribute the $100,000,000 among various States and congressional districts so that everybody would be satisfied. That has been a poor policy. I have expressed my opinion in committees which had to handle such matters. It makes a great deal more sense if we pick out the projects which must be completed and concentrate our appropriations upon them so that, for example, flood control would be provided. There would also be an increase in the amount of land to be irrigated. We have been dividing these funds and scattering them around among many plants and finishing the construction of none of them.

Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Arizona if the increases which we are now discussing would enable the projects affected to be completed.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is exactly what I was talking about in respect to the projects set forth on pages 46 and 47 of the bill. The purpose in each case is to allow the Budget Bureau's estimate, plus a sum of money which the Bureau of Reclamation stated would make possible the completion of the job in a year or a year and a half, and, at most, within 2 years.

Mr. REED. If the appropriations, including the recommended increases, would enable the projects to be completed, I would hope that the Senator from New Hampshire would not urge an objection against the items which we are discussing. A policy which would make possible the completion of all these projects would be a better policy all around. We can finish building the projects at one bite at less cost than if the money were to be scattered and expended over a series of years. If we have a dozen dams which are only partially completed, we get no flood control. If we have a dozen irrigation projects only partially completed, we get nothing whatever in the way of irrigation. The most efficient policy is the one which will make it possible to complete the construction of the projects at the earliest possible date.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Arizona which of these projects would be completed and about which we would hear nothing in the future, so far as appropriations are concerned.

Mr. HAYDEN. The committee stated in its report, on page 21, that the House allowed, in connection with the Boise project, Idaho, Payette division, an appropriation of $1,115,660, and that the additional funds necessary in order to complete the project are $209,659.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have the bill before me, and I should like to check the committee amendments as set forth in the bill. For example, on page 46 of the bill, what projects mentioned there would be finished if the requested appropriations were allowed?

Mr. HAYDEN. We went over the Budget Bureau's estimates in connection with the Boise project, Idaho, Payette division, and we received a statement that an additional amount of $209,659 would enable completion of the project. The Senator will also note on page 46, in line 23, the Lugert-Altus project, Oklahoma. That project will be finished. The Deschutes project in Oregon is the next one. It will also be completed. The Klamath project, referred to in line 1 on page 47, will also be completed. The Yakima project, Washington, Roza division, will also be completed. The Kendrick project, Wyoming; the Riverton project, Wyoming; and the Shoshone project, Wyoming, Heart Mountain division, will be completed and will not appear again as construction items in connection with an appropriation bill.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, those projects involve tremendous sums of money. On page 46, at the beginning of line 13, I move to strike out "$2,782,659" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,115,660."

Mr. HAYDEN. The question first will be on agreeing to the committee amendment. The Senator does not necessarily have to make the motion which he has made. The Senate can either agree or disagree to the committee amendment, unless the Senator wants to go below the House figure.

Mr. BRIDGES. No; I do not want to go below the House figure. If we could dispose of some of these amendments I would be willing to do so on the basis of the committee's recommendations. Some of the appropriations, however, include tremendous increases. Let us take each one of the amendments individually or all of them together on pages 46 and 47.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator's motion would be, would it not, to disagree to all the committee amendments on pages 46 and 47 under the heading "Construction"?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes; with the exception of the amendments which pertain to projects which could be completed and disposed of.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have stated what those projects are.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendments under the heading "Construction," beginning on page 46, will be considered en bloc. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The committee amendments agreed to en bloc are as follows:

Under the subheading "Construction," on page 46, line 12, after the word "division", to strike out "$1,115,660" and insert "$2,782,659";

On page 46, line 13, after the word "Dam", to strike out "$1,234,475" and insert "$2,847,000";

On page 46, line 14, after the name "Idaho", to strike out "$433,605" and insert "$1,000,000";

On page 46, line 18, after the name "Idaho", to strike out "$650,410" and insert "$1,500,000";

On page 46, line 19, after the name "Montana", to strike out "$41,625" and insert "$96,000";

On page 46, line 20, after the names "New Mexico-Texas", to strike out "$360,675" and insert "$831,800";

On page 46, line 22, after the name "New Mexico", to strike out "$753,605" and insert "$1,738,000";

On page 46, line 23, after the name "Oklahoma" to strike out "$901,900" and insert "$2,664,610";

On page 46, line 24, after the name "Oregon", to strike out "$563,685" and insert "$1,716,837";

On page 46, after line 24, to insert: "Owyhee project, Oregon, $125,000";

On page 47, line 1, after the names "Oregon-California", to strike out "$216,800" and insert "$1,281,605";

On page 47, line 3, after the name "Utah", to strike out "$1,345,040" and insert "$4,602,000";

On page 47, line 4, after the name "Utah", to strike out "$26,885" and insert "$62,000";

On page 47, line 5, after the word "division", to strike out "$624,650" and insert "$2,597,100";

On page 47, after the name "Wyoming", to strike out "$216,800" and insert "$1,895,000";

On page 47, line 8, after the name "Wyoming", to strike out "$650,410" and insert "$3,520,550";

On page 47, line 10, after the word "division", to strike out "$346,885" and insert "$1,917,672";

On page 47, line 12, after the word "division", to strike out "$58,970" and insert "$196,895."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 6, in the item for the Columbia Basin project, Washington, after the numerals "$1,090,000", to strike out "of the moneys deposited in the special account pursuant to section 4 of Executive Order numbered 8526 shall be transferred to the reclamation fund to", and insert "from power revenues shall."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General provisions," on page 50, after line 23, to insert:

Utilization of power revenues: No power revenues on any project shall be distributed as profits to any individual, before or after retirement of the project debt, and nothing contained in any previous appropriation act shall be deemed to have authorized such distribution: Provided, That the application of such revenues to the cost of operation, maintenance, and debt service of the irrigation system of the project, or to other purposes in aid of such irrigation system, shall not be construed to be such a distribution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 20, after the word "fund", to strike out "$18,489,395" and insert "$49,572,043."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General fund, construction," on page 52, line 4, after the words "Gila project, Arizona", to strike out "$867,210" and insert "$3,500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 13, after the words "Davis Dam project, Arizona-Nevada", to strike out "$6,504,070" and insert "$15,000,000."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, here again we find an appropriation which, with the amounts appropriated by the preceding amendments, involves a large sum of money. I do not want to be put in the position of standing here and fighting against something that various Senators think is for the progress of the country but I say we have got to economize, and we simply cannot do that and at the same time continue with this wild spending. We have to start trimming our sails somewhere, and it seems to me, in view of the cuts made by the House of Representatives, we should at least maintain a semblance of economy in this bill.

Today a great many persons in the Congress and throughout the country are demanding economy, but it is lip service unless they fight for it. While I shall not go into their individual merits, a great many of these projects are outstanding examples of expenditures which I do not believe can be justified at this time.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am going to move that the amendments on pages 52 and 53 down to line 17 on page 53 where the item "Water Conservation and Utilization Projects" begins, be disagreed to. For instance, for "Total, general fund, construction," the House appropriated $38,590,830, which the Senate committee has increased to $82,005,070.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I cannot agree that the amendments on the pages referred to be voted en bloc, for several reasons. One reason is that there is a disagreement with respect to the transmission line in connection with a project in California, and that ought to be segregated by itself.

Mr. BRIDGES. Very well. Let us take them up individually, but I point out that the House figure on these general fund construction items was $38,590,830 and the Senate figure is $82,005,070, representing a tremendous increase.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A vote will have to be taken on the separate amendments.

Mr. HAYDEN. As to the Senate committee amendment now under consideration on page 52, lines 13 and 14, the justification for it is this: We entered into a solemn treaty with the Republic of Mexico that we would complete this particular dam within 5 years in order properly to reregulate the waters from the Colorado River so as to carry out our treaty obligation. This project cannot be delayed. That is the story. It is a reregulating reservoir below Boulder Dam, which will increase the production of power, which is greatly needed. At the present time a Navy power plane is being brought into the area because of the drought there and in order to provide surplus power. In the treaty with Mexico we agreed to have this dam completed by November 195[illegible] and the dam cannot be completed if it is proceeded with at the rate which would be possible under the amount appropriated by the House. The money proposed by the amendment will be required in order to do the job under the treaty.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Arizona if the larger amount would complete this particular dam?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; it will not. It is a very expensive job. In order to finish it within the 1950 period, the appropriation must be made at the rate estimated by the Bureau of the Budget. For that reason, we are asking for the appropriation recommended by the Senate committee.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, can the Senator tell us what it has cost so far and what it will cost in toto?

Mr. HAYDEN. The total estimate cost is $76,661,000; the expenditures to June 30, 1945, were $4,254,000. The construction was just begun on this dam at the outbreak of the war, and because of the war and the scarcity of manpower and materials the work was stopped. In the meantime, we made the treaty with Mexico in which we agreed to apportion the waters to Mexico, and this is the place to do it.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, may I point out to the Senator that this is a typically good example of authorizations of a great expenditure of money in connection with which chickens come home to roost. This matter certainly was emphasized when the Mexican treaty was under consideration by the Senate.

Mr. HAYDEN. In reply to the Senator, let me say that this project was authorized and construction had begun on it before the war. Why? Because the quantity of power produced at Boulder Dam was not sufficient to meet the needs of the area. This is a reregulating reservoir; the power could be used twice, and more power could be obtained in that way. That is the basic reason why the project was authorized and approved before the war. In the meantime it serves the additional purpose of being the place specified in the treaty where the water is to be provided for Mexico. We agreed to do it within a given period of time, and it can only be done by appropriating at the rate recommended by the committee.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. I might say that this item, the Davis Dam, was extensively discussed on the floor by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], by myself, and by other Senators who participated at that time in the debate. We have entered into a very solemn obligation with the Republic of Mexico to complete this dam, and if the United States Government should default in its obligation we would be in a most unhappy condition. Inasmuch as the distinguished gentleman from New Hampshire was one of the Senators who voted for that treaty, I am sure he will want to vote to carry out our obligation.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I am glad the Senator from California has called attention to the debate that occurred at the time the treaty was under consideration by the Senate. I am sure he will remember that I pointed out at that time very definitely that when we enter into these solemn agreements we have to fulfill them. This should be another illustration to the Members of the Senate and of the other House that when we make deals with foreign nations and they may become solemn treaties we should know exactly what we will be called upon to do.

I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Arizona that this is now an obligation. The time for us to have taken the necessary action to have avoided doing things we do not want to do was before we made the treaty. I am sure the Senator from California will remember that I spent a day on the Senate floor trying to point out this objection to the Senate, but, as the Senator indicates, we did not have a sufficient number of Members of the Senate to agree with us to keep us from getting into this situation.

Mr. DOWNEY. I very distinctly remember that, and we are fortunate in now having upon the floor of the Senate the distinguished Senator from Colorado, who more than anybody else is probably responsible for what the Senate did. The distinguished Senator from Colorado, I know, will raise his eloquent voice to uphold the honor and dignity of the United States in not overturning this treaty.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like to suggest that, entirely independent from the treaty and entirely aside from the water allocations we made to Mexico, the Davis Dam is an essential part of an integrated development of the Colorado River, and that it was considered a highly desirable project and was authorized prior to the time of the treaty, and as the distinguished Senator from Arizona has pointed out, was merely suspended during the war.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I know my distinguished friend from Colorado, for whom I have a very high regard, will admit that, if we did not have this treaty and a fixed date, we could make this improvement at our leisure and in accord with the necessities of the people of the United States. The Senator from Arizona has made a very definite statement, and it is absolutely accurate. We fixed in the treaty an absolute date when we would have to do something, and so often it costs several times as much to do that something when we are compelled to meet a dead line.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Of course, this is an essential part of the treaty. The distinguished Senator from New Jersey is right when he says that when we make an agreement we have to keep it, and I do not know how to make a treaty without making some firm agreements.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly. In the light of what has been said I may say that I withdraw my amendment to reduce the total for this dam project if it is a part of the Mexican treaty and represents a solemn obligation on the part of this country. I point out again, however, this is typical of the authorizations which are so easily enacted, and which afterward we have to pay for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire withdraws his amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 52, line 16, after the words "Shasta Dam and Reservoir", it is proposed to strike out "$1,385,365" and insert "$2,716,000."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, we are now approaching the amendments relating to the Central Valley project. I take it that, aside from some of these amendments which were agreed to in the committee unanimously, the matter in italics, beginning in line 25, on page 52, down to and including line 5, on page 53, might go over until the other amendments in the bill have been acted on, because that is a matter which will arouse a great deal of controversy.

Mr. HAYDEN. I was about to remark that the amendments down to the one relating to the Keswick Dam, on line 21, page 52, where the amount is increased from $765,310 to $1,500,000, for the switchyards, were unanimously agreed to in the committee.

There is a disagreement, which will have to be settled in the Senate, about the transmission line, beginning with the words "transmission line," in line 21, down to the end of the paragraph on page 53. There is a difference of opinion as to about $4,000,000.

It is immaterial to me the way the matter is handled. I would just as lief proceed and dispose of it now, or, if it suits the convenience of the Senator to have it go over for a little while, we can do that.

Mr. McCARRAN. A number of Senators who have evinced considerable interest in the amendment with reference to the transmission lines are absent. The Senator will recall that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] has at all times taken a great interest in this subject. He is not present, and is not able to be on the floor today, I understand.

Mr. HAYDEN. I sincerely hope we can dispose of the bill today, because with 11 appropriation bills to be acted on, we should act on the pending bill today if possible.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator's anxiety in that regard is not greater than my own.

Mr. HAYDEN. Does the Senator suggest that we pass this matter over temporarily?

Mr. McCARRAN. I respectfully suggest that the transmission line item, and another which will come later in the bill as to the Southwest Power Authority, be not taken up until all other items in the bill have been disposed of, and then take them up at the last.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, will the Senator from Arizona yield for a moment?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. As I understand, we will take action on the committee amendments up to the point of that relating to the transmission line?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is what I am asking.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The proposal of the Senator is to have it go over only temporarily?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is correct.

Mr. KNOWLAND. He certainly would not be in favor of having this matter postponed for another day. We have had ample notice that the pending bill would be under consideration. We have an unusual condition in regard to the Central Valley in California. Both the senior Senator from California and the junior Senator are in accord and in favor of the transmission lines being constructed, as is the Governor of the State of California. So I should like to have this matter considered just as soon as possible.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this is a matter which has been before the Senate for a number of years. Some of us have taken quite a long and continuous interest in it, and it may or it may not get through this afternoon.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, if the clerk will then proceed with the reading, I will interrupt him at the proper point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will proceed to state the amendments.

The next amendments were, on page 52, line 16, after the word "Reservoir", to strike out "$1,385,365" and insert "$2,716,000"; in line 17, after the word "facilities", to strike out "$6,284,020" and insert "$12,312,000"; in line 18, after the word "plant", to strike out "$970,195" and insert "$1,900,000"; in line 19, after the name "Keswick Dam", to strike out "$510,570" and insert "$1,000,000"; in line 20, after the word "plant", to strike out "$510,570" and insert "$1,000,000"; in the same line, after the word "switchyards", to insert "at Shasta and Keswick Dams"; in line 21, after the amendment just above stated, to strike out "$765,310" and insert "$1,500,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the amendments from there until the end of the paragraph may be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment after the ones referred to by the Senator from Arizona.

The next amendment was on page 53, after line 5, to insert the following:

Kings River project, California, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 7, after the name "Colorado", to strike out "$6,504,075" and insert "$13,000,000."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, here is another big item, the Colorado-Big Thompson project. The House appropriated $6,504,075, and the Senate committee jumped the amount to $13,000,000. That is a tremendous increase, and I think certainly it should be justified. I do not know whether the Senator from Arizona desires to speak on it or whether the Senator from Colorado wishes to speak about it.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me state, first, that the amount suggested in the bill is $2,000,000 under the Budget estimate.

Mr. BRIDGES. I realize that.

Mr. HAYDEN. The remainder of the appropriation is necessary in order to get water out from the west of the Colorado River Basin over on to the thirsty land now partially supplied by eastern Colorado. The job must be done; it is a feasible project; and, in the judgment of the committee, the work should be prosecuted at the rate recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. Of course, it can be slowed down, but, if it is slowed down, then the income the Federal Government will receive by way of returns from this development will be postponed that much longer, and the benefits to the farmers and landowners will be delayed.

Mr. BRIDGES. I wish to ask two questions in regard to the matter: What is the total cost of the project, and how much has been spent to date?

Mr. HAYDEN. The total cost of the project is $96,321,000. The expenditures to June 30, 1945, amounted to $21,635,000. There was a deficiency appropriation last year of $5,750,000. This makes about $27,000,000 that has been spent on the project up to date. As I have said, the total cost is to be $96,000,000. To carry on at the proper rate the Bureau of the Budget made its estimate.

I think it would interest the Senator to know that the Northern Colorado Conservation District has agreed to repay the United States $25,000,000 on the construction costs, and practically all the remaining costs are to be repaid from revenues derived from the sale of surplus electrical energy. There must be harmonious development of the project and surplus power must be delivered to the load centers in the market area as the demand arises. This is a combined irrigation-power development, with ample market for the power and a crying demand for the water.

Mr. BRIDGES. I point out again that Congress has authorized for the project $96,000,000, and that it is very easy to authorize a project, and now we have spent some $27,000,000, we are in it, and must go forward. I merely point out that this is typical of the expenditures to which we are committed.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let me say that when we are considering items of $96,000,000, $86,000,000, and one thing and another, the figures are less than the cost of one battleship, which we use for a few years and then blow up with an atomic bomb to see what will happen. These great irrigation projects in the West fertilize thousands of acres of land, and they will be of benefit to this generation and the next generation, to returning GI's who manned the battleships. I think they are worthy, yet when great armament appropriations are brought up, no one raises a voice against them.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The irrigation projects in the West have an additional feature. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] referred to the cost of a battleship as being in excess of $100,000,000. Let me suggest that after a battleship is constructed there is not the return of one penny of the expenditure to the Government, while in the projects under discussion, land is developed, human beings who take up the land as well as others are cared for, and the money is returned. The Government is repaid for its expenditures.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that I am not standing on the floor of the Senate opposing the general program. I feel that we have gone at the whole matter in a sort of a hit-and-miss manner. We have authorized and begun many projects, and when we did so we could not appreciate the magnitude of the projects in toto and the magnitude of the costs. Of course, many of these projects are worth while. But when we consider that the country is endeavoring to get back to a peacetime economy, the amount here involved seems somewhat staggering.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Of course, we all want to get back to a peacetime economy, but how are we to get back to a peacetime economy unless we take care of the people in the various sections of the country? What is proposed to be done represents a fine peacetime economy in that it puts the ex-servicemen on pieces of land which they can irrigate and farm and produce food. We have now many obligations with respect to food. We are feeding Europe and, in fact, the whole world. How are we going to do that unless we get men to raise potatoes in Idaho or raise beans in Washington and other States? That, Mr. President, is a good peacetime economy.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR. May I also say, Mr. President, that with our great national debt the only way we are ever going to service it is to have a richer country, with greater production facilities, in order that there may be produced more commodities on which taxes can be paid. That will certainly be the case in these great projects in the West. I may say that the State of Idaho has lost population during the war. Men went away to the war plants. We have wide open spaces out there that can accommodate thousands upon thousands, and possibly millions of citizens from the crowded areas of the country. These projects will make markets for the manufactured products of the East. So they are certainly for the benefit of the whole country, and, as the Senator from New Mexico pointed out, these projects are self-liquidating.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma in the chair). Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I submit to the Senator from New Hampshire that, while the item in question represents a great amount of money, there is no economy in curtailing a development once it has been undertaken, and after one-third of the cost of it has already been expended. We have got to go through with it then. The time to have stopped it was before we commenced. Now that we have expended about one-third of its total cost, the sooner we can complete the project the more economy there will be to the American people. Among other things, we have drilled a 13-mile tunnel through the Rocky Mountains to carry this water. The tunnel is idle now, and awaiting the development and the building of dams to accumulate the water to be transported through that great tunnel. I sincerely hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not oppose the appropriation recommended by the Senate committee.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like very much to endorse the comments of my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from Colorado. There also is an element of fairness to the people who come under the project which should not be overlooked. They have organized themselves into districts. They have assumed heavy obligations. They in the end will reimburse the Government. They already have made some contribution. It is not fair to drag those people along forever and not bring them the benefits for which they have contracted and which have been delayed so far because of the war.

I should like to add that this project was not entered into in a profligate spirit. I doubt whether the Senate has ever more carefully considered any project than this particular project, in part because of its dramatic novelty. It takes water from one watershed and moves it through the Continental Divide to another watershed.

The late Senator Alva Adams, and my distinguished colleague [Mr. JOHNSON], and others from Colorado have done great labor on the matter, and the appropriate Senate committees have studied it most thoroughly. We have put our hand to that plow and we have got to finish the furrow, and the faster we do it the better for all concerned.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, in the light of the statements which have just been made, I will withdraw my amendment respecting this item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 53, in lines 7 and 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 9, after the name "Montana," to strike out "$867,210" and insert "$2,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 9, to insert:

Colorado River project, Texas, $68,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 14, after "(57 Stat. 14)", to strike out "$13,008,145" and insert "$27,400,000."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, in the case of the Columbia Basin project in Washington, again we find a tremendous increase. The House figure was $13,008,145. We are more than doubling that to $27,400,000. I think there should be a very good explanation and a justification of such a tremendous increase.

Mr. HAYDEN. No explanation was given by the House Committee on Appropriations as to why the cut was made. The sum of money we are restoring makes this item $27,400,000, which is under the Budget estimate by $2,600,000, because we do not provide for a Government town site. Aside from that, the break-down of the items is as follows:

Power facilities, that is the dam itself, $6,409,000.

Irrigation facilities, $15,000,000.

Reconditioning the spillway bucket of Grand Coulee Dam, $2,046,000.

Then there is a land-purchasing program of $2,000,000.

The Senator will understand that when this project is completed it will be the largest irrigation project in America. It will embrace the largest area of land irrigated from one source of water supply.

Mr. BRIDGES. What will be the total cost, and how much money have we put into the project up to date?

Mr. HAYDEN. The total estimated cost is $582,000,000. The expenditures up to date are $183,822,000. That is the Coulee Dam.

Mr. BRIDGES. The figure we are talking about is a tremendous one.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; there is no doubt about that at all. But it is an enormous area, highly fertile, and will provide homes for a great many Americans.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I may say to the Senator from New Hampshire that none of us knew exactly why the House cut this item, but the break-down just given represents items which must be started. There was some controversy over the amount for land purchases, but that amount is necessary to break down some of the large land holdings there because of a law enacted by the Congress itself, under which the lands have to be held for a short period of time, and then can be sold to veterans and other people settling on the lands. The Bureau of Reclamation has to have that money under the directive of the Congress, under the law passed by the Congress.

The other items include the taking care of the power facilities; that is, particularly, the large pumps. I understand the testimony was that it would take from 2½ to 3 years to build the pumps. They are the largest pumps in the world. There is very little irrigation proper. The purpose is merely to get ready for the big project which was contemplated in the integrated development of the Columbia River, including Grand Coulee and all the other power, irrigation, navigation, and flood-control projects on the river. This project is a part of the whole. It will be the thing that will really pay off. It will be self-liquidating. If we wait another year the whole project will be delayed that much longer.

Mr. BRIDGES. When the Senator speaks of the project being self-liquidating, does he mean that the money received will eventually go into the United States Treasury, or will it go into another fund, to be spent again?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think eventually we shall come to the end of new irrigation projects. Then there will be a vast amount of money in the Treasury, or in the Bureau, which is, in effect, in the Treasury, because it can be turned over. I think we are pioneering in connection with many of these irrigation projects. They have not yet had a chance to pay big dividends, but as years go by they will pay off. We have been using most of the money for new projects, but some day we shall come to an end of new projects. The fund is in good shape. I hope the Senator will not object to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 53, line 14.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 15, after the word "construction", to strike out "$38,590,830" and insert "$82,005,070."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask that this amendment, representing the total, go over until we determine what to do about the Central Valley project.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee amendment on page 53, lines 15 and 16, will be passed over.

The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 16, to insert:

WATER CONSERVATION AND UTILIZATION PROJECTS

For the construction of water conservation and utilization projects and small reservoirs, as authorized by the act of August 11, 1939, as amended (16 U. S. C., 590y, 590z-1, 590z-2), $3,340,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Fort Peck project", on page 54, line 2, after "(16 U. S. C. 833)", to strike out "$433,605" and insert "$1,000,000."

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the able Senator in charge of the bill his construction of the language in connection with the Fort Peck project in Montana: "For construction of transmission lines, substations, and other facilities." I call his attention to the expression "other facilities as may be required by the Bureau of Reclamation, as authorized by the act of May 18, 1938." What does the language "other facilities" embrace?

Mr. HAYDEN. In my opinion, it embraces anything necessary to make the power generated at the Government dam available wherever it might be needed. There would have to be a transformer, to step down or step up the power. It includes anything to make the power available. That is what I understand "other facilities" to mean in connection with a Government dam.

Mr. OVERTON. In the opinion of the Senator, would it authorize the construction of steam-power plants?

Mr. HAYDEN. That question was argued very extensively in the committee in respect to the Southwest Power Authority. The term "other facilities" appears in connection with the Denison Dam and other dams. The committee reached the conclusion that at the time that legislation was enacted Congress did not have in mind that power generated at a Government dam might be firmed up subsequently by a steam plant, under the guise of the term "other facilities." If Congress intends anything of that kind, it so specifies. In the case of the Central Valley project in California, the authorizing act authorized a dam and transmission lines to be built, as well as steam plants to firm up the power. Congress affirmatively said what the policy was. It would be a strained construction, as the lawyers on our committee view it, to say that "other facilities" meant steam plants.

Mr. OVERTON. I thank the Senator. That is exactly my view.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator was one of the authors of the Flood Control Act. I do not believe that any Senator knows more about what he himself had in mind when a term like that was used.

Mr. OVERTON. I believe that the provision to which the Senator refers contains the language "and related facilities." That certainly did not authorize the construction of steam plants. I am very glad to have the Senator from Arizona agree with me in that interpretation.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am not a lawyer, but we have some very able lawyers on the committee, and they seem to be of the same opinion.

Mr. OVERTON. As I understand, the Senator is not combating that opinion.

Mr. HAYDEN. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 54, line 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Missouri River Basin," on page 54, line 9, after "(Public Law 534)", to strike out "$10,312,685" and insert "$25,582,202."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Advances to Colorado River Dam fund," on page 55, line 16, after "(43 U. S. C., ch. 12A)", to strike out "$433,605" and insert "$1,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 56, line 13, after the word "fund", to strike out "$2,384,825" and insert "$7,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Colorado River development fund," on page 56, line 20, after "(54 Stat. 774)", to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Colorado River front work and levee system," on page 57, line 8, after the word "available", to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$100,000."

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, the authorization bill for this item was passed in 1940, because of a critical flood condition on the lower Colorado River due to the flood control work above that point. Since the hearings on the pending bill were held, the Congress has passed, and the President has recently signed, Senate bill 2034, which is an additional authorization for flood-control work near Yuma on the Colorado River. I should like to say to the distinguished Senator from Arizona—for the benefit of other Senators, because he is well aware of the conditions—that flood-control conditions on the lower Colorado River which will be cured by this project are most critical. There is serious immediate danger from possible floods. In order to complete the project, instead of $100,000 being required, approximately $250,000 is required, and that additional amount of money is authorized in the bill which has recently been signed by the President, and to which I have referred. Because the condition is critical, and because the authorization has already been provided for, I ask the distinguished Senator if he will not take to conference an item of $250,000 instead of $100,000, as provided by the committee amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. I cannot object to that, because it is authorized by law. I shall be very glad to take the item to conference if the Senator will offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment on page 57, line 8, to strike out "$100,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$250,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] to the committee amendment on page 57, line 8.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Geological Survey," on page 57, line 12, after the word "exceed", to strike out "thirty" and insert "two hundred and two"; and in line 19, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$55,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 3, after the name "Puerto Rico", to strike out "$2,626,120" and insert "$5,000,000"; in the same line, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$675,000"; and in line 13, after the word "That", to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 17, after the word "thereto", to strike out "$1,200,000" and insert "$2,463,500"; and in the same line, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$725,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, in connection with the Geological Survey there is a series of increases. Instead of taking the time to go into each individual increase, can the Senator from Arizona justify to the Senate the reason for such increases at this time?

Mr. HAYDEN. I did so partially a few moments ago, with respect to topographical mapping. The other work of the Geological Survey, which we all agree is most important, is to assist in an inventory of the mineral resources of the United States. During the war we exhausted many of our great mineral resources. At least the richer deposits have been taken away and used for war purposes. By geophysical prospecting ore bodies in the ground are located. That involves work of the geologist. After it has been determined what is there, the Bureau of Mines enters the picture with the proper metallurgical processes to make the particular resource available. Thus the two bureaus work together. Our committee was of the opinion that in order to carry on the proper kind of inventory and find out what we have in the United States, we should allow the Budget estimates. We shall take the items to conference and see what we can do with the House. The House did not allow as much. Undoubtedly we shall have to compromise in some manner.

Mr. BRIDGES. I believe that the increase is too large, but I shall raise no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 21, after the name "Alaska", to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$312,500"; and in line 22, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$65,000" and insert "$97,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 3, after the word "resources", to strike out "$2,109,345" and insert "$2,888,000"; and in line 6, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$220,000" and insert "$250,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 4, after the word "Commission", to strike out "$216,800" and insert "$350,000"; and in the same line, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$60,000" and insert "$80,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 10, after the word "journals", to strike out "$101,500" and insert "$150,000"; in line 12, after the word "maps", to strike out "$264,080" and insert "$475,000"; and in the same line, after the words "in all", to strike out "$397,610" and insert "$657,030."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 23, after the word "thereto", to strike out "$575,500" and insert "$690,000"; and in the same line, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$105,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 23, after the word "Survey", to strike out "$7,993,445" and insert "$13,029,100."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I wonder whether the Senator from Arizona will be willing to have considered out of order an item on page 84, before we reach the items for the Bureau of Mines. Unfortunately, I must leave the Senate in a short time. It will be a courtesy to me if unanimous consent is granted, so as to permit that amendment to be considered at this time. I hope the Senator from Arizona will be willing to take to conference an item which I have discussed with him and with other members of the committee.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am familiar with the item the Senator from Washington has in mind. The Clerk informs us that the amendment should be offered to the committee amendment on page 84, in line 16, under the item of "Propagation of food fishes."

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes. Mr. President, I wish to have $35,000 added to the figure reported by the committee. The committee amendment proposes the figure "$1,476,600."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I do not believe I have discussed it with the Senator from New Hampshire. This matter came up after the hearings had started. It involves a fish hatchery in the Olympic Peninsula. A park was started there, but the work had to be discontinued because of the war. Several thousand tourists will go there, and this item involves the construction of concrete work for trout-rearing pools. The Department of the Interior and everyone else are very anxious to have the work done.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I have no objection to taking up the item now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be stated out of order.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 84, in line 16, after the word "aquarium", it is proposed to strike out "$1,315,100" and insert "$1,476,600."

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, to the committee amendment I offer the following amendment: Strike out "$1,476,600" and insert "$1,511,600." My amendment thus proposes an increase of $35,000 over the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an explanation of the amendment.

There being no objection, the explanation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FISH HATCHERY, OLYMPIC NATIONAL PARK, WASH.

When the Olympic National Park was established it was widely recognized that one of its main recreational assets is the trout fishing supplied by the many beautiful streams and lakes in the area. It was further recognized, however, that as travel to the park increased heavier stocking of these lakes and streams would be necessary, as is the case in other national parks, national forests, and other Federal areas set aside for recreational purposes.

The Department of the Interior foresaw this need and former Secretary Ickes agreed to the inclusion of a trout hatchery for the Olympic National Park in the postwar program of the Department. The only Federal facilities for propagating fish in the area now compromise two salmon hatcheries which can rear a few trout, but in numbers insufficient for the anticipated need. During the war years agents of the Fish and Wildlife Service have investigated possible locations for a trout hatchery within the Olympic National Park boundaries. They were not satisfied with the water supply or other features of the various locations which were investigated. It is the final conclusion of the Fish and Wildlife Service that the needs can best be met by enlarging and rehabilitating the existing salmon hatchery at Quilcene, Wash., adjacent to the park and well located for distributing the fish within the park. I have agreed that this proposal will be more practical, since the hatchery can continue to hatch and rear salmon in addition to producing the increased numbers of trout which the requirements will demand.

The Department of the Interior has not previously requested an appropriation to carry out the rehabilitation of the Quilcene hatchery because of the belief that Federal construction which would compete with the housing program should not be undertaken at this time. However, in order to avoid undue delay, I have requested the Fish and Wildlife Service to give me an estimate of the cost of the project and to show what amount could be expended in the fiscal year 1947 for types of construction which are permissible under the restrictions imposed by the Civilian Production Administration and which would not interfere with the veterans' housing program. These estimates indicate that the total ultimate cost of the project will be approximately $225,000. Of this amount, approximately $120,000 will cover types of work which will not require any quantity of critical materials or otherwise cut across the housing program. Among the items of work involved are the construction of a water-supply system comprising an intake, dam, settling basins, and some wood stave pipe. There are also included storage tanks for fire protection and domestic requirements, and retaining walls, grading, landscaping, and the construction of roadways. The largest single item would be the construction of trout-rearing pools at a cost of $35,000, and this would consist almost entirely of concrete work which will not affect the supply of critical materials required for housing. The only structural work involved is the remodeling of existing buildings at a cost of $18,500, and possibly some of this work could be deferred if the housing situation still remains as critical toward the end of the fiscal year 1947, when this part of the work would be actually taken up. The chief benefit from this proposal is the fact that the hatchery enlargement can be partially completed so as to produce a considerable number of trout by the summer of 1947. If a start on the work is delayed proper stocking cannot be undertaken until 1948 or later, and I am confident that the increasing travel to the Olympic National Park will be in full swing by that time and the fishing pressure will be extremely heavy.

A project of this nature has been on the approved program of the Department of the Interior since before the war. It represents no new Federal activity, but is simply an expansion of an existing activity designed to meet conditions created by the establishment of the Olympic National Park. The official conservation agencies of the State of Washington have expressed approval of the project and urge that the Federal Government meet its responsibility. It can be handled so that it will not cut across the Government's efforts to channel critical materials into housing. It will satisfy the people of the Olympic Peninsula and of the State of Washington, in general, that the Federal Government intends to administer the Olympic National Park on the same basis as other national parks, and foster one of the primary attractions of the area—the fishing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment, following the point which had been reached before the amendment which has just been adopted was considered out of order.

The next amendment was under the heading "Bureau of Mines," on page 62, line 2, after the word "including", to strike out "$81,443" and insert "$101,000"; and in line 5, after the word "journals", to strike out "$176,243" and insert "$195,800."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 23, after the word "exceeding", to strike out "two" and insert "seven"; and on page 63, line 2, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$76,000" and insert "$111,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 24, after the word "industry", to strike out "$1,483,000" and insert "$1,178,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the amendment was offered in the full committee by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], who at the moment does not appear to be upon the floor of the Senate. The Senator from Kansas spoke to me and stated that he wished to be upon the floor when this item is taken up. In order to accommodate him, I suggest that the amendment be passed over until he returns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be temporarily passed over.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I make no objection to passing over this item at this time, but I desire to give notice that it will be my purpose to oppose the committee amendment which eliminates $305,000 for the employment of 45 coal mine inspectors. In my opinion this item is most important. It was added upon the floor of the House of Representatives, I think, for the maintenance of safety in the coal mines of the country. It should not be eliminated, and I wish to have an opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. KILGORE. I also wish to serve notice that I shall object to the committee amendment for the same reason; and I also announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] will likewise oppose the committee amendment for the same reason. This committee amendment seems to be about the only one which provides for the reduction of an appropriation as contained in the bill which was passed by the House, so far as I have been able to observe, and the amendment is the only one I have seen so far which places investments above human safety in the operation of the mines. Such an attitude was one of the primary causes of the last coal strike.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is temporarily passed over.

The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 15, after the word "exceeding", to strike out "two" and insert "five"; in line 17, after the word "automobiles", to strike out "$397,100" and insert "$596,000"; and in the same line, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$83,750" and insert "$137,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 22, after the word "exceeding", to strike out "$90,000" and insert "$140,000"; on page 66, line 4, after the word "exceeding", to strike out "one" and insert "four"; and in line 8, after the word "Interior", to strike out "$3,500,000" and insert "$7,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 6, after the word "exceed", to strike out "two" and insert "five"; in line 8, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$32,000" and insert "$36,000"; and in line 9, after the word "Columbia", to strike out "$381,100" and insert "$737,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 7, after the word "exceed", to strike out "one" and insert "three"; in line 13, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$30,000"; and in line 14, after the word "Columbia", to strike out "$250,000" and insert "$500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, line 4, after the word "exceed", to strike out "two" and insert "five"; in line 11, after the word "employees", to strike out "$772,000" and insert "$851,500"; and in line 12, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$55,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, line 20, after "(30 U. S. C. 8)", to strike out "$985,820" and insert "$1,875,410"; and in line 21, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$70,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, line 23, after the word "research", to strike out "in" and insert "and"; on page 70, line 5, after the word "of", to strike out "temporary"; in line 11, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$12,500" and insert "$65,000"; and in line 12, after the word "Columbia", to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$2,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 23, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$36,270"; and in line 24, after the word "improvements", to strike out "$183,000" and insert "$198,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 14, after the word "foregoing", to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$1,190,000"; and in line 15, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$450,000" and insert "$1,005,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 8, after the word "Interior", to strike out "$87,400" and insert "$107,000"; and in line 9, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$10,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "National Park Service," on page 75, in line 5, after the word "including", to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$75,000"; and in the same line, after the word "binding", to strike out "$643,177" and insert "$779,320."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, in line 10, after the word "system", to strike out "$568,814" and insert "$750,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, in line 16, after the name "Washington", to strike out "$2,384,584" and insert "$3,314,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 2, after the word "project", to strike out "$1,164,905" and insert "$1,396,615."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, in line 6, after the word "area", to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$93,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 11, after the word "projects", to strike out "$44,816" and insert "$54,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 17, after the word "areas", to strike out "$79,700" and insert "$468,300."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 17, to insert:

Travel Bureau: For all expenses necessary in carrying out the provisions of the act of July 19, 1940 (16 U. S. C. 18), including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; expenses incident to participation by the Travel Bureau in international expositions and conferences dealing with travel; printing and binding; and books, newspapers, and periodicals; $38,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, in line 19, after the word "employees", to strike out "$651,967" and insert "$716,097."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, after line 19, to insert:

Acquisition of the Montezuma Well property, Arizona: For the acquisition of the Montezuma Well property, Arizona, in accordance with the act approved October 19, 1943 (57 Stat. 572), $25,000.

Mr BRIDGES. Mr. President, I have allowed a great many of the committee amendments to be agreed to because it is apparently the will of the Senate to make progress with the bill, and not to make cuts in appropriations when it seems to me such cuts could be made. But here is a small item which was considered by the committee. I do not see any economic value to it. It has to do with where the cliff dwellers lived at one time. I do not see how it is important to the country as a whole. Will the Senator from Arizona give us some justification for the item?

Mr. HAYDEN. The justification for it is an act of Congress which was approved October 19, 1943. The National Park Service operates the Montezuma Monument nearby, and it decided that it should acquire title to the Montezuma Well property. Before World War II, they took an option on it, which will expire in another 60 days. If we are ever to buy it, it can be acquired now for less money than it can be acquired for later.

Mr. BRIDGES. What is the property? Is it not on the site where the cliff dwellers used to live?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is a sink hole mesa with water 800 feet deep. Around the sink hole once resided ancient cliff dwellers. The National Park Service nearby is operating a similar property. It is frequented by tourists and the idea of the National Park Service is that two places would more efficiently demonstrate to the American people how the ancient cliff dwellers lived, and it was also the belief that the property should be preserved as a national monument.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I should like to say to the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire that I have seen these great historic monuments, such as the Montezuma Well and the Montezuma Castle. They are among the most amazing prehistoric relics which we have. I believe that it would be very unfortunate if they were not acquired by the United States Government I hope that sometime the Senator will be in position to take a trip to that section of the country and see those beautiful monuments.

Mr. BRIDGES. According to the way the money of the Federal Government is being spent, it may be necessary sometime for us all to go there and live. It may be that the simplest way of life will be to go to that area and reinhabit the caves which were abandoned centuries ago by the cliff dwellers.

Mr. DOWNEY. I would not wish to recommend to the distinguished Senator that he anticipate occupying one of the caves because the entrance is in the sheer face of a precipice, and he would have to climb up the precipice about 150 feet before gaining the entrance. While it would be quite easy for younger men to climb the face of the cliffs, it would be very difficult for some of us who have reached a more dignified station in life, and it would also involve considerable hazard.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, does the Governor of Arizona approve this recommendation?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. We have never agreed to the enactment of legislation of any kind affecting such areas or monuments as would be here affected, without the approval of the State and the State officials involved.

Mr. BRIDGES. Why has not the State of Arizona taken over this property?

Mr. HAYDEN. Because the National Park Service has a number of similar monuments in Arizona, one of them being located nearby. For administrative purposes, the two should be combined. A small fee would be charged to tourists for admission to the property.

Mr. BRIDGES. I ask the Senator if it is not a matter of principle that the Governor and congressional delegations of the State involved should approve when we proposed taking over property such as is involved in this amendment?

Mr. HAYDEN. I cannot say what the policy is with respect to States other than Arizona. While a Member of the other House, and since I have become a Member of the Senate, I have always followed the policy, in connection with proposals to acquire lands in the State of Arizona for a public purpose such as a national monument or a national park, to consult with the proper State authorities with reference to what would be the effect on the livestock industry, for example, and we have always been able to work out an arrangememnt which was satisfactory to everyone concerned. That was done, for example, in connection with the Grand Canyon National Park. In establishing the boundary lines of the park, it was originally proposed to take in a very large area. When finally the problem was worked out there were taken into the park area the great gorge and a considerable area adjacent to it, but a great deal of range land was not included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 78, after line 19.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, as a distinguished member of the Appropriations Committee can the Senator give me any estimate of how large the Government deficit will be in the fiscal year 1947?

Mr. HAYDEN. There would be no way to know——

Mr. TAFT. Very well, I am willing to accept the statement of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. Pardon me; I thought the Senator from Ohio was directing his question to me.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator from Arizona is also a distinguished member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAYDEN. I could not ascertain the amount of deficit until I knew what the Senator's committee will determine with reference to the collection of taxes.

Mr. TAFT. The taxes are not being changed. The taxes up to the first of next July, a year from now, can be quite accurately estimated. They were estimated in the Budget at approximately $31,500,000,000, and now the estimate is somewhat higher. It is probably around $33,500,000,000. I have seen no over-all estimate of how much money we are to appropriate, or how much money we will spend according to the total budget. My recollection is that the President estimated a deficit of approximately three billion or four billion dollars during the next fiscal year, but most of those estimates are rather out of date, I believe, so far as I can judge in examining them. I wonder if the Appropriations Committee has made any estimates with reference to the total expenditures of the Government during the next 12 months.

Mr. HAYDEN. Some figures are available to the committee with regard to the total estimates for all purposes. I do not have them before me. But I can say that, so far as this particular bill is concerned, the total amount of appropriations will be below the Budget estimate.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator mean below the original estimate, or below the Budget and supplementary estimates made since?

Mr. HAYDEN. There are some supplemental estimates. No, the total will be below the original Budget estimates.

Mr. TAFT. I am not considerably concerned with this bill, but I should like to know whether anyone has taken a look at the financial situation during the next 12 months and is able to state whether we are increasing the national debt by three billion or four billion or ten billion dollars. When we get through making all the expenditures which we are now planning to make, I should like to know where we will be financially.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator has asked a very pertinent question. My belief is that no one can answer the question. We are going ahead in a very haphazard way and spending right and left. Our appropriation bills have been piling up, and the Senate will not be able to give the items the scrutiny which they should receive during the last few days of the fiscal year. The whole procedure is a typical example of what is basically wrong with the country, particularly in connection with the handling by Congress of appropriation bills.

Mr. TAFT. Since the President's Budget Committee submitted that there would be a deficit of about $4,000,000,000, we made an appropriation of $410,000,000 for temporary housing, and appropriated $400,000,000 in premium payments for veterans' housing, making $810,000,000 for housing alone. In addition to that, the armed forces pay increase must run at least a half a billion dollars, if not more, over any previous estimate. The Philippine rehabilitation bill, which was not included, runs about $625,000,000.

Mr. President, those are merely instances, and I can think of many others. Of course, the British loan will involve an expenditure of certainly a billion and a half dollars during the next fiscal year. The subsidy legislation which we are considering in connection with the OPA bill may run anywhere from $500,000,000 to $2,000,000,000.

I wonder if anyone has sat down and gone over the figures and is able to say, "If you appropriate this much more money, it is going to increase the deficit over the estimated $4,000,000,000 to $5,000,000,000 or $10,000,000,000," or whatever the figure may be.

Mr. BRIDGES. So far as I know, no one has done so, either in the executive or legislative branch of Government. It is a very pertinent and important point the Senator has raised, and it discloses the fundamental weakness of our approach to our fiscal problem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 3, after the word "including", to insert "necessary access roads for development and use of the recreational resources of Lake Texoma recreational area, Texas and Oklahoma, and"; and in line 15, after the word "Columbia", to strike out "$4,250,000" and insert "$7,400,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 11, after the word "expended", to strike out "$7,500,000" and insert "$15,000,000"; and in line 17, after the word "which", to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$6,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 7, after "(16 U. S. C. 451)", to insert "including not to exceed $362,000 for the acquisition of rights-of-way and construction of a water supply line partly outside of the boundaries of Mesa Verde National Park"; and in line 10, before the word "to", to strike out "$725,000" and insert "$2,330,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 11, to insert:

Glacier Bay National Monument, Alaska: For all expenses necessary for the construction of buildings and utilities, without regard to the act of August 24, 1912, as amended (16 U. S. C. 451), essential to the development of Glacier Bay National Monument, including expenses for the protection thereof, and the hire of aircraft, $1,250,000, to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 17, after the word "exceed", to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, after line 23, to insert:

The National Park Service is hereby authorized to acquire by transfer without exchange of funds, for 3 years beginning July 1, 1946, from the War Department, the Navy Department, or the War Assets Administration, equipment, materials, and supplies of all kinds, with an appraised value of not to exceed $2,500,000 from the surplus stores of these agencies, for use in the areas administered by the National Park Service or by any office of that Service in the United States, Alaska, and Hawaii: Provided, That the authorization in this paragraph for transfer of surplus property to the National Park Service shall not be construed to deny to veterans the priority accorded to them in obtaining surplus property under Public Law 375, approved May 3, 1946.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Fish and Wildlife Service—Salaries and expenses," on page 83, line 22, after the word "Columbia", to strike out "$252,364" and insert "$283,000"; and in line 22, after the word "sum", to strike out "$27,000" and insert "$45,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, line 7, after the word "stations", to strike out "$659,440" and insert "$780,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, line 20, after the word "services", to strike out "$331,400" and insert "$393,400."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, did not the clerk miss the amendment in line 16, page 84?

Mr. HAYDEN. That was agreed to out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment has already been agreed to.

Mr. BRIDGES. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 2, after the word "products", to strike out "$119,600" and insert "$133,700."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 9, after the word "service", to strike out "$780,615" and insert "$858,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 13, after "(16 U. S. C. 631i)", to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$75,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 21, after the word "stations", to strike out "$136,200" and insert "$198,700."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, line 8, after the name "Alaska", to strike out "$237,875" and insert "$380,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, line 23, after "(16 U. S. C. 667)", to strike out "$985,650" and insert "$1,100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 11, after the word "investigations", to strike out "$335,900" and insert "$417,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 18, after "(48 U. S. C. 192–211)", to strike out "$162,630" and insert "$186,900."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, this was an item about which there was considerable discussion. I do not see why we need an increased appropriation at this time to enforce the game laws in Alaska. It is a relatively small item, but I do not believe an increase can be justified for the enforcement of the game laws in Alaska at this time. There is no reason for it. Was there any justification?

Mr. HAYDEN. It was claimed that there were more prospectors and farmers and others in Alaska than there have been heretofore, that there had been a killing of the game, particularly by soldiers stationed there, and that the game itself was very valuable. The statement is that the over-all value of wild game in Alaska is estimated at more than $100,000,000.

Mr. BRIDGES. Perhaps if we took the controls off meats in the OPA bill, so the people could get meat, they would not have to go forth and prey on reindeer. Perhaps that is the answer.

Mr. HAYDEN. That may be. We restored the Budget estimate, upon the theory that the game needed protection, and that the additional personnel would be required to give the needed protection.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, let us have a voice vote on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 5, after the word "bulkheads", to insert "repair of damage to public roads within reservation areas occasioned by authorized operations of the Fish and Wildlife Service"; and in line 11, after the word "Refuge", to strike out "$766,000" and insert "$940,000, and in addition thereto the unexpended balance for special improvements on the Wichita Mountain Wildlife Refuge for the fiscal year 1944 is continued available for the fiscal year 1947."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 24, after the word "therewith", to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$150,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 5, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$6,235,249" and insert "$7,425,875."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Federal aid in wildlife restoration," on page 90, line 17, after "(16 U. S. C. 669–669j)", to strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$3,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, after line 20, to insert:

Wildlife management areas, California: For the acquisition, or leasing for such period of time as is deemed necessary, including the location, examination, survey, and other expenses incident thereto, of suitable areas of land or interests therein for use as wildlife management and control areas in the State of California; for the management and control of migratory waterfowl and other wildlife in connection therewith; for the administration, maintenance, and development of such areas, including the construction of dams, dikes, ditches, buildings, and other necessary improvements; for the purchase, planting, growing, and harvesting of grains and other crops for the feeding of such waterfowl and other wildlife; and for the enforcement of applicable laws protecting lands of the United States, including the act of April 15, 1924 (43 Stat. 98), the provisions of which act specifically are made applicable to areas acquired hereunder, $750,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, line 13, after the word "Service", to strike out "$8,235,249" and insert "$11,175,875"; in line 16, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$937,790" and insert "$992,790"; in line 20, after the word "of", to strike out "seventy-two" and insert "one hundred and forty-two"; on page 92, line 7, after the word "thereof", to insert "without regard to section 3709, Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5)"; and on page 93, line 2, before the word "from" to strike out "for use in Alaska."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Government in the Territories—Territory of Alaska," on page 95, line 3, after the word "binding", to strike out "$2,252,900" and insert "$3,790,400"; in line 4, after the word "which", to strike out "$72,000" and insert "$250,000"; in line 5, after the word "and", where it occurs the second time, strike out "$1,020,000" and insert "$2,300,000"; and in line 6, after the word "construction", to strike out the comma and "and no expenditures shall be made hereunder for such surveys and plans and for new construction in excess of three times the amount contributed by the Territory of Alaska for like expenditure."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 95, line 15, after the word "Alaska", to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$1,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 96, line 5, after the word "Railroad", to insert "construction (not to exceed $400,000)"; on page 97, line 8, before the word "of", to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty"; and in line 14, after the word "Alaska", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That in the operation of the facilities of the Alaska Railroad, the War Department or any other agency of the United States Government having title thereto is authorized to transfer regardless of present location and without charge to the Alaska Railroad, materials, roadway, and bridge maintenance, and other necessary equipment, locomotives and spare parts, shop facilities and machinery, supplies, rolling stock, buildings, and docks, surplus to its needs and which may be certified by the Department of the Interior as necessary for the improvement, maintenance, or operation of the Alaska Railroad: Provided further, That the authorization in this paragraph for transfer of surplus property to the Alaska Railroad shall not be construed to deny to veterans the priority accorded to them in obtaining surplus property under Public Law 375, approved May 3, 1946."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Government of the Virgin Islands," on page 99, line 11, before the word "to", to strike out "$184,640" and insert "$208,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 99, after line 21, to insert:

Municipal government of St. Croix; for defraying the deficit in the treasury of the municipal government of St. Croix, V. I., because of the excess of current expenses over current revenues for the fiscal year 1947, $142,400, to be paid in monthly installments.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, in relation to this particular item, I call attention to the fact that I have raised a question concerning it on the floor of the Senate from year to year. This year the Committee on Appropriations has taken a constructive bit of action.

This is the case of one municipality in the Virgin Islands. We not only pay a deficit after it has occurred, but we anticipate in advance that they will incur a deficit of $142,400 and each year we proceed to appropriate the money to meet an assumed deficit, in advance.

Mr. President, I think that is a very unsound practice. I do not think there is any reason why we should step in and pay the municipal expenses of a city in the Virgin Islands, any more than we would in many other places, either in the Territories or in the States. So this year the Committee on Appropriations took what I really think was constructive action, when it provided $6,000 for a report and study to ascertain what is wrong with the financing in the Virgin Islands, and particularly the municipality of St. Croix. While I still object to the appropriation, I do think we have for the first time taken some step to meet the problem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 100, after line 2, to insert:

For salaries and expenses of three municipal experts, to be appointed by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, to make a study of, and report to said committee on, the fiscal affairs of the municipality of St. Croix, V. I., $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Southwestern Power Administration," on page 100, after line 14, to strike out:

Construction: For construction of transmission lines, substations, and appurtenant facilities, and administrative expenses connected therewith; purchase (not to exceed 10 in the fiscal year 1947), hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger automobiles; and printing and binding, $7,500,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, my understanding was that there was a request that this item go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understood, and it will be passed over. The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 101, line 4, after the word "vehicles", to strike out the colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That appropriations herein made available for the purchase of passenger-carrying motor vehicles and trucks, with the exception of one passenger-carrying motor vehicle at not to exceed $2,500, shall be available only for the purchase of used or Federal surplus motor vehicles."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 101, line 22, after the word "Reclamation", to strike out "$3,500" and insert "$5,000"; in line 23, after the word "Survey", to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$4,000"; in line 24, after the word "Service", to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$2,500"; and on page 102, line 1, after the word "Service", to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$4,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 7, to strike out section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year and a day, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law: Provided further, That in cases of emergency, caused by fire, flood, storm, act of God, or sabotage, persons may be employed for periods of not more than 30 days and be paid salaries and wages without the necessity of inquiring into their membership in any organization.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 7. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law: Provided further, That in cases of emergency, caused by fire, flood, storm, act of God, or sabotage, persons may be employed for periods of not more than 30 days and be paid salaries and wages without the necessity of inquiring into their membership in any organization.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I understand section 7 is uniform with sections adopted in the agricultural appropriation bill and other bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 104, after line 17, to strike out section 8, as follows:

SEC. 8. Not to exceed a total of $80,000 of the appropriations contained in this act shall be available for expenditure for long distance telephone tolls, and not to exceed a total of $70,000 shall be available for expenditure for telegrams and cablegrams, and the savings effected thereby in the items "communication services," as set forth in the Budget estimates submitted for such appropriations shall not be diverted to other use and shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 105, line 3, to change the section number from 9 to 8; in line 13, after the word "Secretary", to strike out "$4,000" and insert "$7,000"; in line 14, after the word "Geography", to strike out "$300" and insert "$600"; in line 19, after the word "Mines", to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$2,500"; and in line 20, after "(including headquarters in Chicago)", to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$2,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 105, line 22, to change the section number from 10 to 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, line 6, to change the section number from 11 to 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, line 12, to change the section number from 12 to 11.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the bill the clerks be authorized to correct the totals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HAYDEN. I now offer three amendments on behalf of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The first amendment offered on behalf of the committee was, on page 74, line 25, after the word "research", to strike out the word "in" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 101, line 20, after "$300", to strike out "Petroleum Conservation Division" and insert in lieu thereof "Oil and Gas Division."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 105, line 13, after "$7,000", to strike out "Petroleum Conservation Division" and insert in lieu thereof "Oil and Gas Division."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, there are now three major items which were passed over. One related to the number of coal mine inspectors, and the others are power items. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is present, and the Senators from Colorado are present. I suggest we take up the question of the coal mine inspectors, on page 63, and dispose of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Under the heading "Bureau of Mines", on page 63, line 24, after the word "industry;" it is proposed to strike out "$1,483,000", and insert in lieu thereof "$1,178,000."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, an amendment adding $305,000 to the bill to enable the Bureau of Mines to hire 45 additional inspectors was adopted upon the floor of the House, and I think it represents the considered judgment of the House as to the action which should be taken by the Congress to enable the Bureau of Mines to promote safety in the coal mines.

Under the act of May 7, 1941, the Bureau of Mines was given the authority to make inspections of this kind, for the express purpose of saving the lives of coal miners operating throughout the United States. The authority given to the Bureau extends to mines employing 25 persons or more. Moreover, the Bureau of Mines has jurisdiction over all coal mines upon the public domain, no matter how many persons may be employed.

There are in the United States at least 3,100 coal mines employing 25 miners or more. The Bureau of Mines, to inspect the 3,100 mines, at the present time employs 157 inspectors. The mere recitation, Mr. President, of the number of mines employing 25 persons or more—3,100—and the number of Federal inspectors—157—makes it clear that totally inadequate provision is made for the maintenance of safety in the mines.

The amendment which was added in the House for 45 additional inspectors would increase the number to only 202. So with 202 Federal inspectors the Bureau of Mines will be expected to survey not only the 3,100 mines employing 25 miners or more, but all the mines upon the public domain.

I do not need to recite here, Mr. President, the terrible toll of life which is taken annually in the coal mines of the United States. We do not have adequate inspection. In some States it is true there are very good inspection laws. I am very proud of the fact that in my own State of Wyoming inspection is carried on by State authority at a very high standard. But that is not the case, unfortunately, in many of the coal-mining States of the Union. In small mines, where capital is not available in large amounts, the danger to the coal miner is appalling. I can see no reason, when this matter is brought so closely home to us, why we should cut down this appropriation and make it impossible for the Bureau of Mines to add 45 very much-needed inspectors.

Mr. President, I think it is hardly necessary to labor the point. It is a question of human safety, upon the one hand, and the saving of $305,000 for the Federal budget, upon the other. The maintenance of safety in the mines is worth far more to the Nation, not only from a humanitarian point of view, but, I believe, from a financial point of view. This amendment, I think, should be overwhelmingly rejected.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, I want to join with the Senator from Wyoming in urging that the number of inspectors approved by the House be not curtailed.

I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. How many underground mines are there in Kansas? Are not all the coal mines in Kansas strip mines?

Mr. REED. I do not think we have any underground mines in Kansas.

Mr. KILGORE. There are no underground coal mines in Kansas?

Mr. REED. No.

Mr. KILGORE. That is the point I want to bring out. They are strip mines. Strip mines are normal construction jobs in which steam shovels are used and in which men work safely under normal conditions. Other States have underground mines, where the work is highly hazardous, where it is hard for the inspectors to see what is going on. I have pending in the Senate at present a bill to establish minimum standards for the operation of coal mines. The supervision would come under the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. President, in my State when the Government took the mines over, after the last coal shut-down, the only mines I know of which the men stayed out of were the mines concerning which the men complained that inspection was not adequate. My State—and I am proud of it—had the greatest percentage of miners returning to work of any State in the Union. The complaint on the part of those who did not return was over the matter of inadequate inspection.

I do not want to abolish State inspection. I do not want to superimpose Federal inspection upon State inspection. But I do think that the Federal inspection keeps the State inspectors on their toes. I do not see why at this time, when we are making these appropriations, we should reduce the number of inspectors necessary to preserve human life in the underground work which is so vital to the prosperity of the Nation. I do not think the proposed reduction should be made simply to save a few thousand dollars when we are appropriating millions of dollars for the establishment of power dams and for similar construction. As I stated before on the floor, this is the only reduction I have found so far in this appropriation bill, and it is a reduction reflecting itself upon human life and its preservation. When the Senate of the United States or a committee thereof is willing to sacrifice human life and reduce appropriations which would preserve human life, while at the same time increasing other appropriations I think the Senate had better take unto itself very serious cognizance of the situation.

For that reason I very strongly oppose the amendment, and desire to add two amendments to the bill if my opposition is approved.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I find myself in thorough accord with the position taken by the able Senator from Wyoming and my able colleague from West Virginia. Usually I have been on the floor of the Senate opposing increases in the appropriation bills because I thought they were not justified. Now I find myself opposing a decrease in this appropriation bill. The reason for my opposition I consider to be entirely sound. This appropriation is primarily for the inspection of mines.

As is well known to the Members of the Senate, there are many coal mines in my State, but this matter goes not only to the protection of those who work in the mines of my State but to the protection of those who work in the mines throughout the Union. This money is to be used primarily and ultimately for the protection of human life and human health. I want to say to the Senate that when those issues are involved there is but one position to take upon them. The increase in money to be appropriated, about $300,000, is not a great amount when we consider the immense sum involved in this appropriation bill. I think a great mistake will be made if we sustain the committee amendment. If the amendment is sustained, I think that we will put ourselves in the position perhaps of bringing about a dangerous situation that may cost the loss of lives and may cost many injured bodies. I cannot subscribe to any course of that kind. I think the appropriation is fully justified because it is for inspection and for the protection of those who work in a naturally hazardous occupation. For that reason, Mr. President, I join in opposing the committee amendment which reduces the amount to be used for the inspection of mines.

Many men have lost their lives in this hazardous work. Many more have suffered injuries, the effects of which they will bear throughout the remaining years of their lives. Since we have entered this field, as properly we should as a Government, whenever anything is done to improve safety conditions I believe that such improvement should be supported. For the very reason that this is a step toward safety, and toward the protection of the lives of those who mine coal, I take my position firmly and definitely that I will not do anything which will jeopardize their safety. I take the same position with respect to the men and women who work in any occupation. Therefore, I join with Senators who have preceded me in asking that this amendment be defeated, and that there be left in the bill an appropriation which will improve inspection in the mines.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish merely to reiterate what has already been stated with respect to this amendment. I am quite familiar with the recent history of mine explosions in the United States, one of the most disastrous of which occurred in my State only a few months ago. They frequently occur.

There are those who say that it is none of the business of the Federal Government to engage in safety activities, because it is said that such work ought to be carried on by the States. I do not share that view. The States ought to do all they can, and I dare say they are not doing enough. Some of them at least are not. But that does not relieve the Federal Government of its obligation in this connection. That obligation is recognized in this bill by the appropriation for that purpose.

I do not know under what theory the committee reduced the amount by more than $300,000, but in my judgment the amendment ought not to be sustained. The provision in the bill as it passed the House is not an extravagant amount for the improvement of safety conditions in the mining of coal or any other mineral in connection with which there is an element of danger.

Recently quite a commotion was caused by the desire of the coal miners to obtain a welfare and security fund, something which has been enjoyed for years by workers in many other occupations. It seems that that program is well on its way toward consummation. Its purpose is to provide care and attention and health benefits for those who need them. The purpose of the welfare fund is not prevention. It is not designed to improve safety conditions in the mines, or provide safety appliances. Its purposes are varied. Among them is care for those who are injured, and those who are dependent upon workers who are killed. Various other features enter into the expenditure of such a fund.

The activity provided for by the appropriation under discussion is something which only the Government can undertake. Only the Government can properly enforce safety measures. It makes no difference to the coal miner how much we may argue as to the obligation of the States and the obligation of the Federal Government. If an explosion occurs and scores of miners are killed, it does not make much difference to them who has been neglectful, whether it be the State or the Federal Government.

Therefore I hope the amendment will be rejected, and that the original amount carried in the House provision will be restored.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I join with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the two Senators from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE and Mr. REVERCOMB], and the able majority leader [Mr. BARKLEY] in opposing the committee amendment.

I feel that I know the Interior Department appropriation bill. There is not an item in the bill which deserves greater consideration by the Committee on Appropriations than the item which is now under discussion.

Only a short while ago the country came to know exactly what coal mining means not only to the national economy, but to the welfare of the entire people. We are likely to become excited when the coal miners strike for what they believe to be just demands. We condemn the miner, who happens to be one of the lowest paid workers in the United States. We pay no attention whatsoever to him until a strike occurs. We do not worry about his welfare in the little mining town in Kentucky, or in my State, or in West Virginia or Tennessee.

Once in a while the newspapers carry an item to the effect that 40 miners are buried underground in a mine in Kentucky or some other State. We say, "That is too bad." I feel that it is the responsibility of Congress to make at least the meager provision suggested by the House. What the House has provided is not sufficient to protect the lives of the miners. The sum suggested by the House would not take care of one-tenth of the need for protecting human lives in the mining of coal, so that the people of Washington may have it to keep warm in the wintertime, and so that it may be available to operate the industries of the country. The Washington newspapers, my home town newspapers, and the Pittsburgh newspapers, as well as the newspapers in other cities, raise cain about a strike, but very little is said about the human being who is producing the coal, and who sometimes strikes in desperation.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURCH in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. KILGORE. Of course, the Senator is aware of the fact that the Director of the Bureau of Mines, Dr. Sayers, and others, testified that the Bureau needs approximately 45 inspectors in addition to those provided for by the House, in order to make a thorough inspection of mines and afford adequate supervision. In other words, even at best the House provision is a compromise. Even more inspectors are needed than are provided for in the House language.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Personally I do not see why the Congress should compromise when human lives are involved. I do not see why we should compromise in matters affecting the welfare of the country. What I am trying to impress upon Senators who are listening to me now is that not sufficient attention has been given to this particular class of workers, who mean so much to the national economy. We never hear this subject discussed except when the appropriation bill is before us; but when the same miners go out on strike Senators and Representatives become very much excited. I believe that if my colleagues and I were to go down into the bowels of the earth 2,000 feet or 4,000 feet and work for the wages which miners receive, we would expect at least a little attention to be given to the problem of safety. I believe that the Government should go to the extent of accepting the responsibility for human beings. That is a part of the general welfare idea under our form of government.

Mr. President, I hope that the committee amendment will be rejected, and that at least the House appropriation will be restored.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 63, line 24.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BALL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hart	Overton
Andrews	Hawkes	Pepper
Austin	Hayden	Radcliffe
Ball	Hickenlooper	Reed
Barkley	Hill	Revercomb
Bridges	Hoey	Robertson
Brooks	Huffman	Russell
Burch	Johnson, Colo.	Saltonstall
Bushfield	Johnston, S. C.	Smith
Butler	Kilgore	Stewart
Byrd	Knowland	Taft
Capper	La Follette	Taylor
Carville	Lucas	Thomas, Okla.
Chavez	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Cordon	McClellan	Tobey
Donnell	McFarland	Tunnell
Downey	McKellar	Wagner
Ellender	McMahon	Walsh
Ferguson	Millikin	White
Fulbright	Moore	Wiley
George	Morse	Willis
Gerry	Murray	Wilson
Gossett	O'Daniel
Green	O'Mahoney

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Senator from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to say in the beginning that the question of the safety of coal miners, who admittedly are engaged in one of the most hazardous occupations of any industry, is not involved at all in connection with the amendment now under discussion. I have listened with amazement to some of the remarks which have been made here today.

I happen to have a 100-percent record in regard to the safety of coal miners, so far as my service in this body is concerned. The Federal Government never had anything to do with coal mine inspection before 1941. In 1940, Senator NEELY, then a Member of the Senate from the State of West Virginia, introduced Senate bill 2420, under the terms of which, as it was later enacted into law, the mine inspections now are carried on. I was then, as now, a member of the Mines and Mining Committee. The late Senator Logan, of Kentucky, and I, in the Committee on Mines and Mining, rewrote the bill so as to remove some of the objectionable features, and it was passed by the Senate on January 18, 1940, without a record vote. I took an active part in the debate in favor of the bill. The next day a committee of coal miners, members of the United Mine Workers, who had sat in the gallery during the debate, called on me and thanked me for the efforts made to have the bill passed. It was the first move by the Federal Government looking to additional safety for the coal mines and the coal miners.

Mr. President, what is involved now is a mushroom expansion of a Federal bureau which is doing service parallel to that already done in the States. On that point I wish to refer to the debate.

The distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the present majority leader, said, in response to a question propounded by Senator NEELY:

> If I correctly understand the bill—

He was speaking of Senate bill 2420—

> it does not give the Secretary of the Interior authority to do anything as the result of the investigation and inspection which he makes.

Mr. President, that situation is true today. The Secretary of the Interior has no authority to do anything as a consequence of the expenditure of the money which it is proposed to appropriate. The Senator from Kentucky had previously said, and I am reading from page 476 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 18, 1940:

> As I understand the purpose of the bill, it does not seek to interfere with the agencies of any State that are now engaged in the inspection of mines?
>
> Mr. NEELY. It does not.
> Mr. BARKLEY. Nor to superimpose the proposed inspection above the State inspection. The measure simply authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to investigate, by inspection through his agencies, the conditions in coal mines—

And so forth. Mr. President, the subject which was discussed most fully on this floor on that date pertained to the results which might flow from superimposing Federal inspection over State inspection. While I was making my record for safety of coal miners, neither the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] nor the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB] were Members of this body. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], who spoke so eloquently earlier in the day, was a Member of this body, but did not participate in the debate. That statement applies also to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ].

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. President, it so happens that I was a Member of this body at that time and took an active part in the passage of the bill which first gave the Federal Government authority to make examination of conditions in coal mines, and I received the thanks of the United Mine Workers for my efforts.

I now yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. KILGORE. The State of Kansas, I presume, has a department of agriculture, has it not?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. KILGORE. And that department makes inspections of such commodities as meat, does it not?

Mr. REED. I believe so.

Mr. KILGORE. And Federal inspectors also inspect the meat when it gets to the packing houses, do they not?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to confine my yielding to the Senator from West Virginia for the purpose of allowing him to ask questions which I can answer in simple terms.

Mr. KILGORE. I have asked a question, Mr. President. After the meat gets to the packing house, a Federal inspector there inspects it, does he not?

Mr. REED. We do not usually have a State inspector and a Federal inspector inspect the same meat.

Mr. KILGORE. They work together, do they not?

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President; that is not true.

Mr. KILGORE. Wait a minute. Is it not natural to assume that a Federal inspection of coal-mine conditions would result in increasing the safety in coal mines? The State of Kansas may condemn cattle and require that they be destroyed if diseased. It can also inspect meat after it reaches the packing house. The Federal inspectors may also inspect the meat even after State inspectors have inspected it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, later I shall read a letter from officials of the State of West Virginia to the effect that this proposal would not further the program of coal mine safety.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, may I ask who signed the letter?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not bother him or try to annoy him while he was making his remarks in connection with this bill. My connection with the matter antedates the connection of the Senator from West Virginia by a considerable period of time. In the annals of the Senate, my record is clearer upon the safety of coal miners than is the record of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, may I answer the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I decline to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. KILGORE. Very well.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the question uppermost in the minds of the Members of the Senate back in 1940 when Senate bill 2420 was being discussed, was that of giving, for the first time, authority to the Federal Government to enter into a field which had been handled theretofore entirely by the States. The question is not one of money. It is not one of expense as opposed to human life. My record is clear on that point. The matter is one of importance so far as the Federal and State authorities are concerned and a matter of importance in obtaining results from expenditures made by the Federal Government.

I return to the record to which I have referred. In addition to what had been said by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] said, on page 477 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 18, 1940:

> In my opinion—of course, my opinion is only superficial, because this is the first time

I have looked at this measure or had an opportunity to consider it—there is a question as to whether or not we are starting out upon another road to the left and attempting either to break down or entirely disregard the constitutional separation of the two governments if we undertake to exercise a power of inspection for the purpose of passing laws regulating the conduct of the business of mining, which has been repeatedly established to be a concern of the several States and not a concern of the Federal Government.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] said, on page 479:

I have every sympathy with the purposes of the bill; but what concerns me is that we seem to be granting to one Government department complete investigatory powers which are already granted to another, so that if the bill is passed we may have two officials overlapping and doing the same work.

When it came to the question of cost, Senator Harrison, of Mississippi, offered an amendment to the bill which would have limited the expense to $25,000 a year. I asked the then Senator from Mississippi not to press his amendment. The limitation would have made the entire proposal absurd. No estimate had been made by anyone as to the expense which would ultimately be involved. But the sum we had in mind was $200,000 or $300,000, and I am able to say that Mr. John L. Lewis, who desired that the bill be passed, thought that the cost would be in the neighborhood of $250,000. I never talked to Mr. Lewis about it, but I make that statement upon what I believe to be reliable authority as to what was Mr. Lewis' position.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Kansas a question?

Mr. REED. The entire question at the time was whether or not the Federal Government, in the event that the bill became law, would start encroaching on what had been theretofore a State function, whether there would be a duplication of effort, and how much money would be spent. If I was useful in that particular debate, it was by quieting the fears of my colleagues on the point, first, that there would be no duplication, and secondly, that the additional expense would be nominal.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] entered the debate at that point. The bill carried authority for an appropriation with no limitation being fixed. In the interest of history, I believe that I should say that the bill which passed the Senate that day died in the other House. However, in the early part of 1941 the other House pased a bill which was substantially the same as the bill which had been passed by the Senate. When the bill reached the Senate, the Senate passed it.

On page 483 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 18, 1940, the Senator from Maine, speaking upon the question of cost and the authorization which was carried in the bill, said:

I disagree with the Senator as to the facts. However, whatever the facts may be, I still insist that it is unwise legislation to give authority to any official of the Government to appoint without limitation the employees he may seek. I also say that it is unwise to make an unlimited authorization. It is not common practice. I think the common practice is—and I think, if the Senator will look over the bills which receive consideration by this body, he will so find—that the authorizations are definite in amount. If they are not, they ought to be.

So, at this point, 6 years after the matter was first mentioned, I compliment the Senator from Maine upon the soundness of his position and the great necessity, if we have not always done it, of observing the limitation he suggested and writing it in the bill.

Mr. President, Senator Harrison, of Mississippi, offered an amendment to limit this expenditure to $25,000. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who is not present at the moment, and I urged him not to insist upon the limitation; so no limitation was put into the bill.

On reliable authority I am able to say that Mr. Lewis' view of the expense—and he was the principal instigator of the bill—was that it would be $250,000 a year.

Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate cut this sum back to $1,178,000, which is the Budget estimate. The committee did not reduce in any respect, except that it cut the amount named in an amendment adopted on the floor of the House back to the Budget estimate, that is all. I say without any fear of contradiction from any reliable source that the action taken, if the committee is sustained, will not affect the safety of a single coal miner in any coal mine in any State in the United States.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REED. I shall be happy to yield in a moment. While I am on this particular line I should like to finish.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that I have here expressions of opinion from the experts at the head of the mine inspection departments of many States, and because both the senior Senator from West Virginia and the junior Senator have shown an active interest in this matter, I wish to read a letter dated June 12, 1946, this month, signed by G. R. Spindler, Chief of the Department of Mines of the State of West Virginia. Mr. Spindler's letter reads:

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA, DEPARTMENT OF MINES,
Charleston, June 12, 1946.

HON. CLYDE M. REED,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR REED: This will acknowledge receipt of your telegram of May 31, requesting views with respect to the further expansion of the coal mines' inspection activities of the United States Bureau of Mines.

I am taking the liberty to enclose a copy of a paper delivered recently by Mr. J. V. Sullivan, secretary of the West Virginia Coal Association, the first part of which has some bearing on the subject and which I believe you will find to be of interest.

For your information the current annual appropriation for the maintenance and operation of a State department of mines in the State of West Virginia is $386,000. The State department, charged with the responsibility for the inspection of coal mines and the enforcement of the mining laws of the State, has a staff of 60 full-time inspectors actively engaged in actual inspection and enforcement work. These are men of experience and thoroughly familiar with the mining conditions and personnel of their respective districts. On the assumption that mine inspection can be no better than the personal qualifications of the men making the inspections, I have every reason to believe these men can and do turn in a good job.

The United States Bureau of Mines has rendered a valuable service as a research, educational, and fact-finding agency and probably can continue to make its most valuable contributions in those fields. In the extension or expansion of its inspection and enforcement activities and authority, it is inevitable that there will be duplication of effort and conflict of purpose as related to the State inspection agency with the effect that the over-all program of coal mine safety will have been retarded rather than furthered. The centralization of inspection and enforcement authority in agencies far removed from the actual scene of mining operations has little to recommend it in view of the variable conditions and interests applying to the coal mining industries on a Nation-wide scale.

These views represent personal opinion and should not be construed to be unmindful of the past contributions of the United States Bureau of Mines or blind to its potentialities for future service. It is, however, my thought that division of authority or duplication of effort can serve no useful purpose and that mine inspection and enforcement of safety laws and regulations is appropriately a State function.

Very truly yours,
G. R. SPINDLER,
Chief, Department of Mines.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in connection with the letter he has just read?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I understand that that letter is from the chief of inspection in the State department of mines. I cast no reflection whatever on the chief of inspection. He is a State inspector. Some time ago the National Government recognized the duty, under the Bureau of Mines, to make Federal inspections.

Mr. REED. Let me say to the Senator from West Virginia that I am much more familiar with that than is the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I am sure the Senator is, and I am not suggesting that he is not familiar with it. But I do say that if inspection is worth anything—and it does have value in the prevention of accidents—then certainly the addition of 45 Federal inspectors should have some effect in eliminating the dangers in mines. In West Virginia, within the last year, in McDowell County, there was a terrible accident as the result of an explosion in a mine. I do not charge that against the inspectors; but if inspection will help prevent explosions, certainly additional inspectors will work a good end toward eliminating them.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia indulges in sophistry. I do not like to use that word, but that is almost what it is. As a matter of fact, the assurance was given Senators in charge of the bill that there would be no effort to duplicate the efforts of the State mine agencies

Mr. REVERCOMB. When was that assurance given?

Mr. REED. In 1940, when we passed the bill which gave the Federal Government the first opportunity or authority to do anything along this line.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The Senator realizes——

Mr. REED. Let me finish. Today, according to the best opinion I can obtain—which I admit is possibly open to error, but it is the best I can get—the various State mining agencies have 228 inspectors altogether, in all the States. According to figures which we obtained from the Bureau of Mines, the Federal Government has 157 inspectors. They are asking for 45 more. If they get them, the Federal Bureau of Mines will then have 202 inspectors, as against 228 for all the State mining inspection agencies. This is the most astonishing duplication of effort and waste of money that has come to my attention.

Mr. President, let me read a letter from the Pennsylvania Department of Mines. If there is one thing I have learned during my connection with this matter it is that everyone agrees that Pennsylvania has a first-class State mining inspection department, equal in all respects to the Federal Bureau of Mines, so far as comparison can be made. In a telegram dated June 6, the State mine inspector of Pennsylvania replied to a telegram as follows:

I agree with you that coal-mine inspection is the responsibility of the State. When the Bureau of Mines was organized its function was to act in an advisory capacity and do research in solving some of the intricate problems of coal mining for which the States had neither the personnel nor equipment. In that capacity they performed a duty which was invaluable. They developed the rock dusting of coal mines, investigation and research in solving some of the intricate prob-explosion-proof mining equipment, taught first aid and mine rescue, and as such rendered a real service to the mining industry. When Federal inspection law was pending this department opposed it on grounds that it was an unnecessary expenditure of money which should be used in future expanding the Bureau's research program.

That is, the research program of the Bureau of Mines.

The Bureau's activities under the Federal Mine Inspection Act was not kept within the intent and purpose of the act.

Mr. President, I wish to emphasize that. It is true. I am one of the Members of the Senate, the one Member presently in the Senate, most responsible for the original act, and the activities of the Bureau of Mines have not been kept within the intent and purpose of the act. The telegram continues:

There is overlapping and duplication of inspection work that should be done by the State and the increase in appropriation is going to further increase the unnecessary duplication of Federal inspection. If Federal inspection activities are expanded and this vast amount of money appropriated some States will leave the entire burden of inspection to the Federal Government who has no authority nor law to enforce their recommendations. United States Bureau of Mines can render and has rendered a great service to the mining industry; however, I urge that the policing of the mines be left to the States and that the activities of the Bureau be curtailed as originally intended, as you understood it would be when you supported passage of Federal mine inspection bill.

PENNSYLVANIA DEPARTMENT OF MINES,
RICHARD MAIZE, Secretary.

That was my understanding, that was my assurance, as one of those in charge of the bill when the original bill passed the Senate in 1940.

Mr. President, I have a letter in my hand from the chief mine inspector of Virginia, dated June 4. He was delayed in making his answer because of being away from home when the telegram from me arrived, but he wrote me as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,
BOARD OF EXAMINERS, DIVISION OF MINES,
Big Stone Gap, June 4, 1946.

Hon. CLYDE M. REED,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I regret that I was not at home at the time of your telegram and therefore delayed in answering it. Under Virginia laws, we are required to inspect each coal mine at least every 90 days and are able to do this with our present force. We have sufficient power, under our State laws, to enforce any of our safety recommendations and have no trouble in getting full cooperation from the industry in this work.

In my opinion, there is quite a bit of duplication of efforts on the part of our inspectors and those of the Bureau of Mines. There certainly is no use of both these agencies continuing to carry on the same work and I can see no need of the increased use of Federal funds unless the State inspection forces are to be eliminated entirely.

Very truly yours,

C. P. KELLY,
Chief Mine Inspector.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD, without taking the time of the Senate to read it, copy of telegram from Harry Thomas, chief, Kentucky Department of Mines and Minerals.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEXINGTON, KY., June 4, 1946.

Senator CLYDE M. REED,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Federal mine inspection under contract agreement between Coal Mines Administrator Krug and United Mine Workers Lewis will, of course, duplicate State inspection and State enforcement and is further encroachment on States rights. Kentucky annual appropriation for mine inspection is now $200,000 per year which we think ample for complete inspection and enforcement. Federal inspection and recommendatory and advisory basis without enforcement authority, we think of value, but also somewhat a duplication. Approximately 20 percent of Kentucky's production does not come under Krug-Lewis agreement because of being produced under Progressive Miners Union contract or no contract at all, and hence not under Federal inspection with enforcement. We do not favor so much duplication of effort and expense and insist that mine inspection is and should continue to be State responsibility. Krug-Lewis agreement will probably only apply while Government operates the mines as ratification by coal mine operators doubtful. Further increase in Federal appropriation because of temporary labor contract between Krug and Lewis which covers only UMWA mines in our opinion unjustifiable.

KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND MINERALS,
HARRY THOMAS, Chief.

Mr. REED. I have a similar telegram from the Alabama Mining Institute, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., June 10, 1946.

Hon. CLYDE M. REED,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Senate Appropriations Committee now considering increasing Mine Bureau expenditures. Increase will certainly lead to duplication State inspection, wasted effort and confusion. It will lead to replacing State inspection with Federal inspection. We are opposed to this principle and practice, and urge you oppose increase of Federal funds for this purpose.

ALABAMA MINING INSTITUTE,
I. W. ROUZER, President.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, no one appreciates more than I do the difficulty of making an argument in favor of sound governmental practices, including the expenditure of money, when that argument runs head-on into a situation where those who disagree can talk about safety. I hope no one will take offense, because I do not mean it in an offensive sense, when I recall the statement of a world statesman, I have forgotten his name, who said, "Patriotism is the refuge of scoundrels." I do not mean that any of my colleagues are scoundrels. What the one who made that statement meant was that when one has no real argument, one can talk about being a patriot. I think in this case there is no real argument why the recommendation and the amendment of the committee should be overturned. The committee has followed the Budget estimate. There is sound reason for it.

Before I take my seat I wish to say that I have discussed this matter with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], who is chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining, of which I am the ranking minority member. This is a situation which ought to be investigated by a committee of the Congress.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I correct in understanding that the amount contained in the House bill was carried in an amendment offered on the floor of the House by a very prominent Republican from my State, Mr. DIRKSEN?

Mr. REED. That is my understanding, and I think it is correct.

I discussed this matter with the Senator from Pennsylvania, as I said. The expenditure by the Bureau of Mines in connection with this work, which is largely a duplication of the work being carried on by the States, represents an increase much greater than anyone ever anticipated. Today, if we increase this amount, the Federal Government, under authority granted only 4 years ago, will be spending almost as much money as all the States combined. The Government then will have 202 inspectors as against 220 inspectors of all States. So the Senator from Pennsylvania and I agreed that there should be an inquiry made into this matter, and I shall prepare a resolution directing the Committee on Mines and Mining to make an investigation of the whole subject and determine the extent of the duplication, and develop so far as we can the value of the service rendered by the Bureau of Mines, so that we can report back to the Senate, after careful investigation and careful thought and study, what is the proper policy to pursue.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. A few moments ago the Senator from Kansas, in arguing to sustain his position, made the statement that there was no sound argument advanced against his position by those who opposed him on the floor.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Kansas is still of that opinion.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Perhaps the Senator from Kansas is, but, from my viewpoint, he has certainly closed his ears and his thought, if I may say so, to arguments which I believe to be quite sound. The Senator from Kansas has stated that he originally sustained the idea of the passage of this law in 1940 which would allow the appointment of Federal inspectors. Is that correct?

Mr. REED. So as to give the Secretary of the Interior, through the Bureau of Mines, authority to make an inquiry and inspection of mines. That is correct; yes.

Mr. REVERCOMB. When the Senator supported that bill in 1940 he believed, did he not, that mine inspections might result in good by promoting safety in the operations of the mines?

Mr. REED. I had been Governor of a State which at that time had deep-shaft mines. I am quite familiar with mine inspection, although Kansas never even remotely got into the class of West Virginia in the matter of mining coal.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The Senator at that time had in his State deep-shaft mines, but today that State has only strip mines.

Mr. REED. When I was Governor that was true; yes. But not when the bill was passed.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The Senator certainly is not going to take the position that because there are no deep-shaft mines in Kansas that those States where there are deep-shaft mines, if they are dangerous, should not have consideration?

Mr. REED. I did not take that position in 1940, and I am not taking it now.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The able Senator from Kansas took the position in 1940 that mine inspections have resulted in much good. There have been a great number of mines developed since then, and more men are employed in the mines today, and if inspection was good in 1940, certainly an additional 45 inspectors added to the number of Federal inspectors is a good thing in 1946. Is that not a sound argument?

Mr. REED. I do not think so. I think the Federal Bureau of Mines has many unnecessary inspectors now which it should not have. They are drawing their pay, I presume, every month, but are not rendering any useful service toward the safety of those engaged in mining.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The purpose of mine inspection is to prevent dangers such as explosions, loose and falling materials, and the other dangers inherent in that hazardous work. If inspection is a guard against the dangers I have spoken of, why would not an increased number of and more frequent inspections, closer inspections, guard more efficiently against such dangers?

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I should like to answer the question asked by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CORDON. I want to ask a question in connection with that question.

Mr. REED. Very well; I yield to the Senator from Oregon. Perhaps he will answer the question of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CORDON. Am I correct in my understanding that the only authority the Federal Government has under the act of 1940 is that of making an inspection and then making a recommendation, which recommendation may be acted upon or which may not be acted upon?

Mr. REED. That is correct. The Federal Government today does not have the slightest authority to force any action on the part of a mine operator or a State mining department under the law as it now stands.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. When the mines are being operated by the Government, the inspectors have a great deal more power than that, do they not?

Mr. REED. During a temporary period when the mines might be operated under a contract between the Government and Mr. John L. Lewis, I do not know just how they would handle that situation.

Mr. President, while I am on that subject, let me say that I doubt whether any contract that John L. Lewis could make with the Government as a temporary operator of mines can impose anything upon State law or change State law or change the authority of the States, including West Virginia, over its mines.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I agree with the view expressed that such a contract could not change the State laws. But if the power of inspection and the right of suggestion as to safety exist, certainly the State authorities are not going to ignore a dangerous condition which may be pointed out to them under Federal inspection.

Mr. REED. Most of the States have power—I know the State of Kansas has—which is lodged in the mine inspector, who carries the authority of the government, so that the mine inspector in Kansas, and I have no doubt in West Virginia, can enforce with the power of the State the findings he has made upon inspection. The Federal Government cannot do that.

Let me say to the Senator from West Virginia that the record for safety in coal mines has been constantly improving. Coal mining is still a hazardous occupation. Make no mistake about that. I think, in fact, in our whole history the blackest chapter is that which has to do with the mining of bituminous coal. The operators, with some exceptions in my active contact with them, are not very receptive to proposed safety measures. The power of the State has had to be used to force them to adopt some measures. I have always been for the adoption of such measures. I have supported such action in this body. I supported it when I was governor of my State. I have supported every law that has been written to promote the safety of miners in Kansas. But, we come to a point where there is waste and extravagance and duplication which do not result in providing additional safety for the men.

I hold in my hand a table showing casualties in the mines; fatalities, and injuries less than fatalities, measured both by the number of tons of coal mined and the number of men employed. There has been a constant improvement in the safety of the mines. Fewer men are being injured or killed per million tons of coal mined, or when measured against the number of men employed. There will never come a time when fatalities and accidents in coal mines will be entirely eliminated.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Of course we want improvement, but will not the Senator agree with me that so long as the danger exists in this naturally hazardous occupation, everything possible ought to be done to meet and eliminate it, and that ought to be done, whether the inspection comes under the Federal Government or the State government, or from whatever source it comes. The prime purpose is to eliminate the danger.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator from West Virginia want to spend money from which no result flows so far as safety is concerned?

Mr. REVERCOMB. Of course I do not, and I do not subscribe to the idea that cutting out 45 inspectors is going to increase the chances of finding dangers and eliminating them.

Mr. REED. No one is proposing to cut out 45 inspectors. The budget never allowed for them to begin with. As the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] called to our attention, the amendment in the House increasing the appropriation by $305,000 for the purpose of employing 45 additional inspectors, was inserted on the floor of the House. It did not receive the approval of the committee in the House. In the Senate the committee cut the appropriation back to the Budget estimate, and that is all it did. That is all that is now proposed.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The effect of adopting this amendment would be to prevent the employment of 45 additional inspectors.

Mr. REED. Who are unnecessary.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I cannot agree with the Senator.

Mr. REED. How does the Senator know? Has he made a closer study than I have?

Mr. REVERCOMB. I do not know how close a study the Senator has made. I know that he has studied the question. I am deeply interested in it. It seems to me that 45 additional inspectors would certainly have some effect upon the finding of dangers and their consequent elimination of them.

Mr. REED. Why not make it 145?

Mr. REVERCOMB. I am willing to do that if it would eliminate that much more danger.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 63, line 24.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words about the pending amendment. In the first place, the testimony before the committee shows that Dr. Sayers, the able Director of the Bureau of Mines, testified that at the time the act approved May 7, 1941, relating to certain inspections and investigations in coal mines for the purpose of obtaining information relating to health and safety conditions, accidents and occupational diseases therein, and for other purposes, was under consideration by the committees of Congress, he and Mr. Harrington informed the committees that in order properly to carry out the duties which would devolve upon the Bureau of Mines if the bill became law, 250 inspectors would be required. In his testimony before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations which considered this bill, he reiterated the statement and stood by the original estimate that 250 inspectors were necessary if the Bureau of Mines were effectively to carry out the responsibilities which had devolved upon it as a result of the passage of the act of May 7, 1941.

It is true that the act does not give to the Bureau of Mines or its inspectors any power to enforce the recommendations growing out of their inspections of the hazardous conditions existing in mines in the United States. However, the manner in which the results of those inspections are made public has a very great effect, in my opinion, upon improving the bad conditions which every person who is familiar with the mining of coal knows exist in that industry. According to Dr. Sayers' testimony more than 50,000 Bureau of Mines recommendations relating to safety and hazardous conditions in the mines of the United States have been placed in effect. It has been claimed that the additional inspectors who would be provided by the House language are not necessary. However, Dr. Sayers testified as follows:

Dr. SAYERS. We will need about 250 to do the work that we see in front of us. There is a total between 2,300 and 3,000 relatively large coal mines in the United States—those employing 25 or more persons—there are between fourteen and fifteen thousand coal mines total in the United States. Many of those are small. Many have less than 25 employees but those are the ones that are more than ordinarily hazardous, and also the ones that are receiving minimum inspection.

I talked with one of our district inspectors yesterday as to how many of those he had in his area and he told me his organization was inspecting about 400 mines a year and he had in addition between 350 and 375 of these small mines. I asked him how many more personnel he would need to inspect those additional mines and whether they should be inspected and he felt they should be.

TWO HUNDRED FIFTY MINE INSPECTORS IS MINIMUM NEEDED

He felt that we needed as many additional men as he has now. The 250 total previously mentioned is the minimum needed if we are to carry out the intent of the law.

Referring to the act of May 7, 1941.

I attended the executive hearings when the bill was passed and I made out calculations with Mr. Harrington as to how many men would be needed and 250 is as small as we can get along with if we are to do a job.

It must be remembered that out of whatever sum is appropriated will have to come the 14-percent pay increase which was recently approved by the President of the United States. I wish to point out what Dr. Sayers had to say in that connection:

DISCUSSION AS TO EFFECT OF RECENT FEDERAL PAY ACT

It is going to cost 14 percent more than the total amount we have here if we are to do the work here. If we add another 45 men here that would be $1,483,000, of which approximately $1,125,000 would be salaries. Add 14 percent to the salaries and you need nearly $160,000. If this $160,000 must be absorbed, it will require the dismissal of about 25 inspectors.

Mr. President, the manner in which the results of these inspections are brought to the attention not only of the operators, but also of the men who work in the mines affected by the recommendations and by the results of the inspections, together with the publicity which is given to them, in my opinion has proved very effective. The results of the inspections are placed on bulletin boards adjacent to or on the property of the mines, so that the men who are employed there may know if the Federal inspectors have found conditions which are hazardous to life and limb.

I cannot agree with the Senator from Kansas, who says that this is simply a duplication of effort, and that no good has come from it. As every person knows, coal mining is a hazardous industry. It is one of the most hazardous, if not the most hazardous in the United States. We have already adopted the legislation to which the Senator from Kansas has referred, and which places the responsibility for inspection upon the Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Bureau of Mines. I submit that anyone who is familiar with Dr. Sayers' work must know that he is not given to extravagant statements or to claiming more for any particular activity of his Bureau than he can prove from the facts. When he stated that more than 50,000 of the recommendations of his Bureau had been placed in effect to improve safety conditions in this very hazardous industry, I have every confidence that he was stating the truth.

So, Mr. President, in view of the situation which exists so far as concerns the men who work in this very hazardous industry and their families, and in view of the 14 percent which will have to come out of this appropriation because of the increased pay act, I say that in my opinion the amount which the House provided is entirely justified. I contend that this work is important in helping to remove some of the hazards which exist in mines. I hope that the committee amendment will be rejected.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, since the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] refused to answer my question, I think I owe it to myself and my State, since he also introduced a letter from the State mine inspector, to say that the very fact that the State objects to any counter-inspection by Federal authority—even in my own State—is evidence enough to me that there should be an over-all, double-check inspection. If the inspection in the State were sufficient, there would be no objection to a Federal inspection. We have had some pretty serious mine disasters in West Virginia during the past 12 months, which I think justify additional safety precautions.

When it is said that there is a duplication, I sometimes think of a recent occurrence. In my State the State department of agriculture passed a certain commodity after inspecting it, and stated that it was pure. The Federal bureau which inspected it stated that it was impure. That was a protection to the consumer.

In this work a double inspection to protect the worker is none too much. I think the Senate would do well to listen to the men who represent those who work in the mines.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 63, line 24.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago a vote was taken on the committee amendment on page 63, in line 24. I am in favor of the larger appropriation for coal mine inspections.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, I should like to offer one or two perfecting amendments at this point.

On page 63, line 13, I offer an amendment to strike out "$91,000" and insert "$107,000." That does not affect the total appropriation. It is simply in line with the increased appropriation for administrative expenses. This amendment was suggested to me in the Appropriations Committee as a perfecting amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. The idea is to make the amount correspond, relatively, to the increased appropriation for administrative expenses.

Mr. KILGORE. That is correct.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on page 63, line 15, after the semicolon, to insert the words "purchase (not to exceed five)."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

NAVAL ASSISTANCE TO THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURCH in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5356) to provide assistance to the Republic of China in augmenting and maintaining a naval establishment, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WALSH, Mr. TYDINGS, and Mr. TOBEY conferees on the part of the Senate.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 6335) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I suggest that we return now to the beginning of the bill and take up the amendments which have been passed over.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Before that is done, I wish to call attention to the fact that the supply bill for the Department of Agriculture contained a provision exempting an appropriation of the kind we have just made from the provisions of section 14 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946. The Senator from Arizona will recall that the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945 was amended by section 14 (a) of the act of 1946 in the following manner:

PERSONNEL CEILINGS

SEC. 14. (a) Section 607 of the Federal Pay Act of 1945 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"(g) (1) In carrying out the provisions of subsection (b) of this section—

"(A) with respect to the departments (other than the Department of War and the Department of the Navy), establishments, and agencies (including Government-owned or controlled corporations) in the executive branch, the Director shall so determine the numbers of full-time civilian employees and the man-months of part-time employment on the basis of the relative needs of such departments, establishments, and agencies for personnel, that the aggregate number of such civilian employee (including the full-time equivalent of man-months of part-time employment) shall not exceed (i) 528,975 for the quarter beginning October 1, 1946; (ii) 501,771 for the quarter beginning January 1, 1947; (iii) 474,567 for the quarter beginning April 1, 1947; and (iv) 447,363 after June 30, 1947."

It is obvious that that provision would defeat the very purpose of the amendment which has just been made, in effect, by the vote of the Senate on the amendment as reported by the committee. So we should do what was done by the Senate in passing the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill.

Therefore, I hope the Senator from Arizona will agree to an amendment at the proper place in the bill, as follows:

Section 14 (a) of Public Law 390, Seventy-ninth Congress, the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946, shall not apply to employees under such appropriations as are provided in this law, nor to persons who are employed in the protection of life, health, or property.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I have given considerable thought to this subject. If we adopt to every other appropriation bill an amendment similar to the one which was added to the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill, we shall be right back where we started, because the amendment exempts the particular department from the effect of the law. If we add to the pending bill a similar amendment, of course, we shall have to do the same with the next appropriation bill, and the next one, and so on; and when we get through with all of them, we shall have completed the circle and shall have gained nothing.

On the other hand, I had no objection to trying it out on the one bill, the appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture, to see how it would work.

I am satisfied that the way this matter must ultimately be corrected is by some action upon a deficiency bill which will take care primarily of the going-away or discharge pay of employees, because the effect of the provision of law to which the Senator from Wyoming has directed our attention is as follows: If the number of Federal Government employees is largely curtailed, when they leave the service they will be entitled to be paid for all the time they have failed to use up by way of vacations, sick leave, and so forth. If that money were to come out of the remaining appropriations, it would not even be possible to employ as many employees as are authorized by law. So some question has been raised as to whether the employment limitations provided in section 14 (a) of the Federal Pay Act of 1946 may prevent the Department of the Interior from maintaining sufficient employment to carry out the programs proposed in this bill. It is my understanding that the employment limitations provided by Public Law 390 took into account the employment requirements under the Budget estimates submitted by the President, and that therefore there is no reason to presume that the Department of the Interior would receive employment limitations from the Bureau of the Budget which would prevent the Department from carrying out the programs which are authorized by this bill.

It has been suggested that a provision be added to this bill similar to section 6 of the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill. It would be unsound, in my opinion, to add that type of provision to all the supply bills pending before the Senate, and therefore I am not proposing such an amendment to this bill. If the Director of the Bureau of the Budget is unable to make determinations under the provisions of section 14 (a) which are sufficient to provide for the employment needs of the program authorized in supply bills enacted by this Congress, relief should be sought through the submission of necessary exemption requests to the Congress for consideration in a deficiency bill.

So, correction will have to be made, and it should be made upon a deficiency bill. I think we can settle that part of the matter in that way.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. My point is, of course, to protect the 45 additional inspectors for which the Senate has just provided by the amendment it has adopted. Instead of offering the amendment which I have just recited in my inquiry of the Senator, I shall be content to offer an amendment which will apply solely to persons who are employed in the protection of life, health, or property. I thought perhaps the Senator from Arizona would agree to take such an amendment to conference.

Mr. HAYDEN. That would be a very different proposition.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I realize that.

Mr. HAYDEN. The protection of life, health, or property is one thing; but to say that we shall go through all the appropriation bills and shall add the same amendment to one appropriation bill after another would get us right back to where we started, and would have the effect of accomplishing nothing.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; it would have the effect of repealing the act of 1946.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, Mr. President, I modify my amendment, and offer it in the following form:

Section 14 (a) of Public Law 390, Seventy-ninth Congress, the Federal Employees Pay bill of 1946, shall not apply to persons who are employed under any appropriation in this act in the protection of life, health or property.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I now request that the Senate return to the beginning of the bill and commence to take up the amendments which have been passed over. If the clerk will turn to page 2, I believe the amendment beginning in line 21 on that page is the first one which was passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment which has been passed over will be stated.

The first amendment passed over was, on page 2, beginning in line 21, to strike out—

PETROLEUM CONSERVATION DIVISION

For all salaries and expenses necessary for administering and enforcing the provisions of the act of February 22, 1935, as amended (15 U. S. C., ch. 15A), and for cooperation with Federal and State authorities in the production and conservation of oil and gas, including personal services in the District of Columbia; travel expenses; contract stenographic reporting services; stationery and office supplies; not to exceed $2,500 for printing and binding; and the maintenance, operation, and repair of passenger-carrying vehicles, $216,908.

And insert:

OIL AND GAS DIVISION

Oil and Gas Division: For all expenses necessary for coordinating and unifying policies and administration of Federal activities relative to oil, gas, and synthetic fuels, including cooperation with the petroleum industry and State authorities in the production, processing, and utilization of petroleum and petroleum products, natural gas, and synthetic fuels and the compilation of technical reports thereon, for administering and enforcing the provisions of the act of February 22, 1935, as amended (15 U. S. C., ch. 15A); and for the liquidation of the Petroleum Administration for War; including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; not to exceed $10,000 for employment of a director without regard to the civil service and classification laws; travel expenses; contract stenographic reporting services; printing and binding; and the purchase (not to exceed five), maintenance, operation, and repair of passenger automobiles; $449,516.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, in addition to what I said yesterday in opposition to this amendment, let me say I think it is totally unnecessary and inadvisable. If there is a plan to be submitted, as outlined by the Secretary of the Interior, I think it should go to the appropriate congressional committee, for it to consider the matter and to give the oil industry an opportunity to present its views.

Thus far, nothing has been presented except the plan of the Department of the Interior and the proposal to retain Mr. Davies as an employee. To increase the appropriation by some 200,000-odd dollars is a total waste of money, and will serve no useful purpose, in my judgment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, to repeat the substance of what I said yesterday, let me say that the Special Committee To Investigate Petroleum Resources at a hearing on Monday had the testimony of the Under Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Chapman, and the testimony of Mr. Ralph K. Davies with respect to the purpose and effect of the proposed Oil and Gas Division. As chairman of the Special Committee To Investigate Petroleum Resources, I was anxious to be certain that the new division would not engage in the establishment of any new policies, and that its operations would be confined to the coordination of the work of the departments and agencies of the Government which have to do with petroleum. There are approximately 27 such agencies. I was perfectly well satisfied by what the Under Secretary of the Interior and Mr. Davies had to say, namely, that the purpose and policy of the new Oil and Gas Division will be precisely to confine itself to the coordination of the work of the agencies, and that if any recommendations as to policy are to be made, they will be submitted to the Congress of the United States.

At my request, Mr. Davies furnished for the record of the committee the Executive order by which the Petroleum Administration for War has been liquidated, the letter from the President requesting that the Secretary of the Interior undertake the coordination here provided for, and certain other documents.

I then addressed the following question to Mr. Davies, and I received the following reply:

The CHAIRMAN. Now, then, do I correctly interpret these various documents to mean, first, that the war controls have been definitely ended; second, that there is no purpose to set up any form of peacetime control over the petroleum industry; third, that it is the object of the administration to coordinate the executive functions of the Federal Government; and fourth, that in doing so you are seeking to bring about the appointment of an advisory council in order that there may be understanding and cooperation between the executive arm of the Government and the industry—all of this being based upon a recognition of the fact that the policy-determining branch of Government still is the Congress of the United States?

Mr. DAVIES. Senator, that expresses our purposes accurately, and I think completely.

So I think it is eminently desirable that this coordination should take place, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I urge the adoption of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment beginning on page 2, in line 21.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a release issued yesterday by the American Petroleum Institute with respect to the membership of the proposed new National Petroleum Council.

There being no objection, the release was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL PETROLEUM COUNCIL MEMBERSHIP ANNOUNCED

Secretary of the Interior J. A. Krug announced appointments to a newly established National Petroleum Council, an industry committee serving without compensation, to advise him and the Oil and Gas Division of the Department on oil and gas matters.

Telegrams sent to 85 men prominently identified with the petroleum and natural-gas industries set June 21 for the first meeting to be held in Washington, Secretary Krug said.

Mr. Krug paid tribute to the invaluable assistance he had had from Ralph K. Davies, formerly Deputy Petroleum Administrator, in organizing the Council, as well as in relation to other aspects of launching the program of the Oil and Gas Division.

The Secretary explained that members of the National Petroleum Council do not serve as representatives of their companies, but as representatives of the industry as a whole. Nevertheless, he said, in selecting the membership, special attention was given to assuring a well-balanced representation as between large and small companies in all parts of the country and from all phases of both oil and natural-gas industries.

Mr. Krug pointed out that while many of the members are affiliated with the larger companies, the preponderance of representation is from the smaller, independent companies. "These small companies," he said, "in the aggregate form a large and most important segment of the petroleum industry and one of the largest classes of small business in the country."

On the list of Council appointees are 21 presidents or representatives of trade associations representing in turn many thousands of the smaller oil companies throughout the country. Also included are seven members representing the natural-gas industry. The remainder are from the petroleum industry at large.

The Council membership included 55 men who served at some time during the war on the Petroleum Industry War Council, the national industry advisory group which aided the Petroleum Administration for War in mobilizing the United Nations oil resources on a world-wide scale.

The Interior Secretary said that the PIWC membership had been used as a nucleus in organizing the National Petroleum Council both because of the outstanding caliber of the individuals who served on it, and also because of the need to take advantage of their unique experience in working with Government in the cooperative solution of wartime problems. He pointed out, however, that duplicate company representation, which had proved necessary for the wartime organization, had been eliminated in the formation of the peacetime industry council.

"The purpose of establishing the National Petroleum Council outlined by President Truman is to continue the Government-industry teamwork that proved so important a factor in the success of the war program," Mr. Krug said.

"The support and assistance of these experienced industry representatives will be invaluable as we face the problems of the postwar era."

Mr. Davies, in commenting upon the plans for the Council, said that it was contemplated that there would be established a series of national committees of the Council. This additional organization, he pointed out, will broaden further the scope of industry representation and will provide working groups of great value to Government. The composition of these committees will be considered with the Council when it meets on June 21, Davies said.

Mr. Krug's telegram to the Council members read as follows:

"Pursuant to the President's letter of May 6 directing that the Secretary of the Interior undertake to unify and coordinate the Federal policy and administration with respect to petroleum and to serve as the channel of communication between the Federal Government and the industry, an Oil and Gas Division has been established in the Department of the Interior.

"In view of the outstanding contribution which Government-industry cooperation made to the success of the war petroleum program, it is important that the value to the welfare and security of the Nation of such close and harmonious relations between Government and industry should continue. Accordingly, in harmony with the President's direction I am, in consultation with Mr. Ralph K. Davies, the former Deputy Petroleum Administrator for War, creating an industry advisory group, to be designated as the 'National Petroleum Council,' whose membership will be drawn from both large and small interests so distributed as to insure a truly representative group.

"It is presently intended that quarterly meetings of the Council will be held in Washington to consider petroleum problems. However, approval of this schedule and other organizational and procedural matters will be on the agenda for the Council's first meeting to be held June 21 at 10:30 a. m. in room 5160, New Interior Building.

"In view of your extensive knowledge of the petroleum industry and experience in its operations, I hereby appoint you a member of this National Petroleum Council, to serve without compensation for a term of 1 year. Your telegraphic acceptance of this appointment and assurance that you will attend the June 21 meeting will be greatly appreciated by me. Particularly, do I urge your presence at this initial meeting."

The telegrams to the association presidents stated that their appointments were ex officio for their terms of office.

The exchange of correspondence between Secretary Krug and Attorney General Clark will be released at a later date, it was announced. The chairman of NPC will be named at the meeting June 21.

A list of those appointed to the National Petroleum Council is attached. Those marked with an asterisk (*) were members of PIWC:

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I think the next amendment which has been passed over appears on page 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The amendment passed over was, on page 6, in line 24, after the word "system", to strike out "For" and insert "To enable the Bonneville Power Administrator to carry out the duties imposed upon him pursuant to law, including the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 7, in line 4, after the word "energy", to strike out "and all administrative expenses including."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on the same page, in line 6, after the word "exceed", to strike out "twenty-nine" and insert "thirty-nine."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on the same page, in line 8, after the word "exceed", to strike out "one" and insert "two."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on the same page, in line 10, after "aircraft", to strike out "$9,000,000" and insert "$19,086,250"; and in line 11, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$3,695,400" and insert "$4,290,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 20, in line 22, to strike out "$250,000" and insert "$950,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], I move to insert on page 20, in line 25, after the word "Colorado" the word "Montana."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. On behalf of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON], I move to strike out, on page 20, in line 25, the word "Nevada" and the word "Oregon."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I send forward the amendment which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 21, in line 1, after the word "reservations", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That no sum herein appropriated shall be used for the acquisition of land or water rights within the States of Nevada and Oregon either inside or outside the boundaries of existing Indian reservations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The amendment passed over was, on page 31, in line 8, after the word "Oregon", to strike out "$106,000" and insert "$224,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, in behalf of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON], I offer the amendment which I send forward to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 36, in line 17, after the word "purchased" it is proposed to insert a colon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That no part of the sum appropriated herein shall be used for the acquisition of land or water rights within the States of Nevada and Oregon either inside or outside the boundaries of existing Indian reservations."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I believe there are only two other committee amendments still remaining to be acted upon. One relates to the Central Valley project in California, as set forth on pages 52 and 53 of the bill, and the other is the Southwestern Power Administration amendment on page 100 of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. A few days ago the Senate took final action on House bill 1095 for the relief of the Indians of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation in North Dakota. Neither the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] nor the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are now in the city, and I have been requested to offer the amendment which I send forward to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 30, after line 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

The full and final settlement of all claims and demands of the Indians of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation in North Dakota in accordance with the provisions of H. R. 1095, Seventy-ninth Congress, $400,000: Provided, That not to exceed 5 percent of the amount herein appropriated may be used for payment of fees and expenses of attorneys employed under contract approved in accordance with existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if the Senator in charge of the bill desires to make a preliminary statement with respect to the committee amendment in connection with the Southwestern Power Administration, I shall be glad to have him do so. Otherwise, I may state that I am opposed to the language as it came from the other House, and am in favor of the amendment of the Senate committee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Before that matter is taken up, I should like to ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment which I have discussed with the Senator in charge of the bill, and also with a Member of the other House who was in charge of the Interior Department appropriation bill. The Senate has passed the bill which I introduced to return to the Department of the Interior, or to the Bureau of Reclamation, some 57,000 acres of land which were taken from the Department of the Interior for the purpose of setting up certain relocation camps which were used for the Japanese. Those camps are at Heart Mountain, Wyo., the Minidoka project in Idaho, and the Tulelake division of the Klamath project in California. All that land, with the exception of about 1,800 acres which were purchased, was within the jurisdiction of the Reclamation Service before it was taken over to be used for Japanese relocation centers.

The Senate has already passed the bill which restored those lands to the Department of the Interior, but there may be some difficulty experienced because of the rush in the closing days of the Congress. Therefore, Mr. President, on page 57 of the pending bill, after line 8, I move to amend by inserting the language which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 57, after line 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

For purposes of effecting settlement of war veterans on public land reclamation projects and to provide facilities for veteran employment in construction and operation of reclamation projects, the Bureau of Reclamation is hereby authorized to acquire by transfer, without exchange of funds from the War Assets Administration or other Federal agency in responsible charge, the lands, improvements, and equipment acquired by the War Reclamation Authority on the War Relocation Centers on the Heart Mountain Division of the Shoshone project, Wyoming; the Minidoka (Hunt) project, Idaho; and the Tulelake Division of the Klamath project, California; and the former prisoner-of-war camp at Indianola, Nebr.: Provided, That said lands, improvements, and equipment shall be made available under regulations of the Secretary of the Interior to veteran settlers and nonprofit organizations, in accordance with the provisions of Senate Report No. 1412, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session: Provided further, That the War Assets Administration is authorized to transfer to the Bureau of Reclamation funds required for maintenance and protection of the transferred property pending its final disposition.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, we had two of those large Japanese relocation centers in Arizona. They were both located on Indian reservations, and the title of the land did not pass. We approved in a deficiency bill a provision that the property available there might be transferred to the Indian Service for the benefit of the Indians. I understand that the Senator from Wyoming proposes, through his amendment, that where title to certain public lands has passed, by reason of an act of Congress, such lands may be improved and made available to veterans. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, during my absence from the floor, an amendment was agreed to to section 14 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946.

I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered so that I may offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. BYRD. Under the amendment there would be exempted from the ceilings on employees as adopted in the recent pay bill all those who have anything to do with health, life, or property. That would apply to the rangers, to all the custodial employees, and to those engaged in looking after the health and life of any employee who may be so classified under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, my only purpose in offering the amendment was to make certain that mine inspectors, who are pitifully few at best, shall not be affected by the provisions of the act. If the amendment which was agreed to goes further than what I intended, I shall be very happy to modify it. I suggest to the Senator——

Mr. BYRD. It certainly goes further than the Senator thinks it went.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I did not intend that it should go further.

Mr. BYRD. In all, only 45 employees are involved, and the ceiling is 1,600,000.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. At the present time there are 157 coal mine inspectors. My purpose was to make certain that none of those coal mine inspectors should be affected by the act.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator understand that the ceilings fixed freeze the employment as of the date the act was passed? That is not the case. It establishes an over-all ceiling for all employees, but it has not been applied to the Veterans' Administration, for example, and the total employment it affects is 1,184,084. The Director of the Budget has authority to fix the allotments, and to reduce one bureau and increase others, as the case may be. I cannot imagine that there are only 45 involved.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Why will not the Senator agree to rewrite the amendment so that it will apply only to coal mine inspection?

Mr. BYRD. I think it would be a mistake to do that, because if we are going to exempt all the classes of employees covered by these appropriation bills, then the ceiling does not amount to anything. I feel convinced that if there are only 45 involved, certainly, out of more than a million——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Forty-five plus 157.

Mr. BYRD. The 157 are already employed, I understand. I hope the Senator will not insist on the amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I offered this amendment because in reading the appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture as it passed the Senate, I found this provision on page 79, section 6:

> Section 14 (a) of the Federal Employees' Pay Act of 1946 shall not apply to employment of personnel required to do the work authorized by those appropriations for which increased funds are provided by this act.

I now understand from the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Georgia that that provision was not agreed to in conference. I did not know it at the time, but I am sure that if the Senator had been on the floor when the Senator from Arizona spoke about the amendment I offered, he would realize that the conferees on the Interior Department bill will be just as amenable to his arguments as were the conferees on the Department of Agriculture bill.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Georgia was the one who suggested the amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill. The Senator from Virginia may not be present at the conference.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Arizona will be present in the conference, as will the Senator from Wyoming, and I assure the Senator from Virginia that my only purpose will be to confine this to the mine inspection. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. BYRD. If there are only 45 employees involved, I do not think we should establish a precedent exempting them from the ceiling. The ceiling idea is something new.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I want to exempt them from the ceiling because they are so pitifully few and the need is so appallingly great.

Mr. BYRD. In all the other branches of the Government there can be reductions in personnel much more than sufficient to take care of the 45 inspectors. I hope the Senator will not insist on it at this time. Give the ceiling plan a trial, and see whether it works, and if it does not work, we will have to consider something else. Certainly, with all the vast personnel of the Federal Government, there must be a way to reduce the number in many of these agencies and departments to take care of these 45 employees.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I suggest, Mr. President, that we permit the Senate to decide upon the amendment, as I modified it to apply solely to coal-mine inspection.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. BYRD. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All in favor of the amendment will rise.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the demand for the yeas and nays sufficiently seconded?

Mr. BYRD. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hart	Overton
Andrews	Hawkes	Pepper
Austin	Hayden	Radcliffe
Ball	Hickenlooper	Reed
Barkley	Hill	Revercomb
Bridges	Hoey	Robertson
Brooks	Huffman	Russell
Burch	Johnson, Colo.	Saltonstall

Ellender	McMahon	Walsh
Ferguson	Millikin	White
Fulbright	Moore	Wiley
George	Morse	Willis
Gerry	Murray	Wilson
Gossett	O'Daniel
Green	O'Mahoney

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HAYDEN. I now yield to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN].

Mr. BYRD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BYRD. Is not the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] before the Senate? The Senator from Wyoming was perfecting his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is before the Senate. It has not yet been disposed of.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, as the result of conferences which I have had with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and the distinguished Senator in charge of the bill, and in view of the fact that it is likely that the discussion of several other items which are still to be disposed of will take some time, I shall not press for disposal of the amendment tonight. I desire, however, to put in the RECORD now the text of the amendment, as I suggested to the Senator from Virginia it would appear.

So, Mr. President, I move that on page 63, line 24, after the word "Provided", there shall be inserted the following:

> Section 14 (a) of Public Law 390, Seventy-ninth Congress—the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946—shall not apply to persons who are employed as coal mine inspectors under the foregoing appropriation: Provided further.

I shall not ask for action upon the amendment tonight.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like to notify the Senator from Wyoming that I expect to make a point of order against the amendment because it is legislation, as it changes an existing law. I wish to say, Mr. President, that I am not opposed to Federal mine inspection. But if in each bill we start exempting Federal employees from the pay ceilings, then that will be a precedent for future action.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator intends to raise a point of order let him raise it now.

Mr. BYRD. I make that point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill, it is proposed to insert the following:

> No funds appropriated by this act shall be available for the payment of compensation of any employee retained after a reduction in force, unless such employee is retained as a result of application of retention preference regulations prescribed by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in dealing with the item of appropriation for the Grazing Service in the Department of the Interior, the House committee reduced the amount, and then when it came to the Senate the Senate Appropriations Committee reduced the number of personnel from 275 to 100. We believed then, and I am confident after years of investigation of the subject in the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, that 100 employees in the Grazing Service are ample, for the time being, at least.

When the reduction was effected, the Department sent to us a list showing how the reductions would be made. We have heard—at least, I have heard—that in my State, as a reprisal for my having brought about this reduction in personnel from 275 to 100, I am to be punished by having all the personnel that belonged to the State of Nevada immediately removed. I want the personnel to be removed in keeping with rules and regulations set up by the Civil Service Commission. That is all that the amendment would do.

Mr. HAYDEN. As I understand the amendment, it merely reiterates the existing law. I have no objection to taking it to conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the next item passed over was on page 52, under the Central Valley project. The amendment passed over begins in line 21, on page 52, after the word "transmission", to strike out "lines" and insert "line"; and then to strike out lines 22 23, 24, and part of line 25, at which point it is proposed to insert "Shasta to Shasta substation, 230 kilovolt, $408,670" and certain other language. I offer on my own behalf, as a substitute for the committee amendment, an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the matter inserted by the committee amendment beginning with the word "Shasta", in line 25, page 52, and ending with the amount "$20,836,670", in line 5, page 53, it is proposed to insert the following: "and substations, $4,572,000, including Shasta to Delta switchyards via Oroville and Sacramento, 230 kilovolt, Shasta to Delta switchyards (West Side lines), 230 kilovolt; Keswick to Sacramento, 115 kilovolt; Contra Costa power distribution system, miscellaneous transmission, feeder lines and facilities, and substations; in all, $25,000,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. I may explain, Mr. President, that what I am seeking to do in this regard is to restore the Budget estimate. The effect of the committee amendment is to strike from the bill a provision which the House allowed, which would carry the line down from Shasta to Oroville, about 100 miles. That line has been practically completed, except for a contractor's claim for adjustment. Then there are from Oroville to Sacramento 56 miles which are under construction. The effect of the committee amendment is to provide that the only transmission lines that shall be available for this project will be for a distance of about 25½ miles from the Shasta Dam down to the Shasta substation, and all appropriations made for the other partially completed lines are to be transferred over to that line so that there will be a double-circuit line, as I say, of a litle more than 25 miles to the substation. That means that there will be available power at that place, and at that place only, and in my judgment, to only one purchaser, that is to say, to the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., the leading utility in northern California.

I wish to state to the Senate very frankly that this is the last day, and the afternoon of the last day, so far as this transmission-line problem in California is concerned. Mr. Black, the very able president of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., testified before our committee that his company was ready to construct all the necessary transmission lines, and particularly a transmission line down the west side of the Sacramento River; that they would do so within the next year, and they had $4,000,000 laid aside for that purpose. So, if the Senate now fails to make this appropriation we will know that next year the line will have been built by the private utility, and then the argument will be perfectly valid that any action taken by the Congress to build any transmission line will be a duplication of what the utility company has built.

At the present time the utility is not capable of carrying all the power generated at the Shasta Dam. Somebody has to build additional transmission lines. It is my view, and the view of the minority of the committee, and it has been heretofore the view of the Senate, that inasmuch as one-third of the power generated at this great dam is to be used to pump water to farmers in California, at least that much of the power ought to be carried down from the dam to where the pumps are located.

For that reason I have offered an amendment which adds about $4,000,000 to the bill, which is complementary to the $4,000,000 the private power company has ready to build the transmission line. If we build it first, the private power company will not have to build it. If we do not build it first they will build it, and then we will be paralleling their lines.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I wish to speak in behalf of the amendment offered by my distinguished and able colleague from Arizona, and first at this time I wish to read a telegram which I have received which I think is quite apropos:

SACRAMENTO, CALIF., June 14, 1946.

Hon. WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

I am advised that the United States Senate Appropriations Committee has reported to the Senate the appropriation bill for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, recommending $20,836,670 for the Central Valley project, California, as compared to $10,840,120 recommended by the House of Representatives and $25,000,000 as requested in the President's budget submitted to the Congress. I am further advised that no funds are presently included in the bill for electric power transmission facilities beyond Shasta substation, which were requested in the President's budget, and eliminated for the most part by the House of Representatives. I am informed that Senator CARL HAYDEN, chairman of the Senate subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee for the Department of the Interior, will endeavor to have the bill amended to include funds for such facilities. Reference is made to my telegram, dated May 14, 1946, wherein I respectfully urged you to do all in your power to bring about the restoration in Department of the Interior appropriation bill for the 1947 fiscal year the amount cut from the request of the Bureau of Reclamation for the Central Valley project. I reiterate that request, and in this instance strongly urge the restoration of funds in the bill for the construction of transmission facilities for the Central Valley project which were eliminated by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

EARL WARREN,
Governor.

Mr. President, from the very inception of the Central Valley Project it was anticipated that it would be an integrated system, consisting of dams, power facilities, and transmission lines. The policy of the State of California is very clear in this regard. In 1933 I was a member of the State legislature and was one of the original authors of the Central Valley Act at that time. In this matter the California Legislature is on record and the people of the State of California, by their direct vote, are on record. The California Water Authority, which is the official State agency dealing with this project, has gone on record. The Governor of California is very strongly in favor of the amendment. My senior colleague [Mr. DOWNEY], who will later speak for himself, is in favor of this amendment. He and I, the two representatives of California in the United States Senate, are very much in favor of it, and urge the Senate to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I am very happy to know that the Governor of California has joined with the two Senators from California in support of the proposal which I am making, which is to restore the budget estimate so that the transmission lines may be constructed.

I have no desire to detain the Senate. Let me merely repeat that if this appropriation is not made at this time, when the next annual appropriation bill is under consideration by the Senate it can be legitimately stated then by the private power utility that it has constructed a complete system of transmission lines capable of carrying all the power from Shasta Dam, and that it should remain the sole purchaser.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I understand that the senior Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] desires to address the Senate. I wish to speak in opposition to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona, but I hope that I may not be required to address the Senate on that subject this evening. Many things must be discussed with reference to this item before it can be fully understood.

Briefly, as I construe it, this is a movement on the part of the Department of the Interior to put out of business a private concern which for a great many years has supplied the great Central Valley and the communities of California with electrical energy at the lowest possible charges. The movement now is to transform that which was originally established as a reclamation project and storage project into a power project. The question should have very careful consideration. I ask that the matter go over until tomorrow, at which time I hope to address the Senate briefly in explanation of my views on the subject. I hope the Senator from Arizona will not force the question at this time.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I am very happy to join with the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and my colleague the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] in urging the Senate to accept the amendment presented by the Senator from Arizona. As the distinguished junior Senator from California has just pointed out, we have here the recommendation of Mr. Warren, recently nominated by the Democrats of California as governor——

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. After the telegram from Governor Warren had been read, I wondered if the Senator would rise and support the Democratic nominee for governor in his position. I assumed that that was the loyal thing to do. If there is no Democrat capable of winning the Democratic nomination in California, and a Republican must take over, I think the Senator is doing a very courteous thing in supporting the nominee of his party, who happens to be the Republican governor.

Mr. DOWNEY. I think that in this respect at least, on the issue now before the Senate, the gentleman who has been given the Democratic nomination has shown that he is worthy of confidence. I hope Senators on the other side of the aisle will accept the same theory as has been accepted by Governor Warren in this respect.

Mr. President, I believe this is the third or fourth time I have addressed the Senate on this particular issue, which to me seems quite plain. Here is a very great investment by the Federal Government in a reclamation and irrigation project. It happens to have very important incidental advantages as a great power project. The United States Government itself will be a large user of a portion of the Federal power which will be generated at Shasta Dam. Many of our communities and farm cooperatives will be users of this power. I believe that there will be ample requirements in northern California for all the power that can be developed from existing private facilities and from this great project.

We in northern California are almost a unit in believing that it would be a most unfortunate mistake to pass over to a private utility a complete monopoly of the power which will be developed by the Federal Government. I do not say that after this transmission line has been constructed by the Government—if it is to be constructed—there may not be times when a certain proportion of the power might not very well be sold to private utilities. But we in northern California are very strongly of the opinion that this power should not be bottled up in the hands of any private monopoly, so that the Federal Government would not be able to sell it to the consumers to whom it might desire to sell it.

As I have heretofore stated upon the floor of the Senate, in fairness and in candor, Mr. President, I bring no charges of misconduct or of oppression against the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. which preempts this territory at the present time. But I feel that it would be unfortunate not to have a yardstick in the hands of the public by which we in California may continue to measure what should be the true and equitable cost of power, and I think that we should at least have an opportunity to use this public power, if we desire to do so, as an instrument against oppressive and monopolistic practices.

Mr. President, not only is it true that the Governor of California and likewise the two Senators from California are in favor of the amendment, but it is likewise true, so far as I know, that all the California Members of the National House of Representatives and likewise almost all the great commercial, political, and civil organizations of California are extremely anxious that the Federal Government shall provide means, as indicated in this amendment, for a transmission line by which the Federal Government may be able to deal fairly, justly, and strategically with this power.

Therefore, I reiterate my desire to join with my colleague [Mr. KNOWLAND] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] in urging the Senate to vote favorably on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I had hoped that this matter might go over until tomorrow. If it is not going over until tomorrow, I propose to discuss it, and I do not propose to limit my time of discussion. Many Senators who are interested in this item are not present at this time and, for one reason or another, cannot be here.

I now suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold for a moment his suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

Mr. McCARRAN. I will.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I should like to say that I have been conferring with Senators, and I wonder whether we may make an arrangement along the following lines: That the Senate meet tomorrow at an hour earlier than the customary time—in other words, at 11 o'clock, instead of at 12.

Let me explain very frankly to the Senator from Nevada that I am embarrassed by a request which has been made by the conferees on the part of the House, who are most anxious to leave the city. They were hopeful that the bill might be passed by the Senate today and might go to conference by 9:30 tomorrow morning, so that the conferees on the part of both Houses would be able to draw up a conference report, thus enabling the conferees on the part of the House to leave the city promptly. Of course, the Senate understands that in view of all the amendments, the bill usually takes a considerable length of time in conference. I was pressing my conclusion regarding the matter because of the request which the House conferees have made upon me.

Mr. McCARRAN. I understand, and I fully appreciate the Senator's position.

Mr. HAYDEN. How would it be to have the Senate meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow and vote on the Central Valley matter at noon?

Mr. McCARRAN. I have no objection to having the Senate meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow. As regards the suggestion about the hour at which to have the vote taken, I should prefer to leave that matter open. I wish it to be understood in that respect, however, that if the amendment is under consideration tomorrow, I do not intend to take more than a very limited time for a reasonable discussion of the matter.

Mr. HAYDEN. I suggested that perhaps an hour might suffice. Would an hour and a half be sufficient?

Mr. McCARRAN. I think perhaps an hour might be sufficient, but I do not like to have a limit placed, because I do not think it is necessary in this case. So far as I am concerned, I am certain that it is not necessary.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me ask the minority leader, the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], what his judgment is about the matter. Does he believe it is desirable to have the Senate take a recess at this time until 11 o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think there would be advantage in pursuing that course, if there could be a definite agreement about the length of debate on the matter tomorrow. It seems to me that this is not a new question. It has been discussed over and over again. Most Senators have a fairly definite conviction one way or the other; and because of previous convictions at which they have arrived, they are not likely to be influenced by what may he said now about it.

It would seem to me that instead of undertaking to fix an hour at which the Senate should vote on the amendment, we might have an agreement limiting the length of time available to each Senator to speak on it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I do not care to enter into such an arrangement; but I am perfectly willing to have the Senate meet at 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

There is, however, another item which is in controversy. It comes immediately after the one we have been discussing, and it is of equal, if not greater, magnitude. I am certain that it will be discussed at length, because many of us are interested in it. I refer to the southwestern power situation.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the next issue which will come before the Senate will be one which involves six States. Without authority of law, it is proposed to start in those six States a development which eventually will cost in excess of $200,000,000. This issue is the beginning or, rather, a continuation of the program to nationalize electric energy in the United States. Inasmuch as it is of such moment, I hold it entirely out of order to try to place a limitation upon debate.

If the Senate and the House of Representatives and the other branches of the Government desire to nationalize electricity and to take over the existing lines or to build competing transmission lines, in my opinion the Congress should thoroughly consider the matter. It should hold ample hearings, obtain the best judgment and the best evidence that can be obtained, and bring in a bill establishing a policy. In the event that the Congress should decide to nationalize electricity, instead of starving to death the existing lines or competing with them, why would it not be well for the Government to do as it did in the case of the Tennessee Valley, namely, purchase the existing lines and turn the whole matter over to a program?

That is the issue, Mr. President. I am sure it will not take very long to present the matter with respect to the Southwest power development.

My State of Oklahoma is in the center of the proposed development. Adjacent to my State is the State of Arkansas. Those two States form the backbone of the proposed development. On the north are Kansas and Missouri. On the south are Louisiana and Texas. Those six States are now being served with ample electricity. There is no demand for the electricity which would come as a result of adoption of the amendment. Ample electricity is now available in those sections. During the war we tried to have some dams built in my State, on the theory that we might need the electricity which would be developed there. The agencies of the Federal Government investigated, and as a result of their investigation they held that there was no demand for such power, and so they froze the money and would not permit its expenditure at that time.

Two dams are now in existence in that territory. One, the Norfork Dam, is in the northern part of the area, in northeastern Arkansas. The other is the Denison Dam, on the Red River, between Texas and Oklahoma. Those two dams are hundreds of miles apart. At the present time it is not possible to obtain poles for the erection of transmission lines, and likewise it is not possible to obtain copper for the wire for the lines. However, if poles for the erection of the lines were available, it would not be possible to obtain the men to dig the holes for the poles; and if the necessary copper wire were available, it would not be possible to obtain the men needed to string the wires between the poles.

Mr. President, I wish to present the facts to the Senate. There is no authority for the proposed appropriation except one little section in the last Flood Control Act. That section of law does not authorize anyone to build steam plants or to build electric transmission lines. In that section of the law, just two words, namely, "related facilities," are relied upon as authority for the proposed development; and on the basis of those two words in that one section of the Flood Control Act the Southwest Power Administration, an agency of the Department of the Interior, is proposing to start a movement, as I have said, to cover six States with competing lines which are not necessary. Today those States are consuming all the power that can be generated from the two dams. The Denison Dam has a production capacity of only 35,000 kilowatts, and the Norfolk Dam has a production capacity of only 35,000 kilowatts. Both of these dams are operating. Every kilowatt of their production, both in wet weather and in dry weather, is now being sold. That means that both the peak power and the dump power is being sold. All of it is being sold. The lines are built to the dams.

From my viewpoint there is no occasion at this time to appropriate a single dollar for the purpose which is in view. Naturally, I am opposing the proposed appropriation.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, let me say that it is perfectly obvious that my suggestion for a limitation upon debate has not met with an enthusiastic reception. [Laughter.]

I shall make another suggestion: Cannot we pass over this particular matter today and proceed with the other amendments which have previously been passed over, and then meet at 11 a. m. tomorrow?

Mr. HAYDEN. There are no other amendments which have been passed over; these two are the only ones remaining. So apparently the only thing to do is to have the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, let me say a further word. It is very unusual for a Senator to object to the expenditure of money in his State, and it is more exceptional to find that the Senators who represent six States are opposed to the appropriation of so large a sum of money to be expended in their States. I cannot speak for the State of Missouri. We have upon the floor of the Senate two Senators who can, and who no doubt will, speak for it. I cannot speak for the State of Arkansas or for the State of Kansas or for the other States that are involved. But their Senators are here and they will be heard from, either for or against the amendment.

It is my understanding that practically all the Senators from the six States are against this proposed appropriation. If that be true, I do not believe that the Senate should try to impose on those States the expenditure of such a large sum of money when it is not needed and when the expenditure would not be beneficial at the present time.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, in order that action may be taken during my absence, I want the RECORD to show that I have notified the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] of the point I raised yesterday in connection with the Interior Department appropriation bill in regard to the funds to be expended in the administration of the business of the Klamath Tribe of Indians. There is no objection on my part to the adoption of the amount fixed in the report of the committee. I merely wanted to call attention to the fact that a question had been raised as to whether or not the amount was excessive, and that I was perfectly willing to follow the judgment of my senior colleague [Mr. CORDON], a member of the Committee on Appropriations. I have not had an opportunity to speak to him about it, and I want the RECORD to show that whatever judgment he reaches will be my judgment, but there is no objection to the report of the committee.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have conferred with the Senator's colleague about the matter.

EXCUSING GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES FROM DUTY ON JULY 5, 1946

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, before the Senate takes a recess I wish to detain it for only 2 or 3 minutes, and I shall not even consume that much time unless I can obtain unanimous consent of the Senate to consider a bill which is rather limited in its scope, but must be acted upon immediately if it is to be effective. I refer to a bill which has been reported unanimously by the Civil Service Committee and is now on the calendar.

Mr. President, this year the Fourth of July falls on a Thursday, and it is proposed by the bill to give to the Federal workers a holiday on the following Friday, conditional on the desire of the head of the agency concerned, and conditional also on the employee making up the day on some succeeding Saturday in July.

Some of the heads of the agencies have reported that when a holiday falls on Thursday and the employees are required to return to work on the next day, or Friday, and then not work on Saturday, not nearly as much service is obtained from the employee as when he is allowed a 3-day holiday and makes up on some succeeding Saturday the time which has been lost. All the advising authorities have recommended the passage of the bill. The Civil Service Committees of the two Houses are in favor of it. The committee meeting was given prestige by the presence of the distinguished Senator from Georgia, and the distinguished Senator from Virginia, as well as distinguished Republican Senators.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, were distinguished Republican Senators present?

Mr. DOWNEY. The distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] was present.

Mr. BRIDGES. I merely wanted to make sure.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider Calendar No. 1540, Senate bill 2335.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 2335) to excuse employees of the Government from work on July 5, 1946.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of any other act, employees of the executive branch of the Government, employees of the District of Columbia municipal government, employees of the legislative branch whose basic workweek is fixed in accordance with section 604 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, employees of the Government Printing Office, and employees of the judicial branch who occupy positions subject to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, may, in the discretion of the heads of their respective departments, establishments, and agencies, be excused from duty on July 5, 1946. The absence on such date of any employee so excused shall be without loss of pay or charge to annual leave or accrued compensatory time if, during the month of July 1946, such employee performs work (without pay or time credit therefor) outside of the regularly scheduled hours of duty in any administrative workweek, at a time or times, other than Sundays, to be selected by the head of his department, establishment, or agency, for the number of hours for which compensation is paid with respect to July 5, 1946. July 5, 1946, shall not be construed to be a holiday within the meaning of section 302 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended, or any other provision of law or regulation authorizing payment of compensation at premium rates for holiday work, and shall not be construed as a nonworkday within the meaning of any leave regulation.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE LATE SENATOR JOHN H. BANKHEAD

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 288, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 288) submitted by Mr. HILL on June 18, 1946, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee appointed by the President pro tempore in arranging for and attending the funeral of Hon. John H. Bankhead, late a Senator from the State of Alabama, on vouchers to be approved by the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES CAUSED BY MILITARY OR CIVILIAN PERSONNEL

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate passed Senate bill 2200, which was identical with House bill 6454. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6454.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6454) to amend the act approved July 3, 1943, entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of claims for damage to or loss or destruction of property or personal injury or death caused by military personnel or civilian employees, or otherwise incident to activities, of the War Department or of the Army," was read twice by its title, considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN BATTLE MONUMENTS COMMISSION

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate passed Senate bill 2141, which was identical with House bill 6393. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider House bill 6393.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6393) to amend the act entitled "An act for the creation of an American Battle Monuments Commission to erect suitable memorials commemorating the services of the American soldier in Europe, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1923, as amended, in order to extend the Commission's authority to all areas in which our armed forces have operated during World War II, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I desire to enter motions to reconsider the votes by which the Senate passed Senate bill 2200 and Senate bill 2141, and I ask unanimous consent that the other House be requested to return the bills to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT RELATING TO PSYCHIATRIC DISORDERS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4512) to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide research relating to psychiatric disorders and to aid in the development of more effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of such disorders, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. MURRAY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. PEPPER, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. HILL, Mr. TAFT, and Mr. AIKEN conferees on the part of the Senate.

RENT CONTROL IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, last Friday when bills on the calendar were being considered, Order of Business 1396, Senate bill 2219, which relates to the extension of an act to regulate rents in the District of Columbia, was objected to, and the bill was passed over. The Senator who made the objection has since withdrawn it. It is important that the bill be passed, because the Rent Control Act affecting the District of Columbia would otherwise expire on the 28th of this month. It has no relation to the OPA.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider Calendar No. 1396, Senate bill 2219.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2219) to extend for the period of 1 year the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, approved December 2, 1941, as amended.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I was the Senator who made the objection to which the Senator from North Carolina has referred. I objected to consideration of the bill on the basis that, if we were not to have any price control or rent control anywhere else in the United States, I did not believe we should single out Washington as an exception. However, if that very unfortunate situation should develop, we can then devote our attention to a further consideration of the matter. In the meantime, I have conferred with the Senator from North Carolina and believe that it would be well to have the bill enacted into law. Therefore I withdraw my objection. I want the RECORD to show that I stated, when the bill was called before, that I was not opposed to rent control. In fact, I was probably one of the foremost advocates of continuing rent control, but I have felt that we should make the control more effective than was provided for in the bill which the Senate passed the other day. That statement applies to price control as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2219) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to regulate rents in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved December 2, 1941, as amended, is further amended by striking out in section 1 (b) thereof the figure "1946" and inserting in lieu thereof "1947."

DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6265, which was unanimously reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia. There is an urgency for the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by its title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6265) to create a Department of Corrections in the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of Eldred D. Kuppinger, of Ohio, to be a foreign-service officer of class VI, a secretary in the diplomatic service, and a consul, and withdrawing the nomination of a postmaster, which nominating message was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Paul V. McNutt, of Indiana, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Republic of the Philippines; and Sundry persons to be foreign-service officers, unclassified, vice consuls of career, and secretaries in the diplomatic service.

By Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Fred M. Vinson, of Kentucky, to be Chief Justice of the United States; and Nadine Lane Gallagher, of the District of Columbia, to be an associate judge of the municipal court for the District of Columbia, vice Brice Clagett, elevated.

By Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Rear Adm. Gilchrist B. Stockton, United States Naval Reserve, to be a rear admiral in the Naval Reserve, for temporary service, while serving with the United States Ambassador to the Republic of the Philippines, and to continue until release from active duty.

INTERNATIONAL SANITARY CONVENTION

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, I ask unanimous consent to report favorably Executive D, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, a protocol to prolong the International Sanitary Convention, 1944, modifying the International Sanitary Convention of June 21, 1926, which was signed in Washington on behalf of the United States of America on April 30, 1946, with the reservation, "Subject to ratification", and I submit a report, Executive Report No. 6, thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received, and the protocol will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

PROTOCOL TO PROLONG THE INTERNATIONAL SANITARY CONVENTION FOR AERIAL NAVIGATION

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, I ask unanimous consent to report Executive E, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, a protocol to prolong the International Sanitary Convention for Aerial Navigation, 1944, modifying the International Sanitary Convention for Aerial Navigation of April 12, 1933, which was signed on behalf of the United States of America on April 30, 1946, with the reservation, "Subject to ratification", and I submit a report, Executive Report No. 7, thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received, and the protocol will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

CONVENTION ON INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, I also ask unanimous consent to report favorably Executive A, Seventy-ninth Congress, first session, a certified copy of a Convention on International Civil Aviation, concluded at the International Civil Aviation Conference at Chicago on December 7, 1944, and signed in the English language by the respective plenipotentiaries of the Governments of the United States of America, the Philippine Commonwealth, and certain other countries, and I submit a report (Ex. Rept. No. 8) thereon.

In connection with this convention, the minority leader, the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], has been given any reasonable time he may elect to reserve to file a minority report if he wishes to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the reports will be received, and the convention will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

MODIFICATION OF CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND UNITED KINGDOM TO AVOID DOUBLE TAXATION

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Executive F, a supplementary protocol, modifying in certain respects the convention between the United States of America and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income, which was signed at Washington on April 16, 1945.

This protocol merely eliminates what the Committee on Foreign Relations thought was a discrimination against artists. The protocol has received the unanimous approval of the committee, and therefore I ask that the Senate dispose of it at this time.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, there is not a large attendance of Senators at the moment, but in view of the statement of the Senator from Georgia as to the unanimity with which the protocol was approved by the Foreign Relations Committee, I think it to be highly appropriate that the matter be now disposed of.

Mr. GEORGE. I believe that the protocol should be disposed of, because it is really in the nature of an amendment to the treaty, but it was thought best to deal with it in the manner prescribed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the supplementary protocol?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive F, a supplementary protocol, signed at Washington on June 6, 1946, modifying in certain respects the convention between the United States of America and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income which was signed at Washington on April 16, 1945.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The supplementary protocol is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the supplementary protocol will be reported to the Senate.

The supplementary protocol was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive F, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, a supplementary protocol, signed at Washington on June 6, 1946, modifying in certain respects the convention between the United States of America and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income which was signed at Washington on April 16, 1945.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the supplementary protocol is ratified.

The clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert L. Ailworth to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John White Stuart to be United States marshal for the western district of Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William Holroyd McGinnis to be United States marshal for the southern district of West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

THE ARMY—NOMINATIONS PASSED OVER

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that all nominations in the Army be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Army nominations will be passed over.

That completes the calendar.

SELECTIVE SERVICE REJECTIONS—ANALYSIS OF STATISTICS

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, during the earlier sessions of our hearings on the national health insurance bill, questions were raised before the committee with respect to the implications of the statistics on selective service rejections, the extent of up-to-date health statistics, and the coverage of Blue Cross hospitalization plans.

In order to obtain expert analysis of these questions, I referred each of them to the Federal Security Administrator, Mr. Watson Miller.

I should now like to insert in the RECORD a set of communications from Mr. Miller commenting in detail on each of these points.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY,
Washington, May 17, 1946.

Hon. JAMES E. MURRAY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MURRAY: This is in reply to your letter of April 26 requesting a report on the "statistics on selective service rejections, together with a thorough analysis of Dr. Goin's assumptions and conclusions."

An analysis of some of the implications of selective service rejection statistics has been published by Mr. G. St. J. Perrott of the United States Public Health Service, in the American Journal of Public Health for April 1946. Enclosed is a copy of the Journal since reprints of the article are not yet available. From Perrott's analysis, the following points are to be noted:

1. It is difficult to evaluate the level of national health on the basis of rejection rates. "At any particular period the rejection rates tell only the relative number of individuals who did not qualify according to standards of that period. As has been seen, some of these standards had no relation to physical status."

2. Statistics on prevalence of defects among examined men offer a better index of the national health picture provided that all defects are properly identified and recorded. These statistics cover all the men examined, those rejected and those accepted, and disclose a great many more defects than shown by the rejection statistics.

3. Statistics on men examined between November 1940 and September 1941 reveal that 1,583 defects were found for each 1,000 men examined. Although some of the defects were minor and did not affect the individual's ability to serve in the armed forces, whatever their nature or their degree, the defects were of importance to the individuals concerned.

4. It must be noted that these examinations covered the Nation's young men, presumably our healthiest group. It follows that in the rest of the adult population the prevalence of defects must be far greater. The enormous volume of defects, in a sense, reveals that a less favorable picture exists than that furnished by the rejection figures.

5. Where comparisons were possible between statistics collected on the prevalence of defects in drafted men of World War I and World War II, little evidence was found of improvement between the two periods.

With reference to Dr. Goin's statements regarding the relationship of medical care to defects found in the drafted men, a most thorough discussion of the whole question appears in the hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor, United States Senate, pursuant to Senate Resolution 74. Of pertinent interest is the testimony given on July 10, 11, and 12, 1944, by such eminent medical authorities as Col. L. R. Rowntree, Maj. Gen. G. F. Lull, and Gen. W. C. Menninger, among others. Their statements do not bear out many of Dr. Goin's assertions, and provide definite answers to some of his allegations.

First of all, it is apparent that Dr. Goin gives the term "medical care" the restricted meaning of therapy, and does not include in it the broad preventive as well as rehabilitative measures which are today considered to be part of medical care. Thus, when he implies that medical care has nothing to do with the 701,700 men rejected for mental disease, he is contradicting the considered opinion of psychiatrists, including Colonel Menninger, who point out that there is need for psychiatrists and for mental hygiene programs to give the necessary preventive and early treatment to maladjusted individuals.

In the statement on the number rejected because of hernia, Dr. Goin asserts that the hernias were probably "so severe that the Army was unwilling to attempt repair." Major General Lull stated at the above-mentioned hearings that "we (the Army) have not at the present time the personnel nor the beds available to correct these defects."

I should like to point out also that the increasing expectancy of life and reduction in diphtheria rates, both of which Dr. Goin mentions, emphasize the value of mass attack on disease. These improvements have largely been brought about by work in the field of public health; the first by extension of prenatal care and of environmental sanitation, the other by immunization. The increase of life expectancy must, of course, be understood to have affected only the young and not the old; life expectancy after 40 years of age has increased hardly at all since 1900.

In sum, while it may be true that we are among the leading nations in health status, it should be clear by now that there is still a great deal of room for improvement. As the Selective Service findings clearly demonstrated, and I quote Colonel Rowntree, "We are not the vigorous people that we thought we were. The people must be educated to accept the fact that we have a high percentage of defects, deficiencies, disabilities, disorders, and diseases. We must be educated to demand medical care in proportion to the demonstrated need of that care."

Sincerely,

WATSON B. MILLER,
Administrator.

SELECTIVE SERVICE REJECTION STATISTICS AND SOME OF THEIR IMPLICATIONS

(By G. St. J. Perrott, F. A. P. H. A., Division of Public Health Methods, United States Public Health Service, Washington, D. C.)

President Truman in his health message to Congress on November 19, 1945, reported that the Selective Service System has brought the widespread physical and mental incapacity among the young people of the Nation "forcibly to our attention in terms which all of us can understand."

"As of April 1, 1945," the President stated, "nearly 5,000,000 male registrants between the ages of 18 and 37 had been examined and classified as unfit for military service. The number of those rejected for military service was about 30 percent of those examined. The percentage of rejection was lower in the younger age groups and higher in the higher age groups, reaching as high as 49 percent for registrants between the ages of 34 and 37. In addition, after actual induction, about a million and a half men had to be discharged from the Army and Navy for physical or mental disability, exclusive of wounds; and an equal number had to be treated in the armed forces for diseases or defects which existed before induction."

These facts are not new, as the President pointed out. Health authorities have been concerned about the serious state of ill health among American youth since late in 1941 when the Selective Service System published its first analysis of the health status of inductees. In this paper it is proposed to discuss the validity of the data as a measure of the prevalence of physical and mental defects and diseases, with particular reference to changes in prevalence which have occurred since 1918. The data will be examined with a view to estimating the significance of these findings to public health.

Rejection rates must be a first consideration in any evaluation of selective-service findings. These rates varied greatly during the war. In the first year of selective service, registrants were given complete physical examinations by local board physicians. Those who were found to be fit were sent to Army induction stations for final physical examination and, on the basis of this latter examination, were accepted or rejected for military service. Rejection rates for this period (November 1940, through September 1941) averaged 52.8 percent of all men examined. Following Pearl Harbor, a marked reduction was noted. This was probably due to pressure on local boards and induction stations for additional military manpower.

By January 1943 the rates reached an all-time low of 28 percent. They rose gradually during the year, however, reaching a high of 42 percent during the last 4 months of 1943. The increase is attributed mainly to: (1) a higher age average among men examined, and (2) a higher proportion of previously rejected men among examinees as local boards reclassified registrants in an effort to meet their quotas.

The decrease in the rejection rate from 42 to 31 percent by the end of the first five months of 1944 resulted largely from two conditions. The average age of men examined was lower than in the previous period, and examination facilities at induction stations were taxed by unusually heavy inpourings of selectees.

Rejection rates began again to increase by the middle of 1944, progressing steadily from 36 percent in June to 45 percent in November. The reasons were: Induction for limited service was halted in June; and in the same month psychological tests for mental capacity were modified so that some illiterates who previously would have been inducted were rejected. Moreover, during this period greater emphasis was placed on the need for inducting men suitable for combat replacements.

These changing procedures affecting the trend of rejection rates illustrate some of the difficulties involved in evaluating the level of national health in terms of acceptance or rejection for military duty. [At any particular period the rejection rates tell only the relative number of individuals who did not qualify according to standards of that period. As has been seen, some of these standards had no relation to physical status.]

In discussing rejection rates, Col. Leonard G. Rowntree, Chief, Medical Division, National Headquarters, Selective Service System, said: "Rejection rates based upon the number of registrants rejected for military service per 1,000 men examined have limitations in their use as criteria of good civilian health. Rejection rates are dependent upon too many factors, as for instance (1) changes in standards of induction, (2) changing deferment policies, (3) varying numbers of registrants by age, race, urban-rural areas, all of which introduce variable correctable only through the calculation of specific rejection rates, (4) whether a registrant is coming up for the first, second, third, or fourth examination, and (5) how far military standards exceed those required of normal civilian living. Selective Service, therefore, regards the rejection rate per 1,000 men examined as useful in measuring the Nation's health only in terms of the limitations placed upon such rates. The incidence of all recorded defects in accepted and rejected men is a better index of the health picture. The latter is only limited insofar as all defects may not be recorded."

In addition to this limitation, however, there are other elements that must be considered in any attempt to arrive at a true evalution. These include differences in examining techniques at various examination centers, idiosyncrasies of the examining personnel, and the attitudes of the examinees.

A comparison of the reports for November 1940 through September 1941 and for April 1942 through December 1943 illustrates the effects of these factors on selective-service findings of the prevalence of disease and disability.

In the first report 1,583 defects per 1,000 men examined were recorded; in the second, 1,000.2 defects for each 1,000 examinees. Between the two periods, the coding procedures were changed so that the complete list of defects was not always available in the 1942–43 data. Since the defects were summarized in order of significance, the limitations of coding would result in the omission of less significant defects and account, at least partly, for the drop in rate.

The effect of such omission and of the other stated factors can be gaged by a comparison of rates for specific kinds of defects.

For example, in 1940–41 when the coding was more complete and when flat feet were a cause for rejection, foot defects, with an average of 172.4 per 1,000 men, led the list of disabilities. By 1942–43, however, minor foot ailments were considered unimportant, and reporting on this category fell to 54.6 per 1,000 examinees. Similarly, dental defects—averaging 167.8 per 1,000 men—were second highest among defects listed for 1940–41. By 1942–43, the incidence had fallen to 113.0 per 1,000 examinees. This, likely, was due to the failure of examining personnel to record all cases of carious or missing teeth, or to give dental defects sufficient precedence for inclusion in the coding, since these defects no longer were cause for deferment.

Marked decreases also are found in the prevalence of throat diseases, skin diseases, and defects of the abdominal viscera as the need for more military personnel grew urgent and examining physicians tended to concentrate on the more serious defects. The relatively minor conditions were included as secondary defects only and thus omitted in the coding.

On the other hand, reports of important defects remained fairly constant in 1942–43. Eye defects, for example, varied only slightly in the two periods. There also was little change in the reported prevalence of neurological diseases, or of diseases of the lung, kidney, and ear. A large proportion of conditions in these groups of defects were outright causes for rejection; and reporting, necessarily, was fairly complete.

The great increase in the incidence of tuberculosis (9.7 to 19.1) is accounted for largely by a change in examination procedure. Chest X-rays did not become an examination routine until 1942; therefore, it is reasonable to suppose that many cases of tuberculosis among pre-Pearl Harbor inductees passed through examining stations undetected.

The wide variations in reports of educational and mental deficiency recorded for the two periods are easily traceable to different definitions of "educational deficiency" in effect during the two periods. Between November 1940, and May 15, 1941, regulations stated that registrants were acceptable who "appear to have normal understanding, whose speech can be understood, who have no definite signs of organic disease of the brain, spinal cord or peripheral nerves, and who are otherwise mentally and physically fit." During this period, illiteracy was mentioned in the records of 3.6 registrants per 1,000 examined. On May 15, 1941, however, the standards were raised to require that a registrant should be able to "read and write the English language as well as a student who has completed 4 years in an American grammar school." These standards remained in force until April 1, 1942. As could be expected, rates for educational and mental deficiency rose in the period.

Mental disease, which was high among the more serious defects in both periods, was found in 67.5 men out of every 1,000 examined in 1942–43. At the top of the list among these diseases were psychoneurotic disorders, psychopathic personality, and grave mental or personality disorders. Since serious attention was given by examining physicians to evidence of mental disease in both periods, and since the reports for the periods are consistent, it could be concluded that reporting and coding of the incidence of mental disease was fairly accurate.

These comparisons bring out the fact that the order of defects may have been closely associated with prevailing regulations for the rejection or acceptance of examinees for military service. The judgment of the idividual examiner in evaluating the relative importance of a series of defects also must be considered as a factor in determining the listing. It is likely, then, that reporting on many defects varied as selective-service regulations changed; that recording of secondary defects tended to be overlooked as coding procedures were simplified, and that the opinion of examining physicians in classifying defects according to relative importance was associated to some degree with military standards.

Review of the figures leaves little doubt that the findings for 1940–1941 more clearly approach the actual prevalence of defects, although how close that approach is can only be guessed. There seems reasons to believe that the figures present a fair picture of the prevalence of major defects—with allowances made for variations in examining techniques, in the judgment of examining physcians and in the recording and coding of defects. It also seems obvious that the many factors which influenced the recognition and recording of secondary defects detract from the accuracy of the reports.

None of the factors which have influenced the reporting and coding, however, obscures the enormous volume of defects. Since all defects—whatever their nature or degree of concern to military authorities—are of importance to the individuals affected, the findings of Selective Service pose a public health problem which must be solved before good health can be achieved for the population.

Too much emphasis is still placed on the decline in mortality as a measure of achievement in health work. Death is by no means the sole measure of the level of national health. To raise the health level, it is essential that increased attention be given to preventing and curing those conditions which cause illness or which reduce the capacity of the individual.

Since the last war the national mortality rate has declined by 3.1 per 1,000 population. Among young men 20 to 34 years, the death rate has gone down nearly 30 percent. One could feel more complacent if this reduction in mortality were associated with an equal reduction in disability. But such is not the case as comparison of the findings in World War I with those of World War II illustrates.

Reports on the prevalence of defects in the first war show that 661.9 defects were recorded per 1,000 men examined—in contrast to 1,000.2 defects per 1,000 in 1942–43 and 1,583.3 in 1940–41. Just as the differences between the 1940–41 and the 1942–43 data are due largely to the coding of the diseases, so it must be suspected that failure to record many minor defects in World War I accounts for a major part of the discrepancy in the records of the two wars. In addition, differences in the medical terminology of the two periods make it difficult to determine the exact classification of defects in many instances. Diagnosis of a number of diseases also underwent refinement in the interval between wars.

As a result, although wide variations in some general groupings will be noted, differences in specific categories, where similarity in terminology permits comparison in the two periods are not always as great as might be expected. Among diseases of the eye, for instance, 61 defects per 1,000 men examined were found in 1917–18, against 123.5 in 1940–41. Yet for bilateral and unilateral blindness—an easily defined defect which can be assumed to have been reported in the same sategory for both wars—the difference is small. Similarly, there is only small variation in recordings of the incidence of trachoma and the slight decrease noted in 1940–41 may point to some public-health accomplishment in the conquest of this disease.

Increased medical knowledge is a factor that cannot be overlooked in comparing the incidence of a number of defects. This is particularly true of asthma, cardiovascular disease, and venereal disease. Since diagnosis of these conditions is much more frequent throughout the population today than 20 years ago, it follows that the incidence among a selected group in 1940 should be greater than in 1917.

Variations in the incidence of tuberculosis are of especial interest since examination procedures in effect in 1940–41 more closely approximated those of 1917 than in any other period of World War II. Moreover, the decline in incidence rates for the two periods bear fairly close resemblance to the drop in the national tuberculosis mortality rate between 1920 (113.1) and 1940 (45.9). Since the incidence of tuberculosis increased markedly with the inauguration of chest X-rays as an examination routine—moving to 19.1 per 1,000 men in 1942–43—it seems evident that (1) considerable tuberculosis when undiscovered in 1917–18, and (2) that the incidence of the disease actually was lower in 1940 than 20 years previously.

Loss of members is an obvious defect that cannot be influenced by any of the elements affecting reporting or diagnostic procedures; therefore, these figures can be accepted at face value. The great similarity in rates for this type of defect, as well as for others which are easily observed, leads to the conclusion that the prevalence of a number of defects in 1917 was probably about the same as in 1940–41.

Certainly, evidence of great improvement is not reflected in the comparison. While slight decreases may be indicated in the incidence of a few defects and diseases over the 20-year period, they are too small to be proof of progress. Examination of the findings of World War I and World War II, then, seems to attest to the conclusion that the health level of the American people has not improved in the same degree as mortality for at least two decades.

The central fact remains that the findings of both wars show an enormous amount of ill health in the population.

During and after World War I, draft data were reviewed, analyzed, and interpreted. Over the ensuing years, medical statisticians decried the low level of health among the Nation's young men and viewed the situation with alarm. It is regrettable that the papers produced by these statisticians represent the sole use to which the findings of World War were put.

Now, once more, protests are being raised against the health level—this time based on the amount of defects found among the sons of World War I examinees. It is to be hoped that the implications of these latest wartime health reports will be regarded as an index of the degree of actual need and will be utilized in planning health services which must be supplied to bring to oncoming generations the benefits of knowledge already at hand.

Reports of defects found among young men examined for military duty in World War II can serve as signposts to health authorities in plotting future activity. Much of the past achievement in public health has been due to the application by health departments of epidemiological case finding techniques to the control of disease spread. Selective service data make available a new source of information for evaluating the relative extent of particular physical and mental defects.

The President in his recommendations to the Congress for the establishment of a national health program has used the reports on medical examinations of selectees to gage the total health needs of the country. Nation-wide programs for the prevention and cure of tuberculosis, venereal diseases, and other communicable diseases are now authorized by the Congress. State and local health authorities can use selective service findings to ascertain where existing programs should be strengthened and what additional services are required. In the past, health authorities have turned to mortality rates as a major index for determining problems of public health significance. The limitations of these rates in evaluating health needs have been recognized. Knowledge provided by mortality statistics is confined to deaths resulting from specific diseases. A well organized attack on the whole health front requires comprehensive and current information on the prevalence of disease and defects—in short, complete morbidity reporting in every State. In lieu of this, selective service data, while not so accurate, offer an immediate and potent source of information on the prevalence of those defects which it is within the province of public health to prevent or remedy.

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY,
Washington, May 29, 1946.

Hon. JAMES E. MURRAY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MURRAY: This is in reply to your letter of April 10, 1946, requesting information on the extent of up-to-date statistics on the health of the Nation and the need for medical care.

Current or very recent data are available for numerous aspects of the medical care problem. Among these are data on mortality, the incidence of communicable disease, the findings of selective service examinations, the number of physicians, dentists, and hospitals, the use of hospital beds, membership in health and hospital insurance plans, and family expenditures for medical care.

When these data are examined, particularly in their geographical detail, a great deal of variation among States and communities is to be observed which is correlated with economic status. In the poorer States, for example, the infant and maternal mortality rates are higher, there are fewer hospital facilities, and physicians and dentists, and less hospitalization. This is clearly shown in the enclosed table. It is obvious that the populations of the poorer areas do not get as much care as those of the richer since the poorer areas do not attract sufficient medical personnel and facilities. The effects are reflected in such items as increased infant and maternal mortality rates.

That the wealthier groups in the population obtain more medical services confirms the more detailed findings of the Committee on the Costs of Medical Care in 1929 and of the National Health Survey in 1935–36. Both studies, one made in a period of prosperity, the other during a depression, brought out the economic inequalities in the prevalence of sickness and the utilization of medical care facilities. This inequality is apparently always present, and is further illustrated in the pattern of family spending for medical care. Studies in 1929, 1935, 1941, and 1944, all show that the wealthier the family the greater the amount in dollars spent for medical care, yet the poorer families have to spend a greater proportionate amount of their total income for such care.

We trust that this letter answers your request, and we shall be glad to supply any data you may desire.

Sincerely,

WATSON B. MILLER,
Administrator.

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY,
Washington, May 29, 1946.

Hon. JAMES E. MURRAY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MURRAY: This is in reply to your letter of April 10, 1946, asking for information relative to the testimony of Mr. William Logan Martin on private health insurance plans in Alabama.

Mr. Martin testified that in Alabama arrangements have been made "for hospital organizations to include and provide for doctors' care," and that "for a maximum payment of $49 a year, any size family from 2 to 20 can get the medical service it needs."

Mr. Martin's statements are correct in part and incorrect in part. In Alabama the Blue Cross plan—Hospital Service Corp. of Alabama—in 1945 expanded its scope of service to include physicians' services in the hospital. (It is one of eight Blue Cross plans which have done this; elsewhere the same objectives have been attained through the development of separate medical plans which are affiliated with the Blue Cross plan.) This plan offers two hospital contracts; one at a cost of $2.20 a month for a family offers care in a private room, the other at a cost of $1.50 a month for a family offers ward care. Both contracts provide 21 days of care for each member of the family in the first year of membership, 22 days in the second year, 23 days in the third, 24 in the fourth, 25 in the fifth, and 26 days per year thereafter. Both contracts define a family as husband, wife, and all children over 60 days and under 16 years of age. The hospital care furnished in addition to room and board and the general floor nursing includes use of operating or delivery room, anesthesia supplies, regular laboratory services, regular drugs and medications, and dressings and casts. There is a waiting period of 12 months for maternity care.

The plan offers a medical contract at a cost of $2 a month for a family. This covers surgery (in the hospital, office or home), obstetrical service (delivery), physicians' visits in the hospital for medical cases, and, for hospital bed patients only, anesthesia service up to $15 per admission, X-ray service up to $15 per admission, radioactive treatment up to $10, physiotherapy up to $15, allergy tests up to $10, special laboratory services up to $10, and basal metabolism or electrocardiographic tests up to $5 for each test. There is a waiting period of 12 months for obstetrical service and of 3 months for tonsils or adenoid operations. The benefits are not in the form of services but consist of indemnity allowances against the physician's charge. Thus, the allowance for a tonsillectomy is $25, for a normal delivery $50, appendectomy $100, and single hernia, $75. For physicians' visits in the hospital, $2 for each visit is allowed. The physician can charge the patient extra beyond these allowances if he wishes. In sum, for a payment of $50.40 a year, a family would receive fairly complete coverage for hospital care and physicians' services in the hospital. With ward service the same coverage could be obtained for $42 a year. However, in neither case would physicians' services in the home and office be covered.

As of January 1, 1946, 141,066 persons in Alabama—5.2 percent of the State's population—had the hospital coverage, and 7,018 persons had the medical coverage.

Nationally, the Blue Cross Hospital Service plans had an enrollment on April 1, 1946, of 20,000,000 persons. These have proved the most successful application of the insurance principle to hospitalization in the United States. However, Dr. J. W. Mountin, Chief of the Division of States Relations, U. S. Public Health Service, in his testimony on S. 1606, made the following statement about the voluntary plans, which coincides with my own views:

"An evaluation of this program compels me to point out, however, that despite the unprecedented economic prosperity of the last few years, membership in these plans is largely concentrated in a few industrialized States and that some 85 percent of our population remains without this hospitalization protection. Moreover, the insurance protection offered under this program encompasses hardly more than the 15 percent of the total medical care bill of the average American family.

"As for comprehensive medical care insurance, experience in this country so far gives even less reason to be sanguine for a significant future expansion. Despite a history that dates back to the nineteenth century, insurance for anything approaching general medical and hospital services—rarely, indeed including dental, home nursing or other special items—encompasses less than 3 percent of our national population.

"All of these considerations have led the Public Health Service to the conclusion that only a Nation-wide program of medical care, under official auspices, holds the promise of assuring adequate medical care for all the people."

I shall be glad to furnish your committee with any other data on this subject which will be helpful in consideration of the provisions of the national health bill (S. 1606).

Sincerely,

WATSON B. MILLER,
Administrator.

BLACK MARKET IN MEAT—EDITORIAL FROM THE BOSTON TRAVELER

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, without burdening the Senate to read it, I ask unanimous consent that a short editorial entitled "Black Market," from the Boston Traveler of Tuesday, June 18, be inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BLACK MARKET

The Traveler exposed the Boston black market in meat last Saturday. The OPA came along and took over some of its wares. It had them on display yesterday, as foul and menacing a display of poison as we have ever seen. This was the "food" the black market was foisting onto a hungry city.

It was no display garnered in areas where the underprivileged always live close to the border line. Much of it came from the blue-ribbon suburbs, places like Newton and Wellesley. Anyone fool enough to buy it would lose his money, fool enough to eat it, and he might lose his life.

Well, that is the American standard of living in New England, at the end of the line, in these days when Government controls have so completely overturned the normal economic laws. The planned economy has had its logical outcome, a bare counter, a throng clamoring outside it, a few prewrapped bundles of moldy meat beneath it. Man kills the thing he loves the best. We loved the rich productivity of America. We killed it.

But it is not really dead. Let us do the proper things and it will come back to life. Let us punish these rascals who would fatten on a helpless population. Let the United States attorney and the OPA hale them to justice. But then let us do the things which will insure us that they will have no successors.

Let us restore the principle of free enterprise. Let us cut loose with all the speed practical from the shackles of price control. Let us admit the mistake so much of it has been, face about and return to the past, the American past which made this country productive and prosperous. If this is postwar America, give us a prewar America.

RECESS

Mr. HAYDEN. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, June 20, 1946, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate June 19 (legislative day of March 5), 1946:

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

Eldred D. Kuppinger, of Ohio, to be a foreign-service officer of class 6, a secretary in the diplomatic service, and a consul of the United States of America.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 19 (legislative day of March 5), 1946:

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

Robert L. Ailworth to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Virginia.

John White Stuart to be United States marshal for the western district of Virginia.

William Holroyd McGinnis to be United States marshal for the southern district of West Virginia.

WITHDRAWAL

Executive nomination withdrawn from the Senate June 19 (legislative day of March 5), 1946:

POSTMASTER

TEXAS

Mrs. Oneta M. Hazel to be postmaster at Wink, in the State of Texas.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 19, 1946

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father most holy, with deep reverence we wait at the footstool of prayer, asking for courage to forsake that which is wrong and unwise and accept the things which are right and prudent. Give us the faith that will set in motion ministries that lead out into strong, healthy freedom; give us companionship that will keep us free from doubt and make us willing to stoop to the humblest and the lowliest things. O may we not seek the trumpet call of praise; let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall. Subdue any heart of hate or mind shaded with brooding thoughts of anger. O Thou who dost protect those who put their trust in Thee, lift our little life craft from the shallows and float it out into the great deep of peace that comes from the tides of a good God. At the close of this day, dear Lord, grant us to have no regrets for the past or fears for the future, and praise shall be thine forever, Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On June 18, 1946:

H. R. 1852. An act for the relief of R. H. White Transfer & Storage Co., of Nashville, Tenn.;

H. R. 2337. An act for the relief of H. H. Hood; and

H. R. 5718. An act to facilitate the liquidation of Washington Railway & Electric Co.

On June 19, 1946:

H. R. 1782. An act for the relief of Ida F. Braun, Alice Braun Menges, and Carl J. Braun, individually and as executors of the estate of Hedwig W. Braun, deceased, and as legatees and beneficiaries of the will of Hedwig W. Braun, deceased, and as the sole parties in interest by succession under the last will and testament of Hedwig W. Braun, deceased, and under the last will and testament of Herman W. Braun, deceased; and

H. R. 5060. An act to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to fix the salaries of officers and members of the Metropolitan Police force, the United States Park Police force, and the Fire Department of the District of Columbia," approved May 27, 1924.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 4983. An act to provide for adjustments in connection with the Crow irrigation project, Crow Indian Reservation, Mont.;

H. R. 5444. An act to revive and reenact and amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the county of Gallatin, State of Illinois, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near the city of Shawneetown, Gallatin County, Ill., to a point opposite thereto in the county of Union, State of Kentucky," approved July 18, 1939;

H. R. 6195. An act to amend section 1 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 751), entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands of the Crow Tribe, for the distribution of tribal funds, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of May 26, 1926 (44 Stat. 658);

H. R. 6572. An act to provide military assistance to the Republic of the Philippines in establishing and maintaining national security and to form a basis for participation by that government in such defensive military operations as the future may require; and

H. R. 6699. An act to decrease the amount of obligations, issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, which may be outstanding at any one time.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5626. An act to authorize the Veterans' Administration to appoint and employ retired officers without affecting their retired status, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2133. An act to amend further the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1460. An act to fix the salary of the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 2091) entitled "An act for the relief of Joseph E. Bennett," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. HUFFMAN, and Mr. WILSON to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 2192) entitled "An act for the relief of Andre Dacharry," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. O'DANIEL, and Mr. WHERRY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5244) entitled "An act to authorize the appointment of additional foreign-service officers in the classified grades," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. GEORGE, Mr. GREEN, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5605) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 66 and 67 to the foregoing bill.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

JUNE 19, 1946.

The Honorable the SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: From the secretary of the Commonwealth of the State of Pennsylvania, I have received the certificate of election of Hon. FRANK BUCHANAN as a Representative-elect to the Seventy-ninth Congress from the Thirty-third Congressional District to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Hon. Samuel A. Weiss.

Very truly yours,
SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.
By H. NEWLIN MEGILL.

Mr. BUCHANAN appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION ACT, JUNE 30, 1947

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6429) making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. CURLEY, Mr. KOPPLEMANN, Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana, Mr. TIBBOTT, and Mr. HORAN.

REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5356) to provide assistance to the Republic of China in augmenting and maintaining a naval establishment, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. DREWRY, Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON, and Mr. COLE of New York.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 162]

Adams	Gifford	Peterson, Ga.
Andrews, N. Y.	Gore	Philbin

IMPORTATION OF CERTAIN FOOD PRODUCTS INTO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, a rather curious situation exists in the United States at the present time. The United States is being asked by many nations of the world, and it is willingly complying with that request, to feed the starving people of these nations. At the same time a large quantity of concentrated foods, even greater than the prewar quantities—including dates, figs, walnuts, almonds, filberts, cashews, and other food products—are being shipped from those countries, or from the immediately adjacent areas, to this country to be sold for American dollars.

Mr. Speaker, I have a special order on the program for tomorrow afternoon at which time I shall give some of the figures incident to this situation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. CELLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances.

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS—STREAM POLLUTION

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, this is Calendar Wednesday, and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has a bill on the Calendar. I assume that it will be reached very shortly, but if anything happens that it is not reached, I want to say that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has for presentation to this House one of the most important bills pending in Congress at this time. That bill is H. R. 6024, introduced by the chairman of the committee, relating to the prevention and control of water pollution and for other purposes. As a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors it has been my privilege and my duty to sit on that committee over a number of years listening to testimony that has to do with this subject.

This pending legislation, Mr. Speaker, represents a decision of the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee as a result of hearings which have been held recently. The report of the committee—Report No. 1929, Seventy-ninth Congress—sets forth the purpose of the legislation and explains the different sections of the pending bill. I am supporting this measure and hope that it may be promptly passed by the House of Representatives so that it can be considered by the Senate before the final adjournment of Congress.

Legislation to correct the menace of pollution of our lakes, streams, and rivers is long overdue. Pollution is not limited to the disposal of sewage. Industrial establishments contribute all sorts of waste dumped into our streams and lakes, which not only works injury to the fish and wildlife but is a real menace to the health of our people.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, I have attended hearings over a period of years when various bills have been presented to the Rivers and Harbors Committee. The recent hearings were interesting and informative and calculated to convince any fair-minded person that the National Government should establish a program calculated to eliminate, so far as possible, the problem of pollution. There may be some controversy as to the method to be followed, but certainly everyone ought to agree as to the desirability of the results we want to bring about.

Like many other matters of national concern, most people take things for granted until there is an emergency and then they are inclined to pass drastic legislation. The importance of the type of legislation here proposed is very little understood by the people throughout the United States. Every person is affected if the drinking water is impure. Every person who visits a large city has a very vital interest in what the municipality has done for the protection of health. I believe that this legislation which has been reported out by the committee will go a long way toward correcting the evils which now exist. The dumping of sewage into streams and lakes and the use of that water for drinking purposes is a rather gruesome procedure and will not be tolerated by an enlightened public. Likewise, the practice of large industrial plants of dumping the waste products into the streams and lakes and then having that water used for drinking purposes cannot and will not be permitted by our people when they know the facts. Unless legislation is passed, and unless progress is made in eliminating the pollution of our lakes and streams, some day we may face an epidemic of disease and danger to human life. Now is the time to prevent any such occurrence. It will be just too bad if this Congress fails to pass the legislation now pending before the House, or pass some other bill or amendment which will seek to accomplish the same purpose.

SALE OF WHEAT BY FARMERS TO THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and include a resolution adopted by the Grange in my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, Lenawee County, Mich., is one of the best general agricultural counties in the United States. Yes; I reside in Lenawee County, but this statement of fact is supported by agricultural statistics, and is not mere talk.

This county is made up of family-sized farms. The crops are diversified, and wheat plays an important part in our rotation system. The record of Lenawee County farmers during the war has been a source of great pride, and justifiably so. These farmers ask for no special privileges. All they want is a fair chance in the economic picture and a square deal from their Government. This they feel they are not getting. Now, we all know that the Grange is a careful and conservative organization. It always thinks things through before it goes on record. It is not, as a rule, responsive to emotional propaganda. In these circumstances, an expression of this group is entitled to most careful attention on the part of the Department of Agriculture, the administration, and the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, this morning I am in receipt of a resolution passed by the Lenawee County (Mich.) Pomona Grange, assembled in regular session at Tecumseh, Mich., on June 13, 1946. The resolution reads as follows:

Whereas the United States Government, finding it was falling short on its commitments of food to the starving peoples of the world has again broken its word with the farmers of America by again raising the price of wheat, after stating that the price would not be raised.

On Friday and Saturday, May 3 and 4, the triple A committeemen in each township were supposed to call on each farmer and urge them to sell any wheat that they had on hand as soon as possible, as it would keep people from starving. If sold before May 25 they would receive a 30-cent bonus.

Many farmers started hauling wheat on Monday, May 6, and received $1.75⅜ plus 30 cents bonus, or $2.05⅜.

Or Friday, May 10, the following order went out from AAA headquarters: "Delay all emergency wheat payments until Monday, May 13, 12:01 p. m."

On Monday, May 13, at 12:01 p. m., the producer price for all wheat was raised 15 cents per bushel, making the ceiling now $2.20⅜ in Lenawee County.

This new order also contained this clause: "New ceiling prices are not retroactive." The producer who accepted settlement before May 10 is not eligible to the 15-cent increase or, to state it plainly, any farmer who did his patriotic duty and sold his wheat immediately as the Government asked him to do was penalized 15 cents per bushel for so doing.

We, the members of the Lenawee County Pomona Grange, demand that the Government pay those farmers who sold their wheat between May 1 and 10 the 15 cents per bushel which is due them.

For the information of anyone who does not know the full story of the unsavory wheat record of the past season, here it is: The Government promised that the ceilings would not be raised and that when wheat reached the ceiling producers might as well sell their wheat. They now deny that they ever made such a statement.

Here is the story of wheat prices for Lenawee County, Mich. (it will vary according to freight rates):

Jan. 1, 1946	$1.72⅜
Later raised	.03
May 1 bonus	.30
May 13 ceiling raised	.15
Price May 13	2.20⅜
Loss to farmers who sold before bonus and ceiling raises (cents per bushel)	.48

Whereas the plan for the new crop is, that one-half of all wheat that is put in storage will be confiscated by the Government, 25 percent to go to the Government and 25 percent to millers. This would be acceptable to producers if the Government would guarantee to pay the maximum price that wheat reached between July 1, 1946, and July 1, 1947.

In view of the treatment producers received at the hands of the Government last year, we feel it our duty to advise our members to store their wheat at home until the Government makes a satisfactory price to them.

We, the members of Lenawee County Pomona Grange, unanimously adopt the foregoing resolution.

MRS. ALICE HODDINOTT,
Secretary.

(A true copy.)

My colleagues, this resolution contains much food for thought. Clearly, an injustice has been done to certain of these wheat farmers who, relying on the Government, have complied with the requests of their Government and are thereby, and for that reason, penalized 15 cents a bushel on their wheat.

I am calling this to the attention, not only of the Congress, but of the Secretary of Agriculture and all agencies having to do with the purchase of this wheat and the payment of these bonuses at this time. I hope that the directives heretofore issued in reference to the purchase of this wheat by the Government will be changed or interpreted so that these patriotic wheat growers will get the square deal which they are demanding and to which they are so justly entitled.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4512) to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research relating to psychiatric disorders and to aid in the development of more effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of such disorders, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. PRIEST, Mr. BULWINKLE, Mr. CHAPMAN, Mr. BROWN of Ohio, and Mr. WINTER.

SEVENTH REPORT TO CONGRESS ON OPERATIONS OF UNRRA—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I am transmitting herewith the seventh quarterly report on the operations of UNRRA and expenditure of funds appropriated by the Congress.

The food crisis, foreshadowed in my last report on UNRRA operations, is now upon us. Many of the countries receiving UNRRA assistance have only a few weeks' stocks remaining and the orderly distribution of food supplies is increasingly difficult. In many countries even minimum food rations may not be met for people who have lived too long on the borderline of starvation.

Much has been done by this and other countries to avert this tragedy and the Congress is aware of the measures taken in the United States to conserve food and to make it available to the millions abroad in urgent need of help. In spite of all that has been undertaken millions overseas are threatened with disaster. Although it may now be too late to save some, it is not too late to save many others. What can be done by the American people and their Government will be done. I am confident that the Congress and the people of the United States will support any further measures which may be necessary to meet the critical situation.

The food crisis has greatly retarded progress in the devastated countries toward recovery from the war. It has weakened their ability to help themselves, for the tremendous task of reconstruction requires strength as well as determination.

Difficult as UNRRA's task has been UNRRA has at this date in the face of severe world shortages shipped over 10,000,000 tons of vitally needed supplies which have enabled the countries receiving assistance to survive the winter. In addition to the food which has been provided, transportation facilities have been vastly improved in the year since war's end and seeds and agricultural equipment in substantial quantities are now available where they are needed for the spring planting. Some of the more important basic sinews of peace have been provided or are on the way. Clouded as it is by the famine in Europe and Asia, a real job has been done of which the United Nations may be proud.

Through March 31, 1946, UNRRA shipped 8,251,736 gross long tons of relief supplies valued at $1,140,419,000. Every American can take pride in the fact that our share in this achievement was 5,917,785 tons valued at $750,563,000, which is 71.7 percent of the tonnage and 65.8 percent of the value of all UNRRA shipments.

In the crucial weeks and months ahead until the new crop comes in, we must bend every effort, leave no possibility unexplored, and take every necessary step to relieve the suffering of millions who look for assistance to the United States and the other uninvaded United Nations. We are providing assistance as a matter of humanity and as a mark of comradeship for those who fought with us to victory over our common enemy. And we are doing it in the conviction that peace and security throughout the world can only be built on cooperation and mutual assistance. We cannot look to a world of freedom and security in the midst of famine and impoverishment.

The funds which the Congress has already appropriated to UNRRA will remain available only through this fiscal year. Also, the Congress at the end of the quarter covered by this report had not yet appropriated to UNRRA $600,000,000 which it had authorized for United States participation in the work of UNRRA. Since the close of the quarter the Congress has appropriated an additional $135,000,000, leaving $465,000,000 authorized but not appropriated. I strongly urge that Congress take all further action necessary to avoid any interruption in the participation of our country in UNRRA's job.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 19, 1946.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

HON. CHARLES M. LAFOLLETTE QUITS REPUBLICAN PARTY—WOULD JOIN DEMOCRATS IF—

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we are told in the press that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LAFOLLETTE], after being unanimously rejected for Senator by the Republican convention in that State, has decided to quit the party, and says he might join the Democratic Party, if they would agree to get rid of us southern Democrats.

He reminds me of the old man Pvt. John Allen used to tell about, who, when asked how many members there were in his church, said that he was the only one left. He said, "We used to have 200 or more, but they all withdrew from me the other Sunday."

As to Mr. LAFOLLETTE'S proposal to join the Democratic Party provided they will get rid of us southern Democrats, I am reminded of the old fellow down in one of the Southern States whose reputation was not the best in the world. When he died they inscribed on his tombstone this epitaph:

> Hark ye, strangers passing by,
> As you are now so once was I.
> As I am now so you must be.
> Prepare for death and follow me.

One of his neighbors read this inscription and wrote these lines under it:

> To follow you I'd not consent
> Unless I knew which way you went.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 2133. An act to amend further the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1460. An act to fix the salary of the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior.

S. 1523. An act to modify the time limitations governing the award of certain military and naval decorations for acts performed during the present war.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO), there were—ayes 101, noes 37.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 39 minutes p. m.), the House, under its previous order, adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, June 20, 1946, at 11 o'clock.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS

The Committee on Pensions will hold open hearings at 10 a. m., Thursday, June 20, 1946, in room 428, Old House Office Building, on H. R. 3779, H. R. 5740, and H. R. 5741, bills to increase service pensions for certain veterans and widows of veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Philippine Insurrection, and China Relief Expedition.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

1404. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1946 in the amount of $1,500,000, to remain available until expended, for the War Department, for flood control (H. Doc. No. 671), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. RANDOLPH: Committee on Labor. H. R. 4130. A bill to increase the minimum wage rate under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to 65 cents an hour; without amendment (Rept. No. 2300). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. RANKIN: Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation. H. R. 6811. A bill relating to veterans' pension, compensation, or retirement pay during hospitalization, institutional or domiciliary care, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 2301). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana:

H. R. 6827. A bill to provide for the payment of a bonus of 48 cents per bushel for all wheat and 55 cents per bushel for all corn and 5 cents per bushel for oats purchased and sold between January 1, 1945, and April 18, 1946, and providing for payment of additional bonuses if paid by the United States Government; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. FLANNAGAN:

H. R. 6828. A bill to provide for continuance of the farm labor supply program up to and including June 30, 1947; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. McDONOUGH:

H. R. 6829. A bill relating to the unauthorized wearing of the discharge button awarded by the Army and Navy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. JUDD:

H. R. 6830. A bill for the relief of John Sheehy and Mrs. Anna Sheehy; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LaFOLLETTE:

H. R. 6831. A bill for the relief of Jeffersonville flood control district, Jeffersonville, Ind., a municipal corporation; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MASON:

H. R. 6832. A bill for the relief of Betty Isabel Schunke; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. MERROW:

H. R. 6833. A bill for the relief of Joseph Roberts; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TALBOT:

H. R. 6834. A bill for the relief of Joe O'Loughlin; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2014. By the SPEAKER: Petition of Kent Townsend Club, Kent, Ohio, petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to their endorsement of House bills 2229 and 2230; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2013. Also, petition of Council of Townsend Clubs of the Fourteenth Congressional District of Ohio, petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to their endorsement of House bills 2229 and 2230; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2014. Also, petition of the American Philosophical Association, petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to control of atomic energy; to the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JUNE 20, 1946

(Legislative day of Tuesday, March 5, 1946)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God who ordainest each day as a fresh beginning, as wait the watchers for the dawn, so with confidence even under the distant stars wait we for the signs of Thy appearing in the quenchless hope which sees always a new morning beyond the darkest night. Turning from the dizzy world where truth so often eludes us along tangled paths, we would seek at this altar of faith the truth about ourselves, knowing that Thou canst not use us to change the crooked things that blight the earth unless our own hearts are homes of sincerity, integrity, and purity. Create in us clean hearts, O God, and renew a right spirit within us. Fit us to be forerunners for the conquering might of that One who alone can redeem the waste places, as in His name we cry aloud—

"Lift up your heads, O ye gates,
And be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors,
And the King of Glory shall come in."

Amen.

DESIGNATION OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The Chief Clerk read the following letter:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., June 20, 1946.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. CLYDE R. HOEY, a Senator from the State of North Carolina, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

KENNETH McKELLAR,
President pro tempore.

Mr. HOEY thereupon took the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, June 19, 1946, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

SENATOR FROM ALABAMA

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I present the credentials of Hon. G. ROBINSON SWIFT, appointed by the Governor of Alabama to fill the vacancy caused by the death of our late colleague, Senator John H. Bankhead.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that, pursuant to the power vested in me by the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the State of Alabama, I, Chauncey Sparks, the Governor of said State, do hereby appoint G. ROBINSON SWIFT, a Senator from said State, to represent said State in the Senate of the United States until the vacancy therein caused by the death of John Hollis Bankhead is filled by election, as provided by law.

Witness: His Excellency our Governor, and our seal hereto affixed at Montgomery this 15th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1946.

[SEAL] CHAUNCEY SPARKS,
Governor.

SIBYL POOL,
Secretary of State.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be placed on file.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the Senator-designate is present and ready to take the oath of office.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator-designate will come to the desk, the oath will be administered to him.

Mr. SWIFT, escorted by Mr. HILL, advanced to the desk, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to him by the Acting President pro tempore.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6597) authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

AUDIT REPORT OF TENNESSEE VALLEY ASSOCIATED COOPERATIVES, INC.

A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, an audit report of the Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc., for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1945 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

AUDIT REPORT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a letter dated June 17, 1946, from the Corporation's Audit Division of the General Accounting Office to the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, covering an audit made of the affairs of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its subsidiaries and affiliates for the year ended June 30, 1945, under section 5 of the act of February 24, 1945 (59 Stat. 6) (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

SAFEGUARD OF INVESTORS IN UNREGISTERED SECURITIES

A letter from the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, recommending an amendment to the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, which would extend to investors in unregistered securities the protection now afforded to investors in registered securities by reason of sections 12, 13, 14, and 16 of the act (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

MARCH 1946 REPORT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

A letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of that Corporation for the month of March 1946 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

ACTS OF LEGISLATURE OF PUERTO RICO

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of the acts of the second regular session of the Sixteenth Legislature of Puerto Rico, February 11 to March 31, 1946 (with an accompanying volume); to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

PETITIONS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate and referred as indicated:

By the ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A resolution adopted by the common council of the city of Detroit, Mich., relating to the trial of Gen. Draja Mihailovich as a war criminal; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A resolution adopted at a community-wide meeting of Jews, citizens of Omaha, Nebr., favoring the immediate admission of 100,000 Jews into Palestine; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A resolution adopted at the annual meeting of the Great Lakes Harbors Association, at Chicago, Ill., relating to the problem of postwar restoration and rehabilitation of Great Lakes shipping and of the domestic merchant marine; to the Committee on Commerce.

A telegram from Senator Eulogio Rodriguez, Manila, P. I., praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 6338) to repeal section 601 of the Philippine Rehabilitation Act of 1946 (Public Law 370, 79th Cong.), relative to the payment of compensation for war damage; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

A resolution adopted at the annual meeting of the Great Lakes Harbors Association, at Chicago, Ill., favoring the enactment of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 48) to quiet the titles of the respective States and others to lands beneath tidewaters and lands beneath navigable waters within the boundaries of such States and to prevent further clouding of such titles; ordered to lie on the table.

MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present for appropriate reference and to have printed in the RECORD, a resolution adopted by the Cowley County temperance rally at Winfield, Kans., on May 31, 1946, concerning the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages.

There being no objection, the resolution was received, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the shortage of food products makes it necessary to conserve grains and use them only for essential livestock and poultry feeding and for human consumption; and

Whereas the shortage of sugar and sugar products has made it necessary to limit use of these products to the bare necessities of the same: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we as representative citizens of Cowley County, Kans., respectfully ask and petition the executive and legislative branches of our Government:

First. That the use of fruits, grains, sugars, and sugar products be withheld from the industries engaged in the making of malt, fermented and distilled liquors for beverage purposes; and Second. That the use of grains and other food products shall not be allowed in making alcoholic liquors in any areas where our armed forces are in control of foreign territory.

Whereas the twenty-first amendment to the Federal Constitution, which repealed national prohibition, provides for the protection of territory where the citizens by vote have established prohibition: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we respectfully ask and petition the legislative and executive branches of the Federal Government to fulfill the provisions of that amendment, by

First. Making effective this amendment by refusing to grant Federal permission to sell intoxicating liquors in territory where they are prohibited by local laws; and Second. That action also be taken by the Federal legislative and administrative branches of the Government to prohibit the shipping of alcoholic liquors into territory where they are prohibited by local laws.

Whereas the presence of intoxicating liquors in and near the military camps where our young men have been in training for military service, has proved to be a menace to them physically, socially, and morally: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we respectfully ask and petition our Federal Government to prohibit the sale and use of intoxicating liquors in the camps and in the places near the camps frequented by the men in the armed forces.

ABOLITION OF OPA, THE CPA, AND NATIONAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present for appropriate reference and to have printed in the RECORD, without the signatures attached, a petition signed by 23 citizens of Pittsburg, Kans., requesting that the OPA, the CPA, and the National Housing Administration be abolished.

There being no objection, the petition was received, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, without the signatures attached, as follows:

Hostilities having ceased 9 months ago, we, the undersigned, respectfully request that you immediately sponsor or support a movement declaring the war as ended, thereby relieving the administration of all wartime emergency powers. The OPA, CPA, and National Housing Administration should be abolished without any further delay.

We want the national budget balanced and a substantial reduction of taxes. We favor legislation that will give labor and management equal rights. Above all, we place special emphasis upon the protection of States' rights and constitutional government.

MARGARET M. ROSS—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, some time ago there was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys Senate bill 1149, for the relief of Margaret M. Ross. That bill has received some consideration by our committee, but it relates to a claim against the United States. I understand that the members of the committee desire to have the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and wish to have the bill referred to the Committee on Claims. I therefore so request.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND THE JUDICIARY APPROPRIATIONS—AMENDMENT

Mr. MURRAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6056) making appropriations for the Department of State, Justice, Commerce, and the Judiciary, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 68, line 16, strike out "(not to exceed $4,200,000)" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "(not to exceed $5,757,000, $1,557,000 of which is to be exclusively for the Office of Small Business at the seat of government)."

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS, 1947—AMENDMENT

Mr. TAYLOR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6496) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any administrator, officer, or supervisor having responsibility for forming or carrying our personnel policies and regulations who does not, in good faith, attempt to adjust the grievances of employees, or who fails to meet and negotiate in good faith with the representatives of employee organizations.

THE QUIETING OF TITLE TO SUBMERGED AND RECLAIMED LAND

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, today I received two telegrams, one from H. C. Brockel, municipal port director of the city of Milwaukee, inquiring when the Senate will take action on House Joint Resolution 225 which relates to quieting title to submerged and reclaimed lands. In his telegram he said it was important that action be taken in order that lake ports could proceed with their improvements. I ask that that telegram, and another telegram from D. W. Hoan, president, Great Lakes Harbors Association, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MILWAUKEE, WIS., June 19, 1946.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Respectfully request and urge your influence to bring House Joint Resolution 225 before Senate for action before adjournment. Senate action will quiet title to submerged and reclaimed lands and permit ports to make long-range plans for improvement without fear of Federal agency attack upon title. Senate will do great public service by terminating entire controversy by passage of House Joint Resolution 225.

BOARD OF HARBOR COMMISSIONERS, CITY OF MILWAUKEE,
H. C. BROCKEL, Municipal Port Director.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., June 19, 1946.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Will greatly appreciate your assistance in securing Senate action on House Joint Resolution 225 before adjournment. Great Lakes Harbors Association by resolution at annual meeting last week declared unanimous support of Great Lakes ports for this legislation. Senate will do great public service by terminating submerged lands controversy by passage of House Joint Resolution 225 immediately. Many thanks.

GREAT LAKES HARBORS ASSOCIATION,
D. W. HOAN, President.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, with reference to the telegram inserted in the RECORD by the Senator from Wisconsin, let me say that it pertains to a very important bill now on the calendar of the Senate, a bill which has passed the House by an overwhelming majority, and which has been approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee after long and comprehensive hearings. It is a bill which affects all the States which border on the ocean, and it affects some central States which have no seacoast at all, because the beds of streams and inland bodies of water are also covered by the bill. It is a bill to clear the title in the States to submerged lands, to carry out a policy which has been enunciated by approximately 52 decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States extending over a period of 100 years.

NATIONAL HOUSING AGENCY'S PLAN FOR REPAIRS AND REMODELING OF EXISTING DWELLINGS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a memorandum in relation to the action of OPA, which has a direct bearing on the housing situation. We see much in the newspapers nowadays about OPA. Former President Hoover apparently was misquoted on the subject, and in substance stated so. Bowles threatens to resign if he does not get his way. If he had looked more after the administration of the office and did less talking, OPA would not be in the fix it is. There would have been less maladministration and we would have had more production. The memorandum which I ask to have printed in the RECORD has reference to the situation which now arises by reason of Mr. Wyatt's request that a large portion of the building material be used for repairing of buildings.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

As showing how the bureaucrats work, and thwart the express will of Congress:

The Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of May 22, 1946, Public 388, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, puts almost exclusive emphasis, through Government aid, on (1) stimulation of building materials production for the production of new residential facilities, and (2) of fixing prices for such new construction. It will be recalled that the National Housing Expediter set a goal of several million residential units—new construction—to be completed under the plan within a specified time.

Well, the following excerpt from OPA's appropriation justification for the fiscal year 1947 (in the House) will explain itself (after pointing out that emphasis is not to be put on the remodeling of existing residential structures):

"This emphasis was caused directly by a change in the plans of the Wyatt housing program which originally placed almost complete emphasis on new residential dwellings. Since that time, it has become apparent that the goal set for the necessary number of additional dwelling units could not be met solely on a new construction basis. Therefore, Mr. Wyatt is now calling for major repairs and remodeling of existing dwellings to furnish 250,000 to 500,000 of the necessary additional units in the coming year."

Then follows this statement by OPA:

"The cost to the consumer of such remodeling is estimated to run upward of $1,000,000,000 for the next 12 months."

This shows that Wyatt has made over his plan; changed the act of Congress to the tune of more than $1,000,000,000 in expenditures for 12 months. It shows what can happen if the Reorganization Plan making National Housing Agency permanent is allowed to become operative.

SOVIET FOREIGN POLICY—ARTICLES BY JOHN FOSTER DULLES

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, no subject is of more immediate interest and importance to us all than Russia. With all the dangers of postwar reconstruction on a world-wide basis, including the terrible possibilities of the atomic bomb, we are faced with the difficult reconciliation of ideologies which are both seeking to find a dominant place in the postwar thinking.

War with Russia is unthinkable, but it will take statesmanship of the highest order to prevent the slow development of the kind of misunderstandings that might ultimately lead to war. Our experience between World Wars I and II must teach us how important it is to allay international suspicions and misunderstandings.

In two recent issues of Life magazine, June 3 and June 10, there appeared articles by Mr. John Foster Dulles, the well-known international lawyer, and who has been an adviser of our State Department and particularly of our delegates at the San Francisco Conference last year. These articles are entitled "Thoughts on Soviet Foreign Policy and What To Do About It." In these articles Mr. Dulles analyzes Rusia's motives in seeking a "Pax Sovietica" and the methods by which she would impose such a peace on the world. This analysis appeared in the first number of Mr. Dulles' articles, and in the second number he suggests an approach to the whole subject from the standpoint of an enlightened American foreign policy.

This subject is so important, Mr. President, that I ask unanimous consent to have these articles by Mr. Dulles incorporated in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THOUGHTS ON SOVIET FOREIGN POLICY AND WHAT TO DO ABOUT IT—AN INTERNATIONAL EXPERT ANALYZES RUSSIA'S MOTIVES IN SEEKING A "PAX SOVIETICA" AND THE METHODS BY WHICH SHE WOULD IMPOSE IT ON THE WORLD

(By John Foster Dulles)

No nation's foreign policy can be ascertained merely from what its officials say. More important are the philosophy of its leaders and the actual manifestations of that philosophy in what is done. By putting together such pieces, a reliable conclusion can usually be reached. In the case of the Soviet Union there are many pieces and they fit neatly together to form a coherent and logical whole.

The makers of Soviet foreign policy take seriously the fact that the world is one world and that peace is indivisible. These phrases, which are catchwords and slogans for us, are the basic premises of Soviet foreign policy. The primary purpose of that policy is to achieve peace, security, and opportunity for the Soviet Union. Those are the usual goals of every foreign policy. But since, to the Soviet leaders, the world is one world and since peace is indivisible, peace and security are considered by them to depend upon eradicating the non-Soviet type of society which now dangerously divides the one world into incompatible halves. That also, they think, will be good for the world; for the Soviet type of proletariat dictatorship, originated to promote the welfare of the masses and to end the exploitation of man by man, is considered the ideal kind of government. That, in their thinking, is true democracy. Political thinking or spiritual belief antagonistic to that is called Fascist and unfriendly.

It is necessary to understand the meaning which Soviet speakers and writers give to the words "democracy," "Fascist" and "friendly." Failure to understand that explains why we so often agree with what Soviet leaders say and then find it difficult to reconcile their acts with what we thought they meant. Thus Soviet leaders say that the goal of their foreign policy is to have everywhere democratic governments which will be friendly and which will eradicate Fascist thinking. That seems to be reasonable and nothing to which we could properly take exception—until we realize that:

Democracy in Russian means the Soviet type of proletariat dictatorship.

Fascist in Russian is a word of reproach applied to all non-Soviet faiths.

Friendly in Russian is a word of approval reserved for those who profess belief in Soviet ideals and who prove sincerity by working to promote them.

So interpreted, Soviet policy is one admittedly intolerant. It seeks to eliminate what, to us, are the essentials of a free society. It seeks this with urgency because Soviet leaders believe that, until this is done, peace is in jeopardy. Tolerance of non-Soviet thinking is, to them, weakness which is dangerous.

As Mr. Vishinsky said in his powerful refugee speech at the first session of the United Nations, "We do not want to accept tolerance. We paid too much for it." Therefore, he concludes, even the most obscure and helpless refugee, fleeing over the face of the earth, is a potential threat to Soviet peace and security if he harbors thoughts antagonistic to Soviet communism.

Soviet leaders think that the quick way to eradicate such potential threats is to have governments everywhere which accept the political philosophy of the Soviet Union. Such governments will maintain an intensive censorship and secret police to detect those who persist in other political beliefs and will make such thinkers harmless by removing them from a normal place in society. By bringing such governments into power throughout the world, the leaders of the Soviet Union would create world harmony, a great political calm which will be the Pax Sovietica.

THE SOVIET PROGRAM

For the purpose of achieving Soviet policy, the world is divided roughly into three zones. These three zones are: (1) an inner zone, the U. S. S. R. itself; (2) a middle zone, representing a belt or cordon sanitaire surrounding the inner zone; (3) an outer zone, representing the rest of the world.

THE INNER ZONE

The Soviet inner zone comprises territory incorporated into the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. It now comprehends the Soviet Union as originally established in 1917, plus adjacent territories subsequently incorporated on the basis of historic, strategic, or ideological considerations. This inner zone has been largely expanded. If one starts at the northwest corner of the Soviet Union as of 1917 and swings in a great arc south and east to the Vladivostok area, it will be seen that the following have been added: The north of Finland, the strategic areas of south Finland which abut on the Gulf of Finland and control access to the Baltic Sea, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, the northern part of German East Prussia, the eastern half of Poland, the eastern part of Czechoslovakia (represented by the Carpatho-Ukraine), that part of Rumania which comprised Bessarabia and Bukovina, Tannu Tuva, Port Arthur, the southern half of Sakhalin Island, the Kurile Islands.

The Soviet system operates as a federal system under a constitution designed to make it easy to add new peoples and new territories. There is no reason to believe that expansion has come to an end. At the moment, the Kars and Erzurum Provinces are sought to be recovered from Turkey, and various semiautonomous adjacent states in the middle zone are looked on as ultimate additions to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

THE MIDDLE ZONE

The middle zone is territory which surrounds the inner zone which is not yet ripe for incorporation into the U. S. S. R. but which is close enough to it to be amenable to the influence of Soviet military power. This zone is, or recently has been, occupied by elements of the Soviet Army. Where there is no present occupation, there is fear of it, and the governments there, while nominally independent and in some respects actually independent, are under strong inducement to put their foreign policy, their armies and, most important of all, their secret police and censorship into the hands of persons who take much guidance from Moscow. Thus the Soviet leaders assure that the character of these governments will be friendly.

Middle-zone conditions exist in varying intensity in continental Europe east of a line running roughly from the Baltic, just east of Denmark, through the middle of Germany to the Adriatic and then south to the borders of Greece. This central European part of the middle zone includes: Poland, the eastern half of Germany, Czechoslovakia, eastern Austria, Hungary, Rumania, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Albania.

In Asia, the middle zone includes: Outer Mongolia, Manchuria (where the U. S. S. R. has rights in Dairen, and in the Manchurian trunk railway lines), the northern half of Korea, Sinkiang Province of China (where there has been considerable penetration from the Soviet Union, but as to which little reliable up-to-date information is available).

There is no reason to believe that the middle zone is fixed.

There are current efforts to extend it in relation to: Greece (where there is a bitter struggle for ascendancy between the Soviet-sponsored E. A. M. and other Greek parties), Iran (Persia, where its northern Province of Azerbaijan, which the Soviet has been occupying, is in revolt), Turkey (which is under Soviet pressure), Kurdistan (where the Kurds are being encouraged to establish an autonomous state under Soviet protection), the southern part of Korea (where there is Soviet sponsorship of local political groups).

THE OUTER ZONE

The third zone is the outer zone. It comprises the balance of the world. These areas are sufficiently distant, physically, from Soviet land power so that friendly governments cannot be achieved by direct power methods. The methods which are used vary, particularly as between self-governing and non-self-governing areas.

In colonial areas, which have an aggregate population of some 750,000,000, Soviet leaders stimulate the independence movements and give them moral leadership. They encourage revolution, rather than evolution, as being apt to result in governments which will break completely with those who now govern.

Countries which are fully self-governing constitute the other half of the outer zone. In some of these, as in France, strong Communist Parties have been built up which cooperate with Soviet leaders. In other countries it is not possible to have Communist or extreme left parties strong enough to be influential in their own right. Under those conditions influence is exerted through small, well-disciplined minorities. These work their way into positions of influence in large factional blocs and can even be a balance of power where major political parties closely divide the voting strength.

Soviet objectives are also sought to be advanced by use of freedom of the press and of speech to put into circulation "smears" of those who have a strong faith which conflicts with Soviet ideology and whose moral or political influence is feared. The threat of such smear will, it is hoped, deter such persons from public activity or make them seem to be a liability to any political party.

Some illustrations of Soviet methods in the outer zone are:

1. One of the developments which the Soviet Union wishes to prevent is a political or economic union of the western European powers which lie just beyond the middle zone, that is, France, Belgium, Holland, and the United Kingdom. It wishes to keep these nations divided lest, united, they develop an influence which might counter that of the Soviet Union in the European middle zone. Within these countries there have grown up Communist Parties which cooperate closely with Soviet communism. Some months ago a French official, speaking of increased economic unity between France and some of her neighboring countries, said that it would not be possible because it would be displeasing to the Soviet which, through Communist influence, could bring about such strikes in France as would seriously impede her economic recovery.

2. The colonial peoples have natural grievances and unrealized aspirations. These have been stimulated by war conditions and Japanese-German propaganda. The unrest readily takes the form of violent independence movements. Soviet leaders encourage that resort to violence rather than reliance on the peaceful processes of the United Nations Charter. At the first session of the United Nations they did not want the Assembly to recognize as meritorious the voluntary steps taken by mandatory powers to turn their mandated areas over to United Nations trusteeship. At the London and Paris meetings of the Council of Foreign Ministers, they opposed the United States plan for Italian colonies, which would pledge early independence and, in the meantime, entrust administration to a Trusteeship Council of the United Nations.

3. A part of the outer zone area upon which Soviet diplomacy and propaganda is centered is the Mediterranean area, which constitutes the historic life line of Britain to India and the Far East. The Soviet Union is seeking to take from Britain control of this area. Its efforts touch upon the entire Mediterranean coastline.

Spain, with Spanish Morocco, controls the Western portals to the Mediterranean. It is now the scene of a critically important political contest. There is agreement by all the great powers that Franco ought to go. But the issue is: How? And what will succeed him? Great Britain and the United States are working for a peaceful succession which would be liberal in character, not communistic. The Soviet leaders are not averse to civil war which would put communism into control. France has vacillated between these two pressures, but now inclines toward the Soviet program.

Soviet leaders are making strong efforts to get control of French foreign policy. At the London meetings of the Council of Foreign Ministers and of the Security Council, the Soviet delegates seemed to make special efforts to embarrass Mr. Bidault, French Minister of Foreign Affairs and leader of the French Catholic Party (M. R. P.). Recently the Soviet Union, as an exceptional measure and despite their own taking of help from UNRRA, gave wheat for distribution in France through the French Communists to help them gain political influence.

In Italy, communism is being promoted as against the middle parties, and constant efforts are made to capitalize on the mistakes of Anglo-American military government.

The Arab world is being wooed. The Soviet went to extremes, before the Security Council, in proposing measures to eliminate French and British troops from Syria and Lebanon. It encourages unrest in French Morocco, Algiers, and Tunisia. It seeks advantages from Arab opposition to a Palestine policy favored by many in the United States.

4. In Latin America, many of the republics face very difficult problems of postwar economic adjustment and many of their workers—industrial and agricultural—do not enjoy good standards of living. This offers opportunity for communistic propaganda. Extreme left-wing agitators are using it to break up the hemispheric solidarity which the United States has sought to develop.

5. The Soviet Union is seeking to develop the recently organized World Federation of Trade Unions as a mechanism for exerting world-wide political influence. At present the W. F. T. U. has important constituent bodies in more than 50 nations. The national labor unions which are constituents of the W. F. T. U. represent, in the main, the left wing of labor (in the United States it is the CIO) and the Communists and Communist sympathizers among them exert concerted influence along lines favored by the Soviet Union.

6. An illustration of the smear method is the case of Sr. Ezequiel Padilla, recently Minister of Foreign Affairs of Mexico. At the San Francisco Conference he was a stalwart supporter of the United States in its policies and largely contributed to hemispheric unity. Upon his return to Mexico, he was viciously attacked in the left-wing press as having been bribed or having sold out to the United States for political support. The slander became widespread and was an inducing cause of his prompt retirement from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. His successor saw to it that, at the London meeting of the United Nations, Mexico frequently voted with the Soviet Union and against the United States. Thereby he became immune from a fate like Padilla's.

TECHNIQUES

Soviet techniques are those of a society which deals with an outer world which it deems impure and dangerous. Nonintercourse is the general rule and fraternization is forbidden, except as part of a planned penetration.

Between the inner zone and outer zone an "iron curtain" is maintained. This serves two purposes, one domestic and the other foreign. From a domestic standpoint it is needed to preserve that inner "purity" of political thinking which has been achieved through nearly 30 years of propaganda and purge. It also prevents internal discontent which might arise were the working people of the Soviet Union to know of better conditions of workers in many other countries, such as the United States and Great Britain.

From the external standpoint, the iron curtain permits Soviet propaganda and influence to be more effective than if the actual conditions within the Soviet Union were fully known. Economic conditions within parts of the Soviet Union untouched by invasion compare favorably with conditions in backward areas of the Middle and Far East. But intimate knowledge of the way of life within the Soviet Union would, on net balance, reduce Soviet prestige. As it is, discontented people and idealists find it easy to attribute to the Soviet experiment an exaggerated possibility of realizing their hopes and aspirations. They measure that possibility by their imagination or by a few carefully staged exhibits, not by realities. That is, for the Soviet Union, an asset of inestimable value.

To the Soviet people the iron curtain is pictured as necessary defense against an unfriendly outer world. In this connection the Soviet leaders welcome and, indeed, seek occasions which seem to show that that unfriendliness is not merely a matter of the past, but of the present. At the San Francisco Conference and at meetings of the Assembly and Security Council of the United Nations, the Soviet delegation has almost always pressed their proposals to public debate and voting, even where defeat was inevitable. That makes it easier for them to dramatize, at home and to their followers abroad, what they call the unfriendly and Fascist attitude of the outer world.

When the necessities of diplomacy or business take Soviet nationals abroad, Soviet policy requires them to observe rigorously the thesis that Soviet democracy cannot be tolerant of, or merge with, alien thinking. Soviet diplomats and, indeed, all Soviet nationals abroad, are not to mingle freely with those of opposite faith. They occasionally participate genially in purely social events, but they rarely discuss political, social, and cultural matters. If, as an exception, some seem to become intimate with, or influenced by, adherents of a different system, they are apt to be called home.

In further application of its policy, the Soviet Union moves very slowly about joining functional organization for international cooperation. Thus, it has not yet joined the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the United Nations Food and Agricultural Organization, the Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization, the Emergency Economic Committee for Europe, and the European Coal Organization. It has not so far accepted our State Department's invitation to attend a conference preparatory to the establishment of an International Trade Organization.

An apparent exception is the membership of the Soviet Union in the United Nations. Beginning with the Moscow Conference of October 1943 the Soviet Union has taken part in steps to create a world organization of which it would be a leading member. At San Francisco the Soviet delegation, under instructions from Mr. Stalin, accepted certain Charter provisions which they strongly disliked (notably those permitting free discussion in the Security Council and Assembly and the "peaceful adjustment" article 14) rather than have no general international organization or, perhaps, one without them.

The indications are that the Soviet leaders originally thought of world organization as a means whereby they, with the United States and Britain, would rule the world. That idea of perpetuating the wartime rule of the Big Three has had to be abandoned. But Soviet leaders were still glad to have a world organization which would be a preventive of an association limited to the western democracies and which would provide a means whereby the Soviet could promote, in the outer zone, its conception of world peace. Soviet leaders hope to take over from the western democracies their present preponderant influence in the United Nations. To this end they seek to develop the role of the WFTU in the United Nations and in the member nations. Meantime the United Nations can do no major harm to Soviet plans because the "veto power" of the permanent members of the Security Council largely insures against that. Soviet leaders have consistently sought to increase that insurance by making the veto all-embracing, even extending to discussion within the Security Council.

The ultimate reliance of Soviet foreign policy is its military power. There has been some demobilization. But the leaders of the Soviet Union have made it clear that they intend to maintain a strong land power, develop their air power and, as rapidly as practicable, to develop navies for use in the various waterways to which they have now obtained access, notably the Baltic Sea, the Mediterranean, and the Yellow Sea. They are working hard to learn how to use atomic energy. The leaders of the Soviet Union look upon military force as the core of sovereignty. Mr. Stalin, in his 1946 May-day statement, said it was to be guarded as "the apple of one's eye." In the discussion of peace treaties the Soviet delegates have consistently shown strong opposition to the principle of international supervision, even in relation to ex-enemies.

Soviet foreign policy is carried out in a rigid, mechanistic, and uncompromising way. The policy, both strategic and tactical, is made in and directed from Moscow, in considerable part by men who are personally ignorant of foreign conditions and foreign people and who map out moves on the basis of what, from the Soviet standpoint, seems logical. To them it is like playing a game of chess, the world being the chessboard. Soviet diplomats and private agents abroad are the pieces who move as directed by the master mind. Soviet diplomats are given practically no discretion, and even the heads of the Foreign Office, Mr. Molotov and Mr. Vishinsky, do not act on any major matter without clearing with Moscow and, presumably, with Mr. Stalin and the ruling political council, the Politburo.

POINTS OF STRENGTH IN SOVIET FOREIGN POLICY

Soviet foreign policy is powerful because it is a natural projection abroad of Soviet domestic policy. Within the Soviet Union political harmony is achieved by a governing group which, publicly committing itself to promote the welfare of the proletariat, takes in exchange a right to suppress intellectual freedoms which might lead to political disharmony.

In some matters, the Soviet system is tolerant. That is notably so in relation to ethnic differences between the inhabitants of its various states. Also, within the Soviet Union, men have considerable freedom to disagree and argue about science, astronomy, biology, the arts, music, the ballet, literature, and like matters. Religion is tolerated so long as it is only a ritual of worship. But there is no tolerance about political matters. There the state is supreme, and when it speaks, that is law—not merely statute law, but moral law. Political or religious thinking which conflicts with that is considered to be evil, not to be tolerated.

The means used to achieve internal political harmony are propaganda which persuades and force which intimidates and suppresses.

Soviet leaders now seek to do on a world-wide basis what they have done at home. That is Soviet foreign policy. It is natural, it is simple, it is positive. Those are elements of great strength.

Soviet foreign policy also has the strength which comes from being revolutionary. Change is the law of life and those who seek change have the exhilaration of seeming to move with an irresistible current of history. Soviet foreign policy, because it is dynamic, attracts those who think that radical change is needed to make the world better; it attracts those who think they can gain personal advantage from overturning the existing order; it attracts the many who are discontented with their lot.

The dynamic aspect of Soviet foreign policy is the more effective because it moves into a world which seems largely a vacuum so far as faith and order are concerned. Asia, Africa, and South America are lacking in healthy societies. Most of continental Europe is in postwar demoralization, accentuated by indecisive and incoherent attitudes toward Germany. The capitalistic centers, notably the British Empire and the United States, have developed some major defects. One of these is imperialism, with its byproduct of racial intolerance. Another is the failure to maintain steady production and employment. As against these the Soviet leaders pronounce the slogans of "independence" and "full employment." It is interesting to recall that efforts to get those two phrases into the Charter of the United Nations gave rise to strong opposition, as against which the Soviet viewpoint prevailed—with some qualification. Such episodes tend to confirm Soviet leaders in their view that the outer world is void of moral leadership and can readily be won to their new and vigorous faith.

Finally, Soviet policy has gained impetus from some spectacular successes. Internally, it developed in the brave and hardy Russian people a loyalty and discipline which, to the general amazement, threw back the German war machine. Externally, Soviet policy has already enlarged the Soviet Union so that it realizes most of the extreme aspirations of the czars, in some respects surpasses them, and is still expanding. The middle zone surrounds the inner zone with governments which are subservient to the will of the Soviet leaders. In the outer zone Soviet influence is everywhere powerful. Few men in political life anywhere act without first thinking whether they will please or displease the leaders of the Soviet Union. Never in history have a few men in a single country achieved such world-wide influence. This has all occurred within a few years and has given to Soviet leadership an enormous prestige.

THE WEAKNESSES OF SOVIET FOREIGN POLICY

It is understandable that Soviet leaders and their followers in many lands should feel confident of peacefully achieving their Pax Sovietica. In fact, such a conclusion dangerously misjudges the situation. It overrates initial successes plucked out of war and postwar confusion and when men are spiritually and physically tired. It underrates internal deficiencies and external resistances.

The Soviet political set-up is not adapted to carrying through grandiose, world-wide plans. The power of decision is too much concentrated at the top and there is not enough delegation of authority. Also, there is a serious shortage of personnel able to deal competently with foreign affairs.

In Europe the Soviet middle zone has been hastily put together under wartime conditions. It has not yet had to meet the full impact of intense nationalistic rivalries. Ambitious men have taken Soviet help to get or retain power. But they will not be happy to serve indefinitely as Soviet lackeys. Some of them are already beginning to make that plain.

In the outer zone, Soviet foreign policy relies excessively on mass discontents. These are always useful to help pull down an existing social order. But the period of destruction must be succeeded by a period of construction. When that phase comes, Soviet leadership will lose much of its foreign following.

Another basic weakness is the dependence of Soviet policy upon the iron curtain. That temporarily helps the Soviet leaders to represent their Union as having found the way to solve all economic and social problems. But it will not always work that way. The barrier will increasingly create distrust and suspicion. More and more people will want to look behind the curtain. If they cannot, they will conclude that the Soviet system does not work well enough to stand impartial inspection and comparison Heavy reliance upon such an artificial aid is a fundamental weakness.

Most surely of all the Soviet calculation is wrong because it underestimates the Western World's repugnance to human suffering and its attachment to personal liberties.

The Soviet system is ruthless. That particularly shows itself during the transition period when the nonconformists are being eliminated. It is not possible to perform painlessly the operations needed to conform great masses of human beings to the Soviet pattern. Thus, within the middle zone, political assassinations are frequent and many are snatched away from their homes and families by the secret police because their political beliefs are suspect. Millions are uprooted and doomed to perish by privation. Millions seek to flee from the Soviet zones of occupation and many refugees commit suicide rather than to be sent back to the middle or inner zone. People who have partaken of a humane civilization are repelled by the low estimate of human life and callousness to human misery which is involved in Soviet measures for achieving conformity.

Programs are rightly judged not merely by their avowed ends, but by their methods. Today, because the peoples of the Soviet Union fought so gallantly when Hitler attacked them, we prefer to think of them in terms of their bravery and their self-sacrificial spirit and to draw a veil over what their armies, their politicians, and their secret police (NKVD) are now doing in neighboring lands. But as those methods come to be seen more clearly, they will surely arouse a formidable resistance. Already, in Austria and Hungary, where Soviet methods are known first-hand, the Communist Parties have been overwhelmingly defeated in elections.

Most bitter of all will be the resistance to the surrender of freedoms which the Soviet program would exact. So far, Soviet successes have been primarily within countries where personal freedoms have never been widely enjoyed. Where those freedoms have been practiced, the proponents of Soviet policies dare talk only about increased freedoms from economic fear. They keep silent about the political and spiritual freedoms which would be taken away. As the repressive features of the Soviet program become more clearly revealed, the resistance will grow.

In the ranks of organized labor the Soviet is pushing its policies most actively and is promising the most. Yet it is there, and among Socialists, that the most effective resistance developed. The governments which now most strongly react against the intolerance of Soviet policy are the Labor Governments of the British Commonwealth, as exemplified by Mr. Bevin of Great Britain, Mr. Evatt of Australia, and Mr. Frazer of New Zealand. Those American labor leaders who know and value American personal freedoms are carrying on a valiant and inadequately appreciated battle to prevent Communists from infiltrating into control of labor organizations. In other words, among the peoples who have had freedoms, the Soviet program is being opposed most strongly by those who are in most intimate touch with its methods, despite the fact that they belong to the proletariat class to which the Soviet program promises the most.

It can be taken as certain that as the full implications of the Soviet system come to be better understood by the American people, it will revive in them the spirit which led their forebears to pledge their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor to secure their personal freedoms.

We must act on the assumption that the Soviet program, if persisted in, will not peacefully succeed.

PART II

If the leaders of a great nation have embarked upon a foreign policy which may lead to our violent resistance, the time to plan against that is now. The sooner we make it clear that the policy cannot succeed, the more likely it is that the dangerous aspects of that policy may be changed.

None of us likes to face up to a new major international problem just when, by victory over Germany and Japan, we feel we have earned the right to a period of relaxation. None of us like to admit of danger coming from a nation which made an outstanding contribution to that victory. Some would avoid the issue by looking only upon the good ends which Soviet policy professes to seek. Some, while perceiving the intolerant and ruthless aspects of Soviet policy, cling to the hope that these aspects are only local or temporary. Some rely on the fact that no nation wants a major war or would deliberately provoke it. Some do not want to be bothered with unpleasant prospects when it cannot yet be demonstrated with mathematical certainty that they will happen.

Those are attitudes which contribute to war. They make possible the miscalculation out of which major wars arise.

It is quite true that no nation wants a big war or one the outcome of which is doubtful. That is almost always the case. Generally, such wars get started by mistake. National leaders begin by pushing outward their national domain and sphere of influence at points where, they calculate, there will be little resistance. When their calculation proves correct and no strong reaction occurs, they go on. Those within the country who advised restraint become discredited. Leadership becomes concentrated in the hands of the more reckless, who take more chances. Finally, they find to their chagrin that they have made a bad calculation.

If we have another great war, that is probably the way it will come. No one will deliberately plan it. It will be the result of miscalculating.

Twice within 25 years the United States has been drawn into a world war because the American people finally came to feel that aggressive policies in Europe and Asia threatened our conception of democracy and our ideals of personal freedom. In each case the foreign leaders would probably have followed a different course had they, at an early stage, realized that the American people would react as they did. In not making apparent, in time, our devotion to our ideals, we were guilty of contributory negligence. We must not make the same mistake three times in a generation.

SOVIET CHANGE OF PROGRAM IS POSSIBLE

It may be asked whether anything we can do would, as a practical matter, bring the Soviet leaders voluntarily to change their foreign program. No one can answer that question with assurance. There seems to be an inevitability about Soviet foreign policy. Soviet leaders believe that certain freedoms for the individual are dangerous. They have stamped them out at home just as elsewhere governments stamp out the carriers of dangerous germs. But abroad the freedoms which they fear are rife, and they are highly contagious freedoms. So, to defend their land against contamination from without, Soviet leaders set up barriers to insulate their people. That, however, is no permanent solution. It is a form of self-imprisonment that is intolerable to ambitious and able men who know that their nation is a great power and desire it to play a world-wide role. Therefore, they seek everywhere foreign governments which will join in their campaign of purge. Only in that way will the world be safe, from the standpoint of Soviet leaders.

It can be argued that, so long as Soviet domestic policy is what it is, Soviet foreign policy must also be what it is. However, human events seldom unfold in accordance with a purely logical pattern. Soviet leaders today are not as fanatical as were their predecessors. They have made many changes of domestic policy in the interest of expediency. The so-called communism of Russia today is, economically, very different from the communism taught by Marx and inaugurated under Lenin and Trotsky. Soviet foreign policy has also changed in the sense that some years ago it would have been justified as fulfillment of a sacred mission to accomplish world revolution. Now it is justfied as a practical way to assure the security of the Soviet Union.

Under Mr. Stalin, Soviet moves abroad seem to have been marked by an effort to calculate chances. Soviet foreign representatives have sometimes taken extreme positions, but Mr. Stalin has pulled back and relieved the tension when unexpected opposition was encountered. All of that indicates that Soviet foreign policy is subject to change if it can be made abundantly clear to Soviet leaders that that policy is impractical and will not, in fact, promote the safety of the Soviet Union.

However, it is not very profitable to speculate about what will come out of the Kremlin. That is an interesting intellectual pastime, but an outsider will not, in that way, get much practical guidance. From the standpoint of action, the course is clear. We must act on the assumption that we can do something to bring Soviet leaders to change their foreign program. If we do not go ahead on that basis, we shall almost surely fail. If, for example, we assume that Soviet leaders cannot be brought to change their program, we drift into surrender or war. If the past is any guide, it will be war. Therefore, as a working hypothesis, we accept the possibility of change.

There is a second working hypothesis we must make. We must assume that it will be very difficult for us to bring about a change of Soviet foreign policy. We cannot expect Soviet leaders readily to change a policy which reflects the inner life and basic philosophy of Soviet communism and which has achieved great initial success. The difficulty is increased by the fact that Soviet leaders are not well informed about the state of the world. Therefore, any program of ours designed to bring the Soviet leaders to change their foreign policy should be a program that is wisely conceived, vigorously implemented, and unitedly supported by the American people.

AMERICAN POLICY

The basic purpose of Americans for the next few years should be to develop the facts which will make it apparent, even to those within the Kremlin, that present Soviet foreign policy will not succeed. Then they may change that policy. In that way, and only in that way, can we ward off the danger of another great war due to another great miscalculation.

It is, however, essential that we develop the right set of facts. It will be easy to go wrong in this matter. As it becomes increasingly clear that the Soviet program threatens our way of life and our cherished political and spiritual freedoms, we may react violently and foolishly. Some will want us to place our reliance wholly on our military and economic power and to use it to coerce Soviet leaders.

Such a program would probably fail. Soviet leaders are not the kind of men who are easily coerced. They do not want another major war, particularly one which they could not win. But they are tough, they are not afraid of fighting, and they cannot be arbitrarily pushed around.

Also, such a program would divide us internally. Many Americans sympathize with the professed social goals of the Sovet experiment and feel toward it much as foreign peoples during the last century felt toward the great American experiment. They would not want to crush it.

Even if we did crush it, that would prove nothing. That would not end the challenge to a society of personal freedom. On the contrary, it would probably intensify that challenge, for the Soviet experiment would then seem to have succumbed not to our merit, but to our might. New disciples of that faith would spring up everywhere.

No program is fruitful if it is merely against someone or something. Successful programs are those which are constructive and creative in their own right. What we need at this critical juncture is an affirmative demonstration that our society of freedom still has the qualities needed for survival. We must show that our free land is not spiritual lowland, easily submerged, but highland that, most of all, provides the spiritual, intellectual, and economic conditions which all men want. Upon such a program all true Americans could agree, and it would peacefully achieve our purpose.

Every civilization faces, and ought to face periodic challenges. That is nothing to complain about. It is the way the world works. In the face of the present challenge of Soviet foreign policy, we need to demonstrate:

First, that we genuinely cherish for ourselves and others the spiritual and intellectual freedoms which the Soviet system would take away, and that we are willing to sacrifice to preserve them;

Second, that those freedoms, which in the past have gloriously served mankind, are still the means whereby men can steadily advance their own development.

There is no difficulty in finding ways to make that demonstration. I make a few suggestions, primarily by way of illustration, because it is impractical here to be exhaustive.

1. The most significant demonstration that can be made is at the religious level. The overriding and ever-present reason for giving freedom to the individual is that men are created as the children of God, in His image. The human personality is thus sacred and the state must not trample upon it. That is what our forebears believed. They set forth in their Declaration of Independence that men were "endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights." They fought to make that Declaration good and founded a government dedicated to preserve for the people "the blessings of liberty" and which could not trespass on the Bill of Rights. If that religious belief has gone from us, then personal freedoms become primarily a matter of personal satisfaction and their retention largely a matter of self-gratification. Indeed, under those circumstances, freedom is dangerous. Mr. Vishinsky has rightly said, "It is indispensable to bring a limitation to the will and the action of man." In a free society that limitation comes primarily from acceptance of the moral law and the exercise by freemen of the self-restraints, the self-discipline, and self-sacrifice which the moral law enjoins. If a society ceases to be a religious society or if it falls under atheistic leadership, as in the case of the Soviet Union, then it is both logical and practical to treat human freedoms like the freedoms of wild animals and to suppress those freedoms so that men, like domesticated animals, will be more amenable and more secure. But Soviet leaders would know that that project is impracticable as against a people who believe that their freedoms flow from their Creator and who also use those freedoms with the restraint which is enjoined by divine commandment.

Rededication to the faith of our fathers is thus, above all, what is needed to make apparent the futility of any world program based on the suppression of human freedom.

2. We can demonstrate that our political and religious faith is a curative thing, able to heal the sores in our body politic.

There is encouraging evidence that free societies have not lost the capacity to advance the general welfare. Western democracy is already reacting well to the Soviet challenge. The abuses against which Soviet propaganda tilts are much the ghosts of a dead past. Political imperialism and cold-blooded laissez faire economics are on their way out.

The colonial powers, by the Charter of the United Nations, made major commitments to promote the well-being and free institutions of dependent peoples. They seem ready to translate those words into deeds which, even if they are still inadequate, would go far toward liquidating imperialism. The mandatory powers, except for South Africa, have agreed to trusteeship or independence. Recent proposals of the Netherlands in respect of its East Indies, and of Great Britain in respect of India and Egypt, show acceptance of the principle that imperialism and strategic advantage must yield to the right of independence.

We in the United States have done much to humanize our economic order. Social security has begun to be a reality and the specter of unemployment is being banished.

We have done something toward eradicating the blight of bigotry. Our religious groups have tackled the problem with vigor, as have some political leaders, and while progress is slow it is real.

In such ways our system of personal freedoms demonstrates its capacity to cure social ills. We must press on in those ways. We must, however, not press so fast that we stumble. We must avoid trying to cure everything by laws and decrees which so regiment and burden our society that government becomes the master of men, not their servant. We must keep our reforms in the hands of those who not only believe in personal freedoms but understand that, in fact, they disappear with the disappearance of free economic opportunity. To preserve a free society, we must choose political leaders who are competent. We can, in this respect, learn something from the Soviet system which gives leadership to those, who, on the one hand, believe devoutly in their system and who, on the other hand, are hardheaded, competent persons.

3. Another important phase of our national life is the military phase. Most Americans would prefer that to be unimportant—some for idealistic reasons and others for selfish reasons. But if we neglect our military establishment, that may lead to a dangerous misjudgment of us by the Soviet leaders. They believe in force. They take it for granted that those who have precious things will, if they are able, maintain a force-in-being to protect them. They assume that a man who does not put a lock on the door of his house has nothing in it that he greatly values. There can be little doubt but what Soviet leaders became much more confident and ambitious when, immediately after the fighting stopped, we let our military establishments deteriorate. They infer that we have nothing left which we value enough so that we are willing to make a sacrifice to insure it against loss. So long as the leaders of the Soviet Union reason that way about the significance of military establishments, so long must we maintain a strong military establishment. That does not require us to become a militaristic people or to make a provocative use of far-flung bases. It need not stop us from seeking a general reciprocal reduction of military establishments as contemplated by the United Nations Charter. What it does mean is that we should translate into modern terms the spirit which led our founders to say, in our Constitution, that a well-regulated militia was "necessary to the security of a free State."

4. Another demonstration we can make is in the area of economic aid. If we believe in a humane society, we will help those in other lands who are destitute. If we believe in a society of human freedoms, we will keep life and vigor in those who, if they live, will support and defend that kind of society. We will show the world that it is a good thing to have free people as neighbors.

We have already done that on a truly gigantic scale. We plan to do more through extending credits to Great Britain and other nations. That is as it should be.

However, the effect of what we are doing is largely nullified by abuses of individual freedom. The result on net balance is to make people elsewhere wonder whether, after all, a society of individual freedom is tolerable. Most of them have only a small margin for survival. They can exist only if production and transportation are steady and uninterrupted. They are frightened when they see that our freedom to eat is exercised so that our food exports fall below what our Government has promised to starving people and when our freedom to strike is exercised to interrupt production and transportation vital to world recovery. In these ways we witness against our professed faiths.

Our people's apparent recklessness in the use of their freedoms and apparent apathy to the cause of world-wide freedom are primarily due to the failure of those in authority to see the true nature of the present world crisis, to tell it simply to the American people, and to propose, with foresight, policies which measure up to the need. That should be corrected in order that the American people should, by their conduct, make it clear beyond peradventure that they are prepared to accept personal sacrifice to help keep freedom alive in the world. Such sacrifice now may spare us far greater sacrifice later on.

5. Another demonstration we can make is in those parts of the world where, as a result of our military operations, we are in de facto control. We fought for the Four Freedoms and for justice as expressed in the Atlantic Charter. There are some parts of the world where for the present it is impossible for us to do much to realize those goals. But there are other parts of the world, notably in Japan, in Italy and its colonies, in the western parts of Germany and Austria, and also in China and southern Korea, where the United States could, if it would, actually give men a good chance to get the freedom and justice for which we fought.

In Japan, General MacArthur has shown what can be done. Elsewhere we act as though we were inhibited from giving men freedom and justice until formal peace treaties say we may. Actually, treaty or no treaty, life goes on and the pattern of that life is being made. We should, wherever we can, make that pattern one which reflects the ends for which we professedly fought.

The fact is that our war and postwar diplomacy, as a whole, makes it natural for Soviet leaders to feel that we are insincere. Often, and conspicuously in our dealings with the Soviet Government, we have abandoned the very principles which, when it seems to serve our convenience, we invoke against the Soviet Government. For example, we bartered away to the Soviet Union the rights of weak nations, as China and Poland, despite the Atlantic Charter. We have, in Germany, shared in policies and practices which are inhuman and unjust by the standards we use to condemn Soviet policies and methods. At the London and Paris meetings of the Council of Foreign Ministers we began to put our foreign policy on the right track, but we have a big deficit to make up.

Soviet leaders are even more suspicious of us than we are of them. They are materialistic and highly skeptical of noble professions. If we wish them to look upon us as people of righteous convictions, it is vitally necessary to adhere steadfastly to principle not merely in word but above all in deed.

WHAT THE UNITED NATIONS MIGHT DO

So far we have not spoken of the United Nations as a mechanism for preventing the violent clash we apprehend. We have talked primarily of our demonstrating that our way of life is so vigorous and deeply rooted that others will renounce, as both impractical and as undesirable, the task of uprooting it. We count upon Soviet tolerance coming through Soviet realization that international intolerance will not work.

We deliberately make that approach to the problem. The healthy quality of any society must always be its first reliance. No artificial props can be devised, no mechanistic formulae can be invented to sustain a society which has lost its vigor and its prestige. That is as it should be.

The United Nations can be useful. It has great potentialities. Also it has severe limitations. Unless we appreciate these limitations our efforts may be misdirected and our reliance may be misplaced.

Today, friendly relations among the nations are threatened by three practices which, to one nation or another, seem to be dangerous, but which the United Nations cannot control.

1. Great powers use force, or more subtle methods, to gain working control of the governments of weak states.

Two cases before the Security Council illustrate this cause of complaint. One was the case of Soviet troops in Iran. Another was the case of British troops in Greece. In both cases public discussion led to promises of early withdrawal. But the action of the Security Council did not go to the heart of the matter, namely, was the government of a presumably sovereign state being improperly influenced by penetrations and pressures from abroad?

The Security Council may be able to arouse enough public opinion to prevent power politics assuming a crude form. That is something. But it is not nearly enough if the result is merely to drive such politics underground. There are many underground ways. The United States during its expansive period used them in its relation to Texas and Panama. Since then the art has been perfected. It is one against which the Security Council can give little protection. For if the penetration wholly succeeds, the local government, under the force of penetration, condones it. If the penetration succeeds partially, the outward manifestation is apt to be a civil war. In either case there is little that the United Nations can do about it without interference in what, in form, has become a domestic matter.

This condition causes much concern to nations small and great. The peoples of small states may have imposed on them governments which in major matters serve foreign masters. That is in essence the Soviet middle zone program. Also, great nations see their place in the world menaced by such methods. The Soviet policy in the Mediterranean and Middle East makes the leaders of Britain feel that their nation is today in peril as great as when Rommel was knocking at the door of Egypt. Communist activities in Latin America are bringing the American people to sense the first serious challenge to the Monroe Doctrine and its successor, the doctrine of Chapultepec. On the other hand, Soviet leaders feel that unless they do what they are doing in the middle zone it would be done to them.

So fear grips men's souls because of international practices with which the United Nations is not yet equipped to deal.

2. Another practice which, according to Soviet leaders, causes them fear is the use of our freedoms to stir up hatred. This abuse of freedom, said Mr. Vishinsky, "leads to the commission of crime against the members of the United Nations." Mr. Molotov at the Council of Foreign Ministers in London charged that the freedom of press which we sought for Rumania reflected not so much high principle as a desire to have publicized in Rumania opinions hostile to the Soviet Union. He has pointed out that the Soviet Constitution (art. 123) says that the advocacy of racial hatred or contempt is punishable, and he demands, internationally, protection against the advocacy of hatred against, and contempt of, the Soviet Union.

Such pleas from such a source seem to us strange, for Soviet communism itself relies much on fomenting class hatred. But the concern which Soviet leaders express is probably genuine. They are used to living dangerously. But at least they get protection at home from public attack by speech or press. Now, after nearly 30 years of that kind of protection, they have developed an almost morbid fear of an outer world where men are free to criticize them and the system for which they stand. There is, of course, no United Nations machinery for dealing with such use, and possible abuse, of freedom of speech and press as to Soviet leaders seem a danger.

3. Another practice which causes international friction is the use of freedoms to destroy freedom. The Soviet program uses our freedom of press, speech, and communication in order to convert us to a society which will suppress those freedoms. It causes acute irritation when aliens make such use of our freedoms and at the same time deny us freedom to test the truth of what they portray to us. It seems as though our society should protect itself against the possible perpetration upon it of a fraud. However, to build up retaliatory barriers would increase distrust and intensify division. The real remedy is to enlarge, not contract, the freedoms of speech, press, and communication so that different peoples may learn the truth about each other. But no organ of the United Nations has authority to administer this cure.

Thus, as matters now stand, the United Nations has no power to control those practices of nations which are, above all, the present cause of international fear and dislike. Small states can be coerced and great nations may be imperiled. Freedom of speech and press may be abused. "Iron curtains" can be used to prevent enlightenment.

The United Nations will, no doubt, gradually develop ways to meet these problems. The General Assembly has broad power to encourage the development of international law. Also, through the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, the Assembly can recommend measures to establish an international flow of information and to prevent the abuse of certain freedoms. Such developments, however, are bound to be slow. The subjects are elusive and there is not a uniform moral or political foundation on which to build. We can, at this stage, expect more from using the United Nations as a harmonizing center, as contemplated by article 1 of the Charter.

So far the attention of the members and of the world has been concentrated on the Security Council. There, the United States, the Soviet Union, and the United Kingdom have provided a virtually continuous public spectacle of controversy, maneuver, and countermaneuver. This may have been inevitable and has had some good results. But the disturbance of world harmony would have been less if there had been comparable efforts through other organs of the United Nations to develop fellowship.

Members should begin to use the General Assembly as the town meeting of the world, where the real problems which weigh on their minds are discussed with courtesy, yet with frankness. Such discussion may be formal or informal. Surely the freedom of speech which we defend at home, and the right to which in the United Nations was gained only through great exertion, is a right worth using and one which, if used with sincerity and self-restraint, can help to clear up misunderstandings and promote reconciliation.

The United Nations will, however, never assure international peace merely by being a place where nations air their differences. It must also be a place where nations organize together projects of human betterment and mutual advantage. Out of that can come a sense of comradeship and increased trust and tolerance. That would strike at the root of the evils which now plague us.

That is not going to be an easy road to follow because of the reluctance of the Soviet Union to join with free states in functional tasks. But we must not accept that aloofness as final. We must be resourceful and persistent in seeking ways whereby citizens of the Soviet Union will cooperate with others. To make that more likely we must let the United Nations play a greater part in the origination of such tasks. So far the functional agencies proposed have, for the most part, been conceived and developed by ourselves, and by officials who often have been as intolerant in their ways as Soviet officials are intolerant in theirs. The Soviet Union has been invited to take or leave what we had prepared. Even the states with which we have the closest relations have privately expressed complaint over our arbitrary methods and attitudes. As a member of the United Nations, we can do much better than we have yet done to find ways whereby the nations can cooperate to their mutual advantage.

We must, however, clearly understand that the United Nations is not some postwar foolproof gadget guaranteed to keep the peace. War has not been abolished and our peace and security depend primarily on ourselves. Above all, they depend on our demonstrating that our society has such vigorous and life-giving qualities that others would not destroy it if they could and could not destroy it if they would.

CONCLUSION

We have not discussed particular matters, such as Iran, or Poland, or Trieste, or Manchuria, or even atomic bombs. That is because the first basic task is to develop an international climate which is conducive to the settlement of such particular problems.

The problem of maintaining peace in a changing world is always difficult of solution. It is not solved by identifying peace with maintenance of the status quo. But also it becomes impossible of solution if a dynamic group seeks to impose on all others practices which violate their political and religious faiths.

So long as Soviet policy seeks its own security by achieving a Pax Sovietica, the United States will be disposed to resist all expansive manifestations of Soviet policy. Under those conditions the problem of Iran is not an economic problem relating to oil, but essentially a political problem involving one more step toward realization of the Pax Sovietica. Similarly, when we consider what to do with our knowledge of atomic energy, the question is whether, if we communicate that knowledge, we communicate it to a nation whose leaders accept a live-and-let-live policy or whether they are intolerant and fearful of difference, and believe it right to use ruthless methods to conform others to their particular pattern.

Once the Soviet leaders make it apparent that they have abandoned their grandiose program and accept a world in which the Soviet Union will be one of many nations, each representing a distinctive way of life, then accommodation becomes possible. We would each still seek by "conduct and example"—as it is put in the Federalist papers—to exert an influence in the world. We would each hope that our example would be so good that men everywhere would follow it. But we would each let the extension of our influence depend primarily on letting our light shine before men so that they may see our good works. The Soviet Union would abandon such methods as are being used by it within the middle zone and outer zone and we in turn would abandon methods which seem to us defensive, but which may seem to Soviet leaders to be offensive. Under those circumstances the tension between us would be eased and ways could be found to settle our particular differences just as we have found ways to settle like differences with Britain and France over the last 130 years. Then we could see a probability of enduring peace.

TERMINAL LEAVE PAY TO ENLISTED PERSONNEL OF THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, at this time I urge the Senate to consider at the earliest possible date House bill 4051, a bill to grant terminal leave pay to enlisted personnel of the armed forces.

This bill recently passed the House without a dissenting vote. I am confident there will be no appreciable opposition on the part of the Senate to its immediate passage. It is a bill to legislate plain and simple justice. It will correct one of the discriminatory practices against enlisted service personnel.

Since 1874 we have had a law on the statute books under which officers are entitled to 1 month's leave of absence a year without deduction of pay and allowances and are permitted to accumulate unused portions of such leave not to exceed a total of 120 days.

The services have adhered to a policy of permitting officers to avail themselves of this leave upon relief from active duty. Thus an officer, when relieved from duty, actually remains on the Government pay roll until such time as his accumulated leave has expired, and is paid for this time at the same rate of pay and allowances which he received at the time of separation from the active service.

Civilian employees under the jurisdiction of the armed forces have enjoyed a similar privilege, and in good faith we can do no less for our enlisted men and women.

This bill proposes no gift, no bonus. It merely corrects an injustice written into the law more than 70 years ago and allowed to remain unchanged.

In all the discussion which has heretofore taken place on the merits and the practicability of this suggestion not one person has suggested that it should not be agreed to. There has been, however, an objection raised that the enactment of this legislation would entail a tremendous task of administrative detail. Authorities of the War and Navy Departments, the Director of the Budget, and various other persons have testified that such a law would be impossible to administer. This recommendation, of course, was based on the assumption that it would be necessary to go into millions of service records of men previously discharged and tabulate their unused furlough time and calculate the amount due them for accrued pay and monetary allowances. This objection, however, has been overcome in the bill passed by the House. I quote from section 5, paragraph C of the bill:

The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy each shall make such regulations as may be necessary effectively to carry out the provisions of this act, and such regulations may authorize payments under this act to be made on the basis of sworn statements of the material facts contained in certificates executed by applicants therefor. The decisions of the Secretary of War, of the Secretary of the Navy, and of the designees of each of them shall be final and not subject to review by any court or by any officer of the United States. There shall be no difference under the provisions of this act or the regulations thereunder in the method of computation of the amounts payable hereunder between officers and enlisted men, nor between the several branches of the armed service.

Thus the individual concerned may certify the amount due him in a sworn statement which sets out the fact in connection with his application for payment. This will eliminate the necessity for making an individual inspection of every service record now closed and in storage in Government warehouses.

Mr. President, as I said in the beginning, I do not believe there can be any serious objection on the part of any Member of the Senate to this bill in its present form.

It is not my desire to dictate to the members of the Military Affairs Committee. However, I do hope that this group can see its way clear to report this bill immediately in order that during this session of Congress we may pass this legislation and thereby confer these deserved and earned benefits on our enlisted men and women who have served with honor and distinction in the recent war.

As I stated a few moments ago, this is nothing but justice to our enlisted men and women, and we ought to pass the bill now and give them the help which they so greatly need as they are coming back and trying to rehabilitate themselves in society. So I urge that the Senate take up and consider this proposed legislation and pass it at this session of Congress.

SANTEE, OHIO, AND WABASH RIVER BRIDGES

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, during the call of the Calendar on June 14 the Senate passed three bridge bills, S. 1922, to revive an act granting the consent of Congress to the South Carolina State Highway Department to construct a bridge across the Santee River;

S. 1983, a bill authorizing the Indiana State Toll Bridge Commission to build a bridge across the Ohio River near Mauckport, Ind.; and

S. 1984. A bill authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Wabash River near Mount Vernon, Ind.

The House has also passed similar bills, which are now in the Committee on Commerce, the bills having crossed.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Commerce may be discharged from the further consideration of the House bills, and that they may be considered as having been read the third time and passed.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. What is the status of the bill introduced by the Senators from Delaware, New Jersey, and Maryland, in connection with the Delaware River Bridge?

Mr. OVERTON. That bill has been referred to a subcommittee, and hearings are scheduled to begin tomorrow morning at 10:30 o'clock, in the rooms of the Senate Committee on Commerce. There was some opposition, I understand, from some residents of the city of Philadelphia, and we are giving them an opportunity to be heard. I hope that those who favor the bill also will appear. However, extensive hearings were held, as the Senator will recall, on the same bill in 1938, and the committee will have all those hearings before it, and probably it will not be necessary to have any long hearings.

Mr. SMITH. I understood that the War Department and Navy Department had withdrawn their objections to the bill, provided, of course, the plans for the structure were submitted for their approval.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator is correct.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will be read by title, for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 5748) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the South Carolina State Highway Department to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Santee River, at or near Leneudes Ferry, S. C.," similar to Senate bill 1922.

A bill (H. R. 5736) authorizing the Indiana State Toll Bridge Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or a free bridge across the Ohio River at or near Mauckport, Ind., similar to Senate bill 1983.

A bill (H. R. 5606) authorizing the Indiana State Toll Bridge Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or a free bridge across the Wabash River near Mount Vernon, Ind., similar to Senate bill 1984.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Louisiana is agreed to.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 6335) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I shall discuss briefly, I hope, the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] to the pending bill, which amendment deals with the subject that is familiarly known to those of us who have been for some years members of the Appropriations Committee as the Central Valley project. The matter presented by the amendment of the Senator from Arizona has been, in one form or another, before the Appropriations Committee for the past several years. In the main, Mr. President, it addresses itself to the question of whether the policy of the Federal Government is to discourage or destroy or impair or impede private enterprise when private money, the money of the public generally, is invested in the great private enterprise of developing electrical energy. It may well be stated as a preliminary to my remarks that for many years the people of northern California, that is, north of the Tehachapi Range of mountains, have been served, so far as electrical energy is concerned, by an enterprising private concern known as the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. I doubt whether anyone, however zealous he may be in connection with this subject, will deny that the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., supplying the needs of northern California, has expended its money in ventures in the way of construction work of all kinds so as to enhance its activities in supplying the needs of the people of northern California. I say without fear of contradiction that the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. which supplies electrical energy to northern California is supplying it now as cheaply as the Department of the Interior will, if it becomes the supplier of electrical energy growing out of the Central Valley project. Mr. President, I have heard that admitted repeatedly by the representatives of the Department of the Interior in their statements before the Appropriations Committee.

My position in opposing the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona is taken because of my inherent feeling that this country can best succeed by encouraging private enterprise, that when we destroy private enterprise, when we destroy the legitimate investment of private funds, we destroy the source of business which will sustain this Government by way of taxation for the years to come. Hence, I am opposed to setting up governmental control agencies against private enterprise for the purpose of destroying private enterprise, where such private enterprise has and can and will not only pay taxes but will serve the people as economically, as cheaply, and as efficiently as the Government admits it could do under the circumstances.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. Is not this the same, identical proposition which was before the Senate last year?

Mr. McCARRAN. It has been before the Senate in one form or another for the past 4 or perhaps 5 years.

Mr. WILEY. The Senate has voted it down each time, has it not?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not recall that.

Mr. WILEY. I am seeking light.

Mr. McCARRAN. But the committee has disapproved the item. I shall take last year as an example, because my memory is best as to what happened last year. At that time the committee disapproved the item. I think it was brought up on the floor of the Senate, and the Senate approved the item. That is my recollection, and what I have just stated may be true for the past 2 years. But in the interim, there were entered into between the Interior Department and the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. agreements which were for the duration of the war, as I recall, they are still in full force and effect.

Mr. WILEY. Do any changed factors enter into the picture? Are the factors affecting the situation any different from those which applied to it last year or the year before, when we had some debate on this subject?

Mr. McCARRAN. My answer is that, by and large, except for the fact that the impounding construction work and the building of impounding facilities have gone on with the appropriations, as they have been made from year to year, and with the further exception that canals for irrigation purposes have been provided for, as they are provided for in this measure—and they, too, have been carried on with greater or less activity—aside from those items, generally speaking the conditions have scarcely changed to any considerable extent.

Mr. WILEY. Then is it the gist of the Senator's argument that if this appropriation is made, it will operate to the detriment of the investors who have relied upon the situation as it existed in California, and is it his opinion that it will not in any way benefit the general public if the appropriation is made by the Government?

Mr. McCARRAN. By and large, that is a part of my contention. My contention goes further than that. The proposal will inure against the welfare and benefit of the people of California, and it will tend to put out of business a private enterprise. Secondly, it will remove from the realm of taxation a great private enterprise which is paying an enormous sum of money toward the upkeep of the State of California. I shall go into that subject in figures and amounts before I conclude.

Mr. President, let us consider the amendment for a few moments. First of all, before doing so, let me say that in the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations this matter was considered at length, and by a substantial vote the subcommittee refused to make appropriations for the building of parallel transmission lines. We did make a provision for the building of transmission lines from what is known as the Shasta Dam, which is the impounding works, to the Shasta substation which is the place where the substation is to be located for the distribution of power after it is generated. We made provision in the bill for going forward with the construction of the impounding works at Shasta Dam, with the construction of the substation, and other works pertaining to it. We recommended for irrigation all the appropriation which had been approved by the Bureau of the Budget. We made all the appropriation which was necessary to conduct the entire enterprise for a period of the next several years. However, when it came to appropriating for a duplication of transmission lines the subcommittee, and the full committee as well, believed that it was time to stop because the transmission lines of the private enterprise already in existence were taking the power as it was generated under an agreement entered into between the power company and the Department of the Interior, and was transporting the power to the people who were to be served. The company was serving the people and is serving the people at the present time to the full capacity of the power generated. That statement is not only true with respect to the power generated by the Shasta and Keswick Dams, but also the power generated by the private enterprise itself.

In other words, Mr. President, the power generated by the Central Valley's project is not sufficient to supply the needs of the people of northern California. There must also be available the enormous supply of power which comes from the various facilities of the private enterprise itself in order to meet the needs of the people of northern California.

Mr. President, why are some of us who are not citizens of the State of California interested in this subject? Why, although not members of the great population of the State of California, do we take a very definite stand? It is because we believe that if we are to create in the Government a great power octopus, if you please—I use that term advisedly—the time will come when that power octopus will be a menace superseding and outreaching anything that has ever been charged against private enterprise. It were a thousand times better, in my judgment, and in the judgment of the other members of the Appropriations Committee, to let private enterprise go forward if it will serve the people as efficiently and as economically as the Government could serve them under the surrounding and attending circumstances.

The amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], who is chairman of the subcommittee and ranking majority member of the Committee on Appropriations, is directly contrary to the vote of the majority of the members of the Committee on Appropriations. In lieu of the matter inserted by the committee amendment, beginning with the word "Shasta", in line 25, page 52, and ending with the amount "$20,836,670", in line 5, page 53, the Senator from Arizona proposed to insert "and substations, $4,572,000, including Shasta to Delta switchyards via Oroville and Sacramento, 230 kilovolt, Shasta to Delta switchyards (west side lines), 230 kilovolt; Keswick to Sacramento, 115 kilovolt; Contra Costa power distribution system, miscellaneous transmission, feeder lines and facilities, and substations; in all, $25,000,000."

Mr. President, it is proposed to increase the amount recommended by the Senate committee for transmission lines in this bill by $4,163,330. The sums allowed for lines are not earmarked in this amendment, although the Congress has specifically earmarked all appropriations for this project ever since former Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, ordered the Oroville line to be constructed out of unexpended balances after Congress had refused to appropriate money for its construction. The amendment does not specify how the $4,572,000 should be spent on the several lines listed in the amendment. None of the money, Mr. President, is earmarked for any particular line. The bureau would be free to distribute the money in any way which it pleased. But, even more important, this $4,572,000 would be only the beginning of a $44,000,000 expenditure for the construction of a transmission system which is not needed as a part of the project, and which would duplicate the transmission system which already completely serves the area.

The only purpose of such duplication would be to set up a Government-owned system to take customers away from the private utility. The Government does not have to build this $44,000,000 transmission line, nor the $26,000,000 steam plant which the Bureau plans to construct in conjunction with this system in order to generate power. The Bureau's proposed competing power system would require an unnecessary Federal expenditure of $70,000,000. The net return to the Treasury with such a competing system, even if a sufficient number of customers were obtained, would be $2,000,000 a year less than if the power were sold, as in the present contract.

Mr. President, in the debate in the House of Representatives on the appropriation Representative Havenner of California, formerly President of the State Railroad Commission, stated that the average rural electric rate in California in 1945 was less than 1¾ cents a kilowatt-hour, compared with 2½ cents for the Nation, a difference of 30 percent in favor of California. He was then speaking of the privately owned concern distributing this power to the people of northern California.

That brings to me the thought that some 2 or 3 years ago in a hearing before the Appropriations Committee, when the Commissioner of Reclamation was present, the direct question was asked him if the Government were put in the place of the private concern which now distributes this power could the Government furnish the power at any less rate than the private concern could furnish it. To that question he replied that he did not believe the Government could serve the people at any less charge than the charge which was being made by the Pacific Gas & Electric Co.

Mr. President, 170,000 kilowatts of power are now being delivered to the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. and are being transmitted to consumers over existing transmission facilities. The company spent—and this is a part of the record—more than $5,000,000 for substation facilities in order to take that power into its system. This was all worked out by an arrangement with the Interior Department. The company is actively engaged in constructing—and I call this especially to the attention of the Senate—a double circuit tower line with one circuit installed on the west side of the Sacramento Valley on a right-of-way which it has owned for many years south of Shasta substation. The materials for this line were ordered last fall and the line will be completed by the end of this year. It will cost $6,000,000. This line will make it possible to take delivery of 320,000 kilowatts of Shasta power at Shasta substation.

Do we not recall, Mr. President, that the able Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] yesterday made the very frank statement that this is the last time this appropriation will be called for, because, he said, the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. has money available and is ready to install the lines, but as against that which the Senator from Arizona admits very frankly, it is proposed to take the money out of the Treasury of the United States and do what private enterprise has money to do and is ready, willing, and able to do right now. What will be the result if we carry out that policy? We will discourage private enterprise, if not destroy it, and we will remove from the taxpaying lists of the State of California this great taxpayer that is sustaining or aiding in sustaining a sovereign State.

The Bureau will not have—and I draw the attention of the Senate to this point—the Bureau will not have 320,000 kilowatts available until the middle of next year, 6 months after the company's line has been completed. That is an admitted fact.

Let me dwell on that point for a moment. The power will not be available at Shasta substation coming from the Shasta Dam until 6 months or more after the line will have been completed by private enterprise. The Government could be spared the expenditure of some forty-odd million dollars which must eventually be provided to complete the whole project, including $4,000,000 proposed to be appropriated at the present time.

Only one more transmission circuit is needed to transmit the full capacity of the Shasta and Keswick plans. That circuit can be installed on the vacant position on the towers now being erected for a cost of $4,000,000. That is private enterprise going forward with all speed ahead. The full capacity of the power plants will not be installed until the end of 1947.

The amendment submitted by the Senator from Arizona would provide funds to begin the construction of three 230-kilovolt lines. One of these would duplicate the line now used in connection wtih Shasta power south of Oroville; another would duplicate the line on the west side of the valley which the company will complete this year, and the third line would be far more costly than the line which the company could install in the vacant position now on the new west side tower. In other words, the company has already set up its towers to carry this extra line. Photographs of the towers were presented to the Committee on Appropriations showing one line in place and the brackets out for another line ready to be installed. Those are company towers and those are company brackets, which were installed at company expense. Moreover, any line from Oroville to Sacramento and to the pumping plant will be a clear duplication of a company line which is already in operation and is now used in connection with the transmission of Shasta power. There is also a vacant position on the towers which carry this line on which the company can install additional wires at a cost of $900,000. With this expenditure the company can do what, according to the estimates, would cost the Government $3,500,000.

Again I draw the attention of the Senate to the discrepancy between that which would be taken out of the Treasury of the United States and the much smaller expenditure which private enterprise would use to accomplish the result—$900,000 as compared with $3,500,000 to be taken out of the Treasury. Here is a waste of $2,600,000, which must be carried by the water users on the project, or the Federal taxpayers of the Nation.

Those of us who are interested in reclamation, those of us who are interested in reclaiming the lands of the West, those of us who, from month to month and from day to day, here on the floor of the Senate have said we want to provide opportunity for the boys returning from the service to take up land and become agrarian, if you please, have to consider whether or not the burden which they must carry when they take up lands are such as they can carry, or are such as to make it impossible for them as agriculturalists to go forward successfully.

All the moneys expended by the Federal Government become a charge against the land which goes into the reclamation project, and the reclaimers of the land—the farmers who propose to take up 160 acres or 240 acres of land in that valley—must know when they take it up that they will have to repay into the Treasury that which the Government put into these lines.

Shall we say that $900,000 expended by private enterprise is equal to $2,600,000 which the Government is going to expend out of the Treasury of the United States, which must be paid back by the reclaimers of the soil? Shall we say to the returning soldiers boys who want to take up these farms, "We could have afforded you an opportunity to take up this land with a charge of only $900,000 regarding this particular item, but we saw the light in another direction, and we imposed a tax of $2,600,000 against your land which you and your progeny must meet over a period of years"?

Mr. President, I am laying this matter before the Senate, not because I have the least personal interest, not because I am a citizen of the State of California, for I am not, but because I am interested in the development of the West, because this is a western project, because the development of the West calls upon those who see economic opportunity in the West to take advantage of it and to come to the West and engage in a great enterprise which will make homes for men and women who can go back to the soil and sustain the Government and the world.

So, Mr. President, I bring these matters to the attention of the Senate because

I believe that which aids one State in one locality aids all other States, and that which will make an enterprise economic in the State of California will make it economic in its neighbor State of Nevada, its neighbor State of Oregon, its neighbor State of Arizona, its neighbor State of New Mexico, and other Western States of similar character.

Reference was made on the Senate floor to the desirability of a public-power yardstick to act as a check on the private power monopoly. I think it was the very able senior Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] who used that expression yesterday. I am sorry the Senator, who was here a moment ago, has been called from the Chamber. Nothing was said, however, about the control over the private monopoly which the State of California exercises through its duly authorized commission. In the State of California that which some States call a public-service commission is called the railroad commission. The Railroad Commission of the State of California has, by statute of the State of California, jurisdiction over all subjects such as that we are discussing.

The commission has broad regulatory powers, including jurisdiction over capitalization, consolidations, mergers, valuation, accounting practice, rates, service standards, and the issuance of certificates of public convenience and necessity. It is continually investigating rates, and under that policy the rates in northern California have been reduced periodically. Since 1936 rate regulation has resulted in decreasing the rates to the extent of $15,000,000 a year.

The only effective way of providing electric service to an area is to do it with a completely integrated power system which avoids duplication and uses facilities to the best advantage. The power industry and the regulating bodies which control it have long realized this, and have encouraged and fostered such integration. During the war the War Production Board also fostered such integration, with results which contributed substantially to the war effort.

The result of this policy is that today most areas are served by a single operating agency, publicly or privately owned. A competitive yardstick was proposed for the TVA, but, as I hope Senators will recall, it finally had to take over all the utilities in the area in order to operate with any degree of effectiveness.

The same purpose is evident in all the other areas where public power yardsticks have been set up. If northern California gets a public power yardstick, it is safe to say that there will be similar results. The yardstick will grow until there is no private utility, and the result will be that the so-called private monopoly, now effectively regulated and controlled by the State of California, will be replaced by a public monopoly dominated completely by a Federal bureau, over which the State of California will have no control whatever, and from which the State of California will not derive any revenue by way of taxation.

In 1945 the private utility paid $13,845,000 in State and local taxes. Let me repeat that, because it seems to me that in this hour, when we are continually looking for sources of revenue by way of taxation to sustain Federal and State organizations and governments, it might be well to look at the source. I repeat, in 1945 the private utility, the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., now about to be put out of business by a vote of the Senate if it adopts the pending amendment and it remains in the bill, paid in to the coffers of the State of California and its counties $13,845,000 in State and local taxes. In a number of counties it paid more than half the total taxes collected for county purposes.

Let us pause for a moment to think of that. This enterprise, which it is now proposed to lay the foundation to destroy, in a number of counties of the State of California paid more than half the total taxes collected for country purposes. None of those taxes would be paid if a public power monopoly grows out of the "yardstick," the term used by the able senior Senator from California.

In 1945 this private utility paid the Federal Government—and again I draw the attention of the Senate to this startling figure—in 1945 this private utility paid the Federal Government $26,348,000. Where will that amount of money come from, may I ask, when this private enterprise is put out of business? From what source will it come? Will it come from the Interior Department? If so, it will have to come by way of appropriation, and I doubt very much if that much money will come from that source.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. Can it not also be said that this private enterprise paid to its stockholders large sums of money from which also taxes were derived by the Federal Government?

Mr. McCARRAN. I thank the Senator for that suggestion. I was going to touch on that subject in a moment. I will follow the lead given me by the able Senator from Oklahoma because I happen to have the figures here at hand. The company, which is an operating company in California, has 79,000 stockholders in California. Think of that, Senators—79,000 stockholders in California out of a total of 121,000 stockholders in all. There are stockholders of the company in every county in the Central Valley, that is, the Central Valley in the State of California, in which it is proposed by the initial step proposed by the pending amendment to read this private facility out of business eventually. In the counties in which it is expected the bulk of Central Valley power will be used, Contra Costa, Alameda, San Francisco, San Mateo, and Santa Clara, there are more than 46,000 holders of stock in the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. Their holdings represent a par value of more than $100,000,000. Approximately 90 percent of the company's properties have been constructed or acquired under regulation by the California Railroad Commission, which is the public-service commission of the State of California. All the outstanding bonds of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., and almost 90 percent of its outstanding stock, have been issued under authorization of the Commission since 1912, when strict regulation over public utilities was established in California under the then Governor, the late Senator of happy memory, Hiram W. Johnson.

Mr. President, I had hoped when there was a change some months ago in the Department of the Interior, and thus in the Bureau of Reclamation, that the policy of the avaricious power czar who had been in charge of that Bureau for a number of years would be changed. When Mr. Ickes left the Government service I had hoped that no longer would avarice for power prevail in the Bureau of Reclamation. But it appears as though the echoes of his footsteps are still resounding, and we see somewhat of his activity still continuing toward Federal monopoly of power, Federal control of great power projects. When the power of a region is controlled, when the power which drives the wheels of industry is controlled, it is not much trouble to go a little further and control the votes of the particular region. That has been established in more ways than one and at more times than once in the history of this country.

I for one want to keep the West free. I want to keep free that region, which to my mind will be the haven of happiness for oncoming generations, a place where ex-servicemen and their sons and daughters may find support and sustenance and homes. I want the opportunity to exist there for free enterprise and for the investment of venture money, if you please, and for private capital in every respect. So I take the position that I do here, the same position I have taken for the past 5 years when this problem has been before the Senate.

The Bureau of Reclamation is again seeking appropriations for transmission lines and switchyards for the Central Valley project in California. In the pending bill it requests $4,572,000—and that is this amendment—for transmission lines and $1,500,000 for switchyards. The Appropriations Committee allowed the item for switchyards; it allowed the item to enable the switchyard to be installed and to enable transformers and transmission facilities to be provided close to the consumers, and the bill specifically designated that such switchyards should be at Shasta and Shasta substation. The House committee cut the request for transmission lines to $414,090, and the request for switchyards to $765,310. The amounts allowed in the House for transmission lines were $5,420 for additions to the existing Shasta-Oroville line, $382,655 for an extension of the line from Oroville toward Sacramento, and $26,015 for distribution or tie lines on the Contra Costa canal. The $765,310 allowed for switchyards covers installations at Shasta and Keswick Dams and the initiation of construction at Sacramento and at the Delta-Mendota pumping plants. The sums allowed for the further extension of the Oroville line and for the construction of lines along the Contra Costa canal are unnecessary, in my judgment, and a waste of public funds.

Mr. Black, the president of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., in testifying before the Committee on Appropriations, clearly presented his position and the position of his company. I doubt very much if anyone, however zealous he may be on this subject—even Governor Warren himself, were he present and fortified with both the nominations which he now holds—would have anything but praise for the fine spirit of cooperation and the splendid management of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. under the administration of Mr. Black, who testified before the Appropriations Committee. Mr. Black said:

The market is fully served. The Bureau has no customers to justify the investment in transmission lines. The power for the project pumps is and can be supplied from the existing system.

By the project pumps he refers to the pumps which will be utilized in the irrigation system. We have made provision for them in the pending appropriation bill. Not only that, but we have made provision for everything that applies to irrigation or reclamation.

Mr. Black further stated:

Construction of the proposed transmission lines and switch yards would duplicate existing taxpaying facilities. There is no need and no justification for any expenditure for transmission lines or switch yards beyond Shasta substation, 25 miles below Shasta Dam.

Continuing, Mr. Black said:

The Bureau has repeatedly represented that it had customers for project power which would justify the construction of an extension of the Oroville line. This is not the fact. With the exception of the small city of Roseville, this company now has long-term contracts with every governmental agency which distributes or proposes to distribute electric power in the Central Valley area.

Since our appearance before the House committee we have signed a 7½-year contract with the Sacramento municipal utility district, effective when the district takes over our electric distribution properties, not earlier than January 1, 1947.

That is significant to the Senate.

For many years the Bureau claimed the district as a potential customer. Appropriations to build unnecessary transmission lines were urged.

That is true. What Mr. Black says must bring back in recollection to those of us who for years have been members of the Appropriations Committee what was repeatedly stated to the committee by representatives of the Bureau—that the Sacramento area was a potential customer for Federal power.

Mr. Black further stated:

The Bureau's one customer, the city of Roseville, uses only about 1,300 kilowatts of power, which is less than 1 percent of the capacity of the proposed transmission line. The Bureau proposes to serve Roseville for $26,680 a year and to stand ready to supply up to 1,800 kilowatts.

This same power sold to the company at our Shasta substation, 25 miles below Shasta Dam, would bring $29,000 a year, or $2,000 more than when supplied to Roseville. And that is not all.

The annual charges on that part of the transmission and other facilities required to bring the power to Roseville and assure adequate service would be in the order of $20,000. When these charges are met, the Bureau would lose not $2,000, but $22,000 a year, by serving Roseville instead of selling the power to the company at Shasta substation.

Continuing, Mr. Black said:

When appropriations were voted for the extension of the Oroville line toward Sacramento, it must have been believed that the line was required to bring power to the Delta area for project pumping. But this is not the case.

The sites for the pumps have not yet been decided upon. The rights-of-way for the $12,000,000 Delta cross-channel and the $71,000,000 Delta-Mendota canal have not been obtained. Even when the rights-of-way are obtained, it is probable that 5 years will be required to construct the canals and set up the pumps. The Bureau's own reports show that the pumping plants will not be in full operation for 15 or 20 years.

Let that be considered by the Senate when it comes to vote this initial appropriation, which must result eventually in an expenditure of more than $40,000,000 to carry out what would be initiated.

The Bureau's own reports show that the pumping plants will not be in full operation for 15 or 20 years.

Power to drive these pumps, whenever they are ready, can be supplied from transmission lines of the company located about 10 miles away. We have offered to furnish power from these lines on an exchange basis, the company to be reimbursed in power from the Shasta and Keswick plants, delivered to us at our Shasta substation.

We have agreed that the cost never shall be greater than if the power were transmitted to the pumps from Shasta and Keswick Dams over a tax-free, fully loaded, Government-owned transmission line.

There we have again the outstanding and emphatic declaration that a private enterprise is ready, willing, and able to furnish power for irrigation purposes and for pumping purposes, at a price equal to that which the Government must charge if it has these transmission lines fully installed, which transmission lines will eventually cost many millions of dollars. As a matter of fact, private enterprise is ready to install them now at its own expense and pay taxes on the enterprise from year to year for the sustenance of the State of California.

Mr. Black further said:

For many years the cost will be very much less. We have guaranteed never to charge for this service more than one mill per kilowatt hour.

Mr. President, let me repeat that statement, which comes from the president of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. That company has been under contract with the Bureau, and for half a century it has sustained the State of California by its services. Mr. Black said:

We have guaranteed never to charge for this service more than 1 mill per kilowatt-hour.

In that statement he refers to the service for the power furnished for pumps for irrigation and reclamation.

Mr. President, I doubt whether in all the power history of this country there has been such a guaranty. I doubt whether in all the length and breadth of this country there is any such assurance of economy.

Mr. Black then said:

Under the exchange basis the annual cost of service would depend entirely on the amount of power used by the pumping plants. But if the Bureau constructed a transmission line to serve the pumps, the annual charge would be fixed, no matter how little power was required.

Again I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there must be fixed charges because the land which bears the expense of these installations must pay it back over a period of years, and hence the charges must apply on a fixed basis to every acre of land reclaimed in the Central Valley.

I read further from the statement which Mr. Black made before the Appropriations Committee:

Annual charges on the Oroville extension and appurtenant substations would be fixed at about $400,000. Over a 15-year building-up period, these charges would total $6,000,000. Under the exchange method, with annual charges confined to the actual use of power, the total would be less than $3,000,000. This means that the exchange method would save the water users, or the Government, more than $3,000,000 in the 15-year period that pumping demands were building up.

Mr. President, this item in itself is not a small one. During the period when such irrigation projects were being built there would be a saving of some $15,000,000 to the Government, and of course a saving to the Government in connection with a matter of this kind means a saving to the man who goes on the land, uses the power, irrigates the land, builds his home there, and looks to the future time when he may bring the charges down to the very minimum by paying off the cost over a period of 40 years, if that be the period fixed. No, Mr. President; there are many persons who believe—and especially I have found the belief to prevail in the Eastern States; indeed, I have found it to prevail here on the floor of the Senate and in the committees—that these reclamation projects, for which Government land and Government money are used, never pay off. Many persons believe that the money is a gift to the people who settle on the land. The history of reclamation projects in the United States is a most commendable one; indeed, reclamation projects rank No. 1 of all creditors of the Government, in respect to paying off their obligations. They pay off over a period of years. They carry the burden as a continual burden during those years, and it is a first mortgage, so to speak, against the product of the soil which they bring forth by their toil, their patience, and their vigilance.

I continue to read from the statement which Mr. Black made before the Appropriations Committee:

The existing line from Shasta substation to Oroville was constructed by the Bureau against the will of Congress.

No one knows that better than does the Senate Appropriations Committee, because we had it brought very vividly to our attention that the Secretary of the Interior just thumbed his nose at the Congress, and utilized money which had been appropriated for other purposes and built that substation.

Mr. Black further said to the committee:

Congress denied a specific appropriation for this line, but the Bureau ignored the denial and proceeded to build the line out of "unexpended balances."

As the committee knows, this line was leased by the Bureau to the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. before it was completed and now is operated by us as a tie-in line between two of our transmission systems. Depending on load requirements, it is used to transmit company or project power. This line should have been built by the company; the company was prepared to build it and would have built it had we not been denied the priorities required during the war period.

Mr. President, I returned to the statement made by the able Senator from Arizona on yesterday, when he reminded the Senate that this is the last time this matter will come before the Senate, because, as he said, and it is a fact, the company is ready, willing, and able to build the line which the Government is now called upon to build, and the company has the money to build the line ready to expend.

Mr. Black further said:

Extension of this line from Oroville to the proposed Delta pumps by way of Sacramento will cost $3,500,000. Including switchyards the total cost will be more than $7,000,000.

This proposed extension will be a clear duplication of a company line already in operation and used in connection with Shasta power. Survey stakes set by the Bureau show that the proposed extension will parallel the company line in places at a distance no greater than 85 feet.

Let me emphasize that statement. It has been intimated that the proposed new line will not be a parallel line. But stakes set by the survey crews, and now in place, show that the line is proposed as a parallel line, in some places is not more than 85 feet distant from the company line. Mr. Black then said:

At other points it will run less than a mile from our line. Photographs which we will submit to the committee——

And he did submit them——

Vividly portray this duplication and emphasize the waste of Government funds which will attend the construction of the line.

The company line, which the Bureau proposes to duplicate, is used to transmit both company and project power from Oroville south by way of Sacramento.

Continuing, Mr. Black:

We have spent more than $5,000,000 for substation facilities in connection with this line and to handle Shasta power under the existing contract.

The towers on this line have space for still another line. Wires for the additional line can be installed for $900,000. But the transmission line proposed by the Bureau would cost $3,500,000. This means the company can do for $900,000 what would cost the Government $3,500,000. Here alone is a waste of $2,600,000, which must be carried by the water users or by the Federal taxpayers of the Nation.

I read further from Mr. Black's testimony.

The Bureau requested $50,000 and the House committee allowed $26,015 to commence construction of a short and detached section of transmission line along the Contra Costa canal. The purpose of this line is to transmit power, which we now deliver to existing pumps, to two small additional pumping plants to be installed about 25 miles down the canal. When completed, this line will cost $159,000.

The line is wholly unnecessary because the contract now in effect with this company provides that power on an exchange basis shall be delivered "at such other points on the Contra Costa canal as may be designated by the United States and agreed to by the company." The company is prepared to meet this provision of the contract. Its existing lines are located 0.6 and 0.8 mile from the two additional pumping plants which the Bureau proposes to install. These lines can be extended for an expenditure of less than $20,000, which the company is prepared to make.

Mr. Black stated further before the committee, as follows:

What we have said about expenditures for the proposed Oroville extension and for the line on the Contra Costa canal in true for all the transmission lines proposed by the Bureau. Any expenditure for transmission facilities south of Shasta substation would be wasteful of public funds. The company can provide all the facilities required for the absorption of the output of the Shasta and Keswick plants south of Shasta substation for $22,000,000. It can do this by using vacant positions on existing towers; by employing spare capacity on existing transmission lines and in existing substations, and by combining and coordinating future facilities. According to its own estimates, which are unquestionably low, the Bureau would have to expend $44,000,000 to accomplish the same purpose.

Mr. President, those statements which were made by Mr. Black before the Appropriations Committee of the Senate stand unchallenged. They must be accepted by the Senate as facts. They stand unchallenged on the record of the Appropriations Committee and, indeed, before the Senate.

But this is not the only advantage of coordination—

Says Mr. Black in his testimony before the Appropriations Committee—

The Bureau would have to obtain its customers in competition with the company and during this period operating losses amounting to many millions of dollars would be inevitable. These losses would not be incurred under our offer of cooperation.

It should scarcely require a statement of figures, nor would it require an expression of an expert to make the Senate realize that the last statement by Mr. Black must of necessity be true. Here is a company serving the people. Here is a company amply facilitated with equipment and funds, ready, able, and willing to install all necessary facilities for additional service when such service is required.

Mr. President, I realize that this is the hour when many Senators are absent from the Chamber. We are dealing with a most important matter. It is at least sufficiently important for some of us to occupy the floor for hours, believing, as we do, that we are sustaining a great American principle. It seems to me that we should have a better attendance. I respectfully suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, during the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. Black, president of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., presented a memorandum for insertion in the record, and the insertion was made by the Senator from Arizona as chairman of the subcommittee having charge of the Interior Department appropriation bill.

The insertion shows the load which must be carried by those who reclaim the lands or utilize the power for reclamation in the Central Valley if the project is constructed as proposed to be initiated by the amendment now pending. Senators should remember that the pending amendment is but the toe in the door, so to speak, for a vast series of appropriations yet to come if we take this initial step.

The memorandum submitted by Mr. Black, found in the hearings at page 1013, is exceedingly interesting when we come to consider what load must be borne by those who reclaim the lands in the Central Valley if these appropriations go through, as distinguished from that which they may bear if the power required is furnished by private enterprise already in existence.

The memorandum states:

The Bureau estimates the total cost of the Central Valley project at $384,314,000. It proposes to allocate $49,527,000 to navigation and flood control, which is nonreimbursable, and $334,787,000 to irrigation, municipal water supply, and commercial power, which is reimbursable. The Bureau assigns $26,874,000, or 23 percent of the cost of Shasta Reservoir, to commercial power. This amount would be $52,004,000, or 45 percent, if the cost of project power delivered to load centers were made equal to the cost of steam-electric power.

The Bureau estimates that the revenue from sale of water and power would be sufficient (1) to pay operating expenses and (2) to repay a total of $316,441,000 of the reimbursable cost, without interest by the year 2006.

So, by the year 2006, Mr. President, those who reclaim these lands in the Central Valley may have hope, if they or their progeny are still on the lands, that they may be relieved of the mortgage which the Government holds on the land by reason of the expenditure of money, the initial appropriation of which is about to be made if this item is adopted by the Senate; they may have some lingering hope that they may be relieved of the obligation, and they may tell their children to tell their children that they expect that at that time or thereabouts the load may be taken off.

The memorandum of Mr. Black inserted in the hearings continues:

Under the reclamation law as we understand it, the Bureau should also return to the Federal Treasury, interest at not less than 3 percent on the investment made in the facilities for municipal water and for commercial power. The Bureau allocates a total of $130,948,000 to these purposes. On the basis of 50-year amortization, and 3 percent interest on the unamortized investment, the Bureau should return $98,211,000 in interest to the Federal Treasury in the 50-year period. If the Bureau had allocated 45 percent instead of 23 percent of the cost of Shasta Reservoir to commercial power, the interest would be increased to $117,059,000.

To summarize, even in the year 2006 the Bureau's plan would fall short of meeting the reimbursable cost of the project by $18,346,000, without including interest.

So I think I was mistaken, because there will still be a mortgage on these lands in 2006 if the Bureau completes this project as planned.

The memorandum inserted in the record of the hearings continues:

If interest were included, the Bureau's plan would fall short by $116,557,000. If the allocation of the cost of Shasta Reservoir to commercial power were increased from 23 percent to 45 percent and interest included, it would fall short by $135,405,000.

On the other hand, under the company's proposal, it would not be necessary to invest $69,535,000 in transmission facilities and steam plants.

Of course, $69,535,000 may perhaps not mean so very much in the year 2006. Those who are living in the year 2006 may not regard that as a large amount of money. Little by little we are going in the direction where millions of dollars do not bother us much; in fact, we are not much concerned over billions of dollars until they begin to accumulate toward the trillion mark. The memorandum continues:

This would reduce the total reimbursable cost of the project from $334,787,000 down to $265,252,000.

That is under the plan proposed by private enterprise.

The revenue—

Says the memorandum—

which the project would receive would be sufficient to pay all operating expense, to repay the full reimbursable cost without interest and leave a surplus of $80,752,000. This is $98,818,000 more than the Bureau would repay on a noninterest basis.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the figures here presented should convince anyone that economy demands that we do not initiate this enormous expenditure by putting a private enterprise out of business, destroying the tax structure of a State, and discouraging the development of the great western empire to which humanity is looking so hopefully.

The memorandum continues:

However, as stated before, we believe that the reclamation law requires that interest be paid on the Government's investment in facilities allocated to municipal water and commercial power. Under the company's proposal the Government's investment would be substantially reduced. Consequently interest charges would amount to only $54,251,000 if 23 percent of the cost of Shasta Reservoir is allocated to commercial power and to $73,099,000 if 45 percent is so allocated. The company's proposal is therefore sufficient to repay to the Federal Treasury by the year 2006 all of the reimbursable costs of the project as it would be with the unnecessary transmission facilities and steam plants eliminated, including interest on the cost of the facilities allocated to municipal water and commercial power, and leave a surplus of $7,373,000.

How can any Member of the Senate read that report and not be convinced that the whole plan should be revised, and that a further study of the subject should be made on which to base our decision as to whether we should take this step which it is proposed to take, and invest such enormous sums of money.

The memorandum continues:

The advantage of the company's proposal to the Federal Treasury is obvious. By the year 2006, it would return $98,818,000 more than the Bureau's plan, even if the repayment of interest on the facilities serving for municipal water and for commercial power is not required. If, as we believe, the reclamation law requires that interest on the cost of such facilities also be returned to the Treasury, then the company's proposal is better than the Bureau's plan by $142,778,000, for by 2006 it would repay all costs, including interest, and leave a surplus of $7,373,000, while the Bureau's plan would be deficient by $135,405,000.

Mr. President, that memorandum was inserted in the RECORD at the request of Mr. Black during the time he was testifying. I shall now continue to read Mr. Black's statement made before the committee, which appears to be unchallenged in the RECORD. Said Mr. Black:

What we have said about expenditures for the proposed Oroville extension and for the line on the Contra Costa canal is true for all the transmission lines proposed by the Bureau. Any expenditure for transmission facilities south of Shasta substation would be wasteful of public funds. The company can provide all the facilities required for the absorption of the output of the Shasta and Keswick plants south of Shasta substation for $22,000,000. It can do this by using vacant positions on existing towers; by employing spare capacity on existing transmission lines and in existing substations, and by combining and coordinating future facilities. According to its own estimates, which are unquestionably low, the Bureau would have to expend $44,000,000 to accomplish the same purpose.

But this is not the only advantage of coordination. The Bureau would have to obtain its customers in competition with the company and during this period operating losses amounting to many millions of dollars would be inevitable. These losses would not be incurred under our offer of coordination.

We emphasize again that the territory in which Shasta and Keswick power must be used is already completely served by this company. The company's system is the natural outlet for the project power; there is no other outlet unless wasteful, duplicating transmission lines and other facilities are constructed by the Bureau in order to compete for the market which the company now serves.

We have offered repeatedly to take all of the project's power into our system at our Shasta substation, 25 miles below Shasta Dam, under the general terms of the existing contract. We have expressed our willingness to make a long-term or short-term contract, whichever best meets the Bureau's requirements, and to provide for withdrawals of whatever power may be needed to meet the obligations of the Bureau.

We have offered to submit any difference as to price to the Federal Power Commission or the California Railroad Commission and abide by the decision, although the price in the existing contract was set by the Bureau and declared by the former Secretary of the Interior to be "fair and equitable." This would assure the Government a fair price fixed by an independent and impartial governmental body.

We often have advised the Bureau that we will have transmission facilities ready when additional power is available. For years we have owned a right-of-way for another transmission line between our Shasta substation and the Bay area. We proposed to construct a line along this right-of-way when we built our pit 5 hydro plant, but were denied the necessary priorities.

Now that the war is over, we have ordered materials and equipment for a double-circuit transmission line along this route and the line now is under construction. With the reinforcement of existing transmission lines and the addition of necessary substation equipment, this line will cost $6,000,000, and when in operation late this year we will be able to absorb 320,000 of the ultimate 450,000 kilowatts of Shasta power in our system. We have offered and are prepared to build promptly all additional facilities required to absorb the full output of the plants.

WARTIME CONTRACT BRINGS LARGE REVENUE TO BUREAU

The only substantial revenue which the Government now receives from the Central Valley project is that which we pay for the power available from the two generators installed during the war years. We have paid the Bureau $5,035,129 from June 26, 1944, when power first became available, to April 30, 1946. In 1945 alone we paid $3,235,796. In addition, we have delivered more than 2,000,000 kilowatt-hours to the Contra Costa pumping plants on the exchange basis provided for in the contract.

While the contract provides for only 150,000 kilowatts, we have found that our transmission lines can take and that the Bureau can deliver 170,000. We have directed the Bureau's attention to this situation and have offered to take and pay for 170,000 kilowatts. Acceptance of our offer would add $200,000 a year to current power revenues.

Representatives of the Bureau of Reclamation have recently stated that under their plan the farmers would receive power at lower cost than they now pay. This claim was challenged before the House committee by Mr. J. J. Deuel, director of the public-utilities department, California Farm Bureau Federation, a voluntary organization of farmers, representing 33,000 farm families. He stated that the claims made and widely publicized by the Bureau were grossly misleading.

Then Mr. Black referred to the House hearings on page 547, which hearings are available to Members of the Senate. Mr. Black continued:

Mr. Deuel commented on agitation for cheap power carried on by the Bureau of Reclamation in the San Joaquin Valley, where the farmers now pay from 12 to 13 mills per kilowatt-hour. He pointed out that the Bureau had claimed that it could supply this power for less than 5 mills. However, Mr. Deuel showed that under the load factor in that area the Bureau's wholesale charge actually would be more than 10 mills instead of 5, and that in addition the farmers would have to construct a distribution system and each individual farmer would have to supply his own transformer and metering equipment, all of which are now furnished by the company. He also pointed out that when all of these costs are added, the cost of power delivered to the farmer would be greater than the charge now made by the company—this in spite of the fact that the company's revenue would be taxed while the Bureau's would be tax-free.

Mr. Deuel is a representative and director of the California Farm Bureau Federation, and he made the statement to the House committee. His statement draws a contrast between the two costs of power, and shows that the farmers would be required to pay more under the Bureau's plan than they would be required to pay if the company furnished the power. Mr. Deuel's organization represents the farmers who live in the State of the Senator from California and who have been referred to so ably by the Senator from California. But those farmers, through their organization, do not agree with the premise laid down by the Senator from California. They pay the bill and they know the cost. The Senator from California should remember that the man who has to dig into his pocket has the experience.

Mr. Black further said:

Mr. Deuel directed attention to the fact that the benefits which farmers have received for many years are obtained because of the diversity between city- and rural-power demands.

The character of urban- and rural-power demands is different, agricultural demands being high in summer and low in winter, and urban demands low in summer and high in winter. He said that when taken together they complement each other and make lower rates for each possible. He opposed any move by either private or public ownership which would destroy combined or coordinated city and rural operation to the detriment of rural people.

Speaking for the directors of the Farm Bureau, Mr. Deuel said:

"We hope * * * that all requests for funds for the construction of transmission lines and steam plans be rejected as the only means whereby California farmers can secure the greatest beneficial results from this project.

"We take no stock in the Bureau's claim for cheap power. Our main reason for opposition to appropriations for transmission lines and steam-plant construction is based on the fact that the Bureau can get more money for the power delivered at the dam than at any other point, thereby permitting power to make a greater contribution in aid of irrigation.

"This is an expensive project and without all the aid possible from power revenue, water users will never be able to stand the cost of water."

The preceding statement is to be found on pages 546 and 547 of the House hearings:

That statement was made by the representative of the California Farm Bureau Federation, which includes the farmers of the Central Valley. It seems to me that his statement, of itself, should arrest the attention not only of the Senate but, and I say this with all due respect, of the able Senators from California.

Mr. Black further said in his testimony before the Appropriations Committee:

The Bureau continues to promise a low rate when its system is established. But the difference between its rate and the company's represents a subsidy by the taxpayer. Rates already are low in California. The California Railroad Commission frequently describes them in its official publications as "among the lowest in the country."

In its last annual report the commission says:

"Our engineers report that San Francisco again retains its position as first for having the low-cost utility services of any of the 25 major cities in the Nation, while Los Angeles again ranks third among the 25 cities and has the lowest cost of any city of more than 1,000,000 population."

How the Bureau's rate has been determined never has been explained.

I may say that is true, because in the years that representatives of the Bureau have come before the Appropriations Committee, I fail to recall any plausible or feasible explanation on their part or, indeed, the fixing of any definite rate by the Bureau.

Mr. Black further said:

The California Railroad Commission recently pointed out that "no cost studies of the Shasta project have been made available to the public."

If cost studies had been publicized or put out by the Bureau of Reclamation, Mr. President, certainly the first one to group such studies and to look into them would be the California Railroad Commission, because that Commission must of necessity be interested in the subject, inasmuch as it is one of the subjects in which the Railroad Commission of California has special jurisdiction.

Mr. Black also said:

We believe in low rates. Prior to the war we regularly made reductions in rates and now that Federal taxes are being reduced we are returning to that policy. Since the first of the year reductions have been made in both our gas and electric rates. The electric rate reduction has been described by the California Railroad Commission as "saving the consumers an estimated $3,310,000 annually."

Under the proposals we have made the Bureau will net $4,000,000 a year at Shasta substation when the project pumps reach full operation. In addition, power will be provided for the operation of the pumps on an exchange basis.

Nevertheless the Bureau proposes to spend $70,000,000 for an unnecessary competitive system. If and when constructed, this competitive system would bring a net of only $1,700,000 compared with the $4,000,000 assured under our proposal—a loss of $2,300,000 a year at Shasta substation. Even the $1,700,000 would not be available unless the Bureau could get all the customers it needed to load up the system. This it could not do without a wasteful and competitive campaign, during which it would lose many millions of dollars. The annual loss really would be much greater than $2,300,000 because $70,000,000 would not be sufficient to accomplish the Bureau's purpose. The competitive system which the Bureau plans would more likely cost over $100,000,000, even on the basis of prewar costs.

It will be many years before the project's pumps reach full operation. In the meantime, the company's offer would bring not $4,000,000, but $6,000,000 per year at Shasta substation. Our estimates show that during these years the Government, even if it could load up its plant, would sacrifice more than $3,000,000 a year by failing to dispose of its power through the factilities of this company.

The Bureau does not deny that the Government would obtain more revenue by selling to the company. In fact, a spokesman for the Bureau in California, U. J. Gendron, executive assistant, wrote a letter to the Commonwealth Club of San Francisco under date of August 27, 1945, in which he said that "problem studies" long under way by the Bureau "appear to show that the P. G. & E. contract will result in a greater return than through sales to others under our interim rate schedule."

The act of 1937, which authorized the Central Valley project, provides that electric energy shall be generated and sold "as a means of financially aiding and assisting" the water features of the project.

In a few minutes I shall refer to the act itself. I read further from Mr. Black's testimony:

Congressional committees have frequently emphasized the importance of obtaining the maximum revenue from the sale of power in order to reimburse the Federal Treasury and thus keep down the cost of water to a figure the farmers of the Central Valleys can afford to meet. Good business judgment and due regard for the taxpayers of the Nation should induce the Bureau to obtain the highest revenue from power. Only in that way can the demands upon the Federal Treasury be kept to a minimum.

When it comes to the repayment to the Federal Treasury of the public funds invested in the project, the company's plan of coordination offers the Government great advantages over the Bureau's program. On the basis of 50-year amortization, the company's plan would assure repayment of all the reimbursable costs of the project, including interest, and leave a surplus of more than $7,000,000. The Bureau's plan would fail to meet the reimbursable cost by $18,000,000.

It would further fail to meet the interest requirement, which would be about $117,000,000.

Under the company's plan of coordination the Federal Treasury would receive $142,000,000 more than it would under the Bureau's plan.

Further details on this point are covered in a short memorandum—

Said Mr. Black—

which I will file with my statement.

That is the memorandum from which I have read.

When this project was first submitted to Congress the cost was estimated at $170,000,000. Now the estimates exceed $380,000,000. In the same period estimates of the power features have risen from $31,000,000 to $110,000,000—three and a half times the original figure. When revised to meet present-day cost, these estimates will be much higher.

Continuing, Mr. Black said:

Recently the Bureau reported a "comprehensive plan" for the development of the Central Valleys, which on the basis of prewar prices would cost $1,810,000,000. Of this vast sum the Bureau proposes to spend $390,000,000 for power facilities, of which $250,000,000 would be spent for a widespread system of transmission lines and steam plants. Appropriations for extension of the Oroville line are but the first step in the Bureau's plan to carry out this grandiose scheme.

Mr. Black continued:

The Government has no funds for undertakings of this kind except those it borrows from the people or collects from the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. President, how true that statement is. I believe that the members of the Appropriations Committee and, indeed, all the members of the Senate, will underscore it as being an undeniable statement of fact.

Whenever the Government duplicates existing facilities it destroys taxpaying properties.

What statement could be truer?

In our opinion the properties of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. should be preserved as taxpaying properties and not unnecessarily damaged or retarded by competition with nontaxpaying governmental facilities. The company pays taxes in 47 of the 58 counties in the State of California. In a number of counties it pays more than 50 percent of the total taxes collected for county purposes.

Since 1940, when the country began to prepare for war, to and including 1945, a period of 6 years, the company paid more than $117,000,000 into the Federal Treasury in taxes. In the same period it paid in State and local taxes more than $76,000,000. Taxes accrued for 1945 alone were: Federal, $26,348,052; State and local, $13,845,256.

Mr. Black continued as follows:

We remind the committee that the company is closely regulated by the State of California. The railroad commission of the State has jurisdiction over our service, our rates, and our financing. More than 90 percent of the company's properties have been constructed or acquired under regulation of this commission. All its outstanding bonds and almost 90 percent of its outstanding stock have been issued under authority of the commission.

Under regulation, as it is applied in California, payments made by the company to the Bureau for project power are entered as an operating expense on the company's books. Such payments are allowed in rates only to the extent that the commission deems the amounts paid to be reasonable. The company can make no profit on the power it purchases. All that it can earn is a fair return upon the investment it makes itself in facilities used and useful in the service to the public. Any benefits from purchased power must be passed on to power consumers in the form of lower electric rates.

The Railroad Commission of California recognizes the advantages and economies to be found in the cooperative use of power facilities. In a case decided as late as January 22, 1946, involving contracts under which the Southern California Edison Co., Ltd., and others cooperated in the transmission of power developed at Boulder Dam, the commission held that the contracts would "contribute to an economical use of capital expenditures."

It said further:

"Fixed charges associated with heavy capital investments constitute a substantial portion of electric rates and the commission believes that many economies can still be made by promoting the joint or cooperative use of inescapable investments in capital facilities to the optimum degree. Splendid results have been achieved during the war as a result of pooling generation and transmission resources. The public interest requires that such activities be encouraged, continued, and expanded and that needless duplication of electric capital investments be discouraged and, insofar as we have jurisdiction, prevented."

The appropriations requested by the Bureau in the present bill are intended to commit Congress further to an unnecessary and wasteful—

Mr. President, I hope all Members of the Senate will give heed to this statement:

The appropriations requested by the Bureau in the present bill are intended to commit Congress further to an unnecessary and wasteful expenditure of at least $70,000,000, estimated under prewar costs; $44,000,000 for a transmission system and $26,000,000 for a steam plant. To allow these appropriations would launch the Bureau into a tax-free competitive power operation; existing property values would be destroyed; further investment in taxable property would be discouraged; and money raised by the Federal Government, either by borrowing or by taxation, would be wastefully expended.

We submit that all the appropriations requested for transmission lines or for switchyards south of Shasta substation should be denied and that the Bureau of Reclamation be requested or directed to suspend the expenditure of the $780,000 appropriated in the 1946 deficiency bill until the present Secretary of the Interior can cause a further study to be made of the whole subject of transmission lines for the Central Valley project.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I wish to make a brief statement.

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations I have been very much interested for many years in the question concerning the transmission lines in the Central Valley. It is my considered opinion that any appropriations which the Federal Government makes for the construction of transmission lines in the Central Valley, as described in the amendment, will not bring electricity to one more user than is presently provided by the lines of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co.

It was brought out in the evidence, as I understood it, that there would be no reduction in the rate charged to consumers of electricity transmitted over federally financed lines. In other words, electricity would not be furnished to more users than are now using electricity, and would not be furnished at a rate less than that which is now being charged. So far as bringing water is concerned to the lands in that section which must be irrigated, nothing of that kind will be accomplished as a result of the proposed appropriation.

It is fairly well established, in my opinion, that the electricity for pumping water can be transmitted over the presently established line of a privately owned tax-paying utility which is already furnishing electricity to the citizens of California at very low rates. So if the amendment were adopted the tax income from that large company would be lost. Electricity would not be provided to the users at a lower rate, but the Federal debt would be increased, and there would be no chance of getting back the money for a long period of years. Therefore, I am inclined to ask the Senate to uphold the committee-approved amendment and to vote against the amendment which is now pending.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I am grateful to the Senator from South Dakota for his contribution. He has zealously made a study of this subject as a member of the Appropriations Committee; and he and I have seen the subject eye to eye, and I am exceedingly grateful that he joins me in this presentation.

I hope to conclude within a reasonable time now, Mr. President. I could not permit this matter to pass without having the Senate have a full and complete vision, if it desires to have one, of the whole picture of the expenditure that is about to be undertaken in the Central Valley project of California. I could not permit this occasion to pass and to have the Senate vote on this question without advising the Senate that in many respects an untrue picture has been presented by certain factions and certain groups, and, in my judgment, an untrue picture has been presented by the Bureau of Reclamation, both publicly and privately.

Mr. President, I repeat that my thought is that this country, if it is to sustain itself and pay off its national debt of nearly $300,000,000,000, must encourage private enterprise. By making appropriations of this kind, by setting up the Federal Government in competition with a group of men who invest their money, pay taxes, and sustain communities, we are not encouraging private enterprise. On the contrary, we are discouraging private enterprise. If it be that we are on the verge of socializing everything in the way of enterprise, then, indeed, would it not be best for this body and the other branch of Congress to make a thorough study of the subject?

If the Congress, in keeping with the will of the people, were to see fit to socialize all public utilities, to tell private enterprise, "You can no longer have any interest in public utilities," would it not be best for us to make a thorough study of the subject first, rather than to go into it piecemeal? For if we rush into the matter without making a thorough study of it, eventually we shall find that as a Nation we have destroyed the very structure of our own Government by wrecking the agencies and instrumentalities which will pay our obligations, namely, the taxpaying agencies in private enterprise. In that event our bonded indebtedness, now extending into the billions of dollars, will be jeopardized.

Shall we say to those who hold Federal bonds, "We are now inch by inch, little by little, creeping into such a situation that finally when the entire purpose shall have been accomplished we shall wonder where we shall get the money to pay even the interest, much less the principal, of the bonds which you hold in trust and so sacredly"?

Mr. President, I belong to a school of thought that has given a great deal of study to this subject. I feel in my heart that I am correct in the position I take regarding it. I feel that my country depends for its future success upon having our country continue to follow the great principle of private enterprise, and I believe it would be disastrous, indeed, if we were to destroy that system or even take the first step in that direction.

So I have opposed this item in the appropriation bill, as I shall oppose the other item which will come up later in the day and which proposes to set up what is known as the Southwestern Power Administration.

I propose to encourage the investment of private money and to encourage private adventure and private study and private research, so that men may live in a realm of freedom and so that the Government of the United States may never be charged with setting itself up to enslave mankind in any area of this great Nation. I propose, insofar as I can, to prevent the Federal Government from ever occupying such a position that men and women, striving to sustain themselves, must kow-tow, if you please, to the agent of some Federal authority. If this is the land of the free and if it is to be maintained as the land of the free, then certainly the Congress of the United States should be the first, when private enterprise is ready to go forward, to maintain freedom of action and freedom of investment.

Mr. President, I shall come to a conclusion by a résumé of the whole subject. On yesterday the able junior Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], in making mention of his fine service in the legislature of his native State, dwelt on the subject of the Central Valley Act, and said that he was a member of the legislature of his State when the Central Valley Act was passed. Let me say that the California act which originated this project now has nothing to do with it. California found out long ago that it could not finance the building of the dams and the canals, and it came to Washington to persuade the Federal Government to take over. The Federal Government did take over in 1935, 11 years ago. Since that time the project has been a Federal undertaking, with the Federal Government assuming all the burden and all the risk.

As a Government undertaking, the project has been changed in many particulars. It has been enlarged. New facilities have been added. Old ones have been eliminated. The estimates have increased from $170,000,000, as they were originally, to $384,000,000 now. About all that is left of the California project is the name. Under the Federal plan, navigation, flood control, and reclamation are the three primary purposes. Power is incidental. Let me repeat, without fear of contradiction, that under the Federal plan, navigation, flood control, and reclamation are the three primary purposes. Power is incidental.

The project was first adopted as a Federal project under an Executive order in 1935. Then it was authorized by Congress in the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1937. It is being constructed under that authorization. Repayment of the funds provided by the Federal Treasury is required by the act in accordance with Federal reclamation laws. The act of 1937 declared the purpose of the project to be "improving navigation, regulating the flow of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers, controlling floods, providing for storage and for the delivery of the stored waters thereof, for the reclamation of arid and semiarid lands and lands of Indian reservations, and other beneficial uses and"—incidentally, I say—"for the generation and sale of electric energy." What for, Mr. President? The statute says, "As a means of financially aiding and assisting such undertakings and in order to permit the full utilization of the works constructed to accomplish the aforesaid purposes."

In other words, the Congress set up this project, not primarily to be an agency through which power would be sold, but, rather, to be an agency by which power would be generated and sold for the purpose of carrying out the original purposes, namely, reclamation and flood control and water storage.

The act also provided that—

> The said dam and reservoirs shall be used, first, for river regulation, improvement of navigation, and flood control; second, for irrigation and domestic uses; and, third, for power.

I call particular attention to the fact that the act stated they should be used, first, for river regulation, improvement of navigation, and flood control; second, for irrigation and domestic uses; and, third, for power.

Again I say the power feature of this great project, with its hundreds of millions of dollars of expended public money, is the incidental thing, and not the primary purpose. Yet, today what are we doing? We are attempting to lay the foundation for the expenditure of millions upon millions of dollars to set up a great power empire in the Central Valley of California, to take over control of the lives and being of the people of California and of those who would reclaim the lands of that great fertile State, so that they would be the servants—the serfs, if you please, as some would make them—of those sitting in Federal power, who would control the lives of men and women in the everyday walks of life. Mr. President, I pray God that that will not take place. I hope the Senate of the United States and the Congress as a whole will see the light and will stop this thing before it goes too far, because, Mr. President, my country and your country demands a greater place in the family of nations than it would have if there should be a socialistic regime set up in the Western Hemisphere. Today on every hand and at every portal of our Nation, communism is crying aloud to be let in in order that it may take over. These are the steps which will pave the way for the taking over.

The act of 1937 does not require construction of transmission lines. It merely authorizes them if they are necessary to provide a market for the power. Transmission lines can only be justified if they make possible a more advantageous sale of power than is now available.

The contract which now covers the sale of all available power is admitted by the Bureau of Reclamation to be a favorable contract, and that contract is with the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. It was further established at the hearings that sale of the total power output to the private utility under that contract will yield the Government over $2,000,000 a year more than can be secured from transmission of the power by the Bureau throughout northern California under the rates already established by the Bureau.

Construction of the competing transmission system planned by the Bureau of Reclamation would require the Government to invest more than $70,000,000. This investment is wholly unnecessary under the offers made by the private utility. It would be sheer folly on the part of the Government to make such an investment when it is wholly unnecessary and would result in a loss of more than $2,000,000 a year in returns to the Federal Treasury.

Testimony before the committee showed that with a competitive power system the full cost of the project would not be repaid and also that interest on the Government's investment in power facilities would not be returned to the Federal Treasury. With a competitive system the return to the Treasury in a 50-year period would be $142,000,000 less than if the power were disposed of in the manner provided in the contract under which the power now available is being marketed.

TRANSMISSION LINES IN PRESENT BILL

There now are two generators installed at Shasta Dam and their output is being transmitted over a single line 25 miles long to Shasta substation, a point of connection with the existing system. These two generators load that line to capacity. Two more lines paralleling that 25-mile line are needed to get the output of the additional generators to the market.

The bill passed by the House does not allow any funds for the construction of these two necessary lines from Shasta Dam to Shasta substation. The Senate committee's report corrects the situation by allocating House appropriations to the construction of these lines and by adding thereto any unexpended balances available from amounts heretofore allowed for other transmission lines.

The line from Oroville to Sacramento for which the House allowed funds in a duplicating line which is entirely unnecessary. Even in an independent competitive operation it could serve no useful purpose for years to come. The project pumps which might be served from this line will not be ready to operate for 4 or 5 years. The public agencies which might be supplied with power from such a line all have long-term contracts with the power company.

The Sacramento Municipal Utility District, which has long been claimed as an important outlet for Shasta power, recently signed a contract with the company for 7½ years. In fact, the contract was signed after testimony was taken on the possible outlets for Shasta power. When the House committee passed on these appropriations it did not have before it the fact that the Sacramento Municipal Utility District was no longer available as an outlet for Shasta power.

The only customer which the Bureau has or has in prospect is the small city of Roseville, which would use less than 1 percent of the capacity of the Oroville-Sacramento line. The Government cannot justify an extension of the Oroville line merely to serve Roseville, which is already served by the power company and has ample power available from that source.

The line on the Contra Costa canal is also unnecessary. The amount allowed by the House would have to be multiplied six times to complete it. The pumps on this canal are now being supplied on an exchange basis under a contract which former Secretary Ickes made in 1943. The terms of that contract cover service to other pumps which may be installed on the canal. That means that power is now available for all additional pumps to be installed as fast as they can be installed. With power now available the Government would be spared the investment in this line. Under the existing contract power is available to the new pumps at a lower cost than if the line were built.

The additional generating units at Shasta Dam will commence operation before the end of the fiscal year. The bill passed by the House does not provide an outlet for this power. The Senate committee proposes to provide that outlet with the funds which the House allowed for lines which are not needed.

It does this by making the House appropriation available for the first 25 miles from the dam. Without the construction of these lines, power will be under production with no means of getting it to market. The committee's plans will get it to market. The House bill would allow it to develop at the dam, but would provide no way of getting the power beyond that point.

Mr. President, I have with all the fervor I possess presented the matter, not because I am alone interested in California, but because I am interested in the development of the whole of the great region of the West. If there is a region where individual freedom prevails it is in the land of the West. If there is a land to which the present and future generations may look for the establishment of homes, for the setting up of businesses and the development of enterprise, it is the great wide open spaces of the West, where fertile lands and freedom abound, where what we need is the application of water, the purpose for which the project was originally begun, and which the provisions of the pending bill will forward.

Mr. President, if in building reclamation projects some designing mind sees an opportunity for the setting up of a great power empire, then indeed the primary object of the reclamation acts will have been lost, and power, electric energy, will become the thing by which men will control the lives of others, by which the development of our Nation and its future will, in my judgment, be seriously curtailed.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada has correctly stated my position with respect to this bill, though not in my own words. I feel that there is a great distinction between private enterprise and private monopoly. My objection to the committee amendment is that it makes it certain that there shall be but one purchaser for the power from the Shasta Dam. It provides for the construction of a transmission line about 25½ miles long from the dam in the canyon, and from there on the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. is the sole purchaser of the power developed.

The benefits of this project are about one-third for flood control and reclamation, about one-third for irrigation, and a third for power, but power must pay two-thirds of the cost. We all understand that. The question is, then, how can we get the best price for the power—by selling it in the mountains to one customer, or transmitting it to the central part of the State, where more than one customer would have an opportunity to buy it? That is all there is to the issue.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWKES in the chair). Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator has just made the statement that there is more than one customer in the Central Valley. Will the Senator name a customer in the Central Valley, or anywhere in northern California, other than the Pacific Gas & Electric Co.?

Mr. HAYDEN. What the Senator means to say is that temporarily the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., as a good monopoly, has tied up a number of the cities and towns with contracts, and that they cannot immediately purchase the power sought to be provided through the pending measure. But that will not apply for all time to come, and it certainly does not apply to one-third of this power which is required to pump water for the farmers for the irrigation of their lands.

I cannot for the life of me see how it is possible to work out an arrangement whereby 1¾ kilowatts of power can be turned into the transmission lines of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. at the dam, and get only 1 kilowatt when it comes to pumping for the farmer, and call that a good bargain; and that is the present arrangement.

There is no use in our disussing the question. I think the Senate thoroughly understands it, and if it is agreeable to the Senate I should like to call for a quorum, and then would like to have the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. A similar proposal confronts my section of the country, and before the Senate votes on either of these questions I think it would be in order for me to present my views so that the Senate can vote on one, and immediately following that vote on the other. I think we should have the two pictures before the Senate before the vote is taken, because they are similar.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I should personally prefer that the matter of the Central Valley project be voted on at this time, after the discussion of the Central Valley situation. The discussion of the other project may go on for a considerable period of time. I believe the situation pertaining to the Central Valley is entirely different from that which my able colleague from Oklahoma intends to discuss. In the case of the Central Valley project, both Senators representing the State of California are in favor of it, the legislature of California has gone on record in favor of it, the Governor of California, who has just been renamed by both political parties, sent a telegram, which I introduced into the RECORD yesterday, in favor of the project. There is almost unanimity among the Members of the House delegation from California in regard to the project. No other State is directly concerned, whereas in the situation to be discussed by the able Senator from Oklahoma a number of States are involved, and Senators from those States have different opinions.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I urge that the vote on the Central Valley project be taken at this time, while the matter is fresh in the minds of the Members of the Senate.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold the suggestion for a moment?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Certainly.

Mr. HAYDEN. I desire to make a suggestion to the Senator from Oklahoma similar to that presented by the Senator from California.

There is no question about the authority of law to build the transmission lines in Central Valley. The authority is provided in the statute so far as the Central Valley project is concerned. There is a very grave question of law about the building of dams, steam plants, and things of that kind, in connection with the other project. So does not the Senator from Oklahoma really think that the two cases are so dissimilar that it would be better to vote on one now and on the other later?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I think I should pursue the course which I deem the best, not only for my State, but for sister and brother States, and for the United States. If I am recognized, I shall proceed.

Mr. President, the absence of a quorum was suggested, and I do not wish to resist that, but I wish to have the floor immediately after the quorum is developed.

Mr. HAYDEN. I understood the Senator from California had withdrawn his request.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I withdraw it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Nevada to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McCARRAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I should like to make my remarks, which are in the nature of an explanation, as brief as is humanly possible.

Two amendments to this bill are yet to be decided. One is the amendment with respect to the Shasta Dam. The committee cut the estimate quite a bit, and the chairman of the committee and other Senators are not agreeable to the reduction.

The second amendment which still remains to be decided is with respect to the Southwestern Power Administration. The bill as it was introduced in the House called for $23,000,000 to be appropriated with which to start construction of a vast electrical empire in the southwestern area of the United States. On the wall in the rear of the Chamber hangs a map which I am advised was prepared by the Southwestern Power Administration. It shows in outline, in the central and western part, the State of Oklahoma. It embraces the major part of six States, namely, the States of Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas, and Louisiana.

There is a request before the Senate and the House for the sum of $23,000,000 with which to start construction of a competing, duplicating system of electric wires and power plants in that area of the country. In the House of Representatives, where this bill originated, the House subcommittee reduced the $23,000,000 to $3,000,000 plus. On the floor of the House of Representatives, at the instance of the Speaker of the House, the $3,000,000 recommended by the committee was increased to $7,500,000.

The program of the Southwestern Power Administration calls for the expenditure of more than $200,000,000. The first estimate is $202,000,000. By way of comparison, when the Shasta Dam in California was first proposed the whole project was estimated to cost $184,000,000. With the appropriations this year, more than $200,000,000 will have been expended on the project, and the total estimate now is approximately $400,000,000. If the costs of the Southwestern program mount in the same proportion as the costs in California mounted, when this project is completed it will cost half a billion dollars.

The power lines which we now have in this area cost $1,000,000,000. Eleven integrated existing power companies own these power lines in the southwestern part of the United States, in the six States which I have named, and they have the whole territory blanketed with electric lines.

An examination of the map reveals that the black lines show the existing power lines, and the red and yellow lines show the lines which the Southwestern Power Administration desires to build in this section of the country. Only two public dams in that area are now creating power. One is the Denison Dam, built on the Red River between Oklahoma and Texas. The second dam is at Norfork, in northern Arkansas. Those are the only two dams owned by the Government which are now producing power. The dam at Denison is producing 35,000 kilowatts a year. At Norfork the same amount of energy is being created. Thirty-five thousand kilowatts at Norfork and 35,000 at Denison make a total of 70,000 kilowatts being created at those two dams at the present time. It is true that we are building other dams, but no other dam will be built which can produce power for a year or 2 years, or perhaps 3 years. The Government now has the power produced at Denison and Norfork contracted for for the next 3 years. A contract is now in existence to sell all the power that can be generated at those two dams until June 1949. So the Senate need not be in a hurry. We have 3 years to consider this matter.

It is contended by some that the Denison Dam and the Norfork Dam should be connected. Those dams are more than 300 miles apart. The testimony before our committee was that there was a great loss in the transmission of electrical energy for a distance of 300 miles. It was testified that the loss was at least 10 percent, and some witnesses said it was greater. So if we build a line from Norfork to Denison, a distance of 300 miles, to transmit power from Norfork to Denison, there will inevitably be a line loss. All the power will not be delivered by at least 10 percent. But it is not proposed to build a straight line. It is proposed to build a line from Norfork to an already existing line, called the Ark-La line, and from that line over into Oklahoma to the point called Markham Ferry, just south of the Pensacola Dam, which is a State-owned dam in my State of Oklahoma. The line now proposed to be built connecting those two dams would be more than 500 miles long. How much loss of power would there be in the transmission of electricity for 500 miles—25 percent, 40 percent, or 50 percent? I am not an engineer, and I cannot tell. It would be upward of that percentage.

Mr. President, there is no excuse at the present time for making this connection. Later we shall have a power dam at the point known as Fort Gibson. Its construction has just been started. Three or four years will be required to finish it. Later we shall have power at the Tenkiller Ferry Dam, which has just been started. Three or four years will be required to complete it. Later we shall have some power dams in Arkansas, but they are not ready now.

In my opinion no legislation authorizes the appropriation of $23,000,000 with which to start this project. Before I discuss that question, I wish to give to the Senate a visual argument which to me is all-controlling. This question has been pending in the Congress for only a few months. I wish to exhibit to the Senate all the requests from my State in favor of the expenditure of $23,000,000 now, and later $200,000,000 to build this system of electric lines and steam power plants. I have here 32 telegrams and letters. Those are all the communications I have received from my constituents in favor of this vast expenditure of money in that section of the country.

On the other hand, I exhibit to the Senate more than 2,000 telegrams and letters from my State of Oklahoma in opposition to this project. Senators are welcome to examine them if they care to do so, and see the arguments for and against. With that sort of reaction from my State, I have no alternative except to represent the viewpoint expressed in the letters and telegrams.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. Does the Senator remember when we had the so-called death sentence provision in the Securities and Exchange Act? I received from constituents in Arizona approximately 4,000 letters asking me to vote against the death sentence. I decided I should not vote in the way my constituents had asked me to vote, and I received no criticism. I am sure the Senator from Oklahoma will exercise his own independent judgment, as he always does, and will not be influenced one way or the other.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I wish to invite attention of Senators to another matter. I exhibit a booklet consisting of 145 pages which contains copies of laws with relation to the Federal Power Commission. The Commission was created by the Congress, and from time to time the authority of the Federal Power Commission was enlarged and made more certain. I exhibit to Senators 145 pages of legislation which controls the Federal Power Commission.

I next exhibit to Senators a copy of the law which created the Tennessee Valley Authority. I voted for the law. It was passed in 1933. The law consists of 15 pages. The Congress saw fit to pass a law and establish a definite policy with respect to the Tennessee Valley Authority. I ask Senators, Where can there be found any law authorizing the appropriation of $250,000,000 to build transmission lines along the route which is shown by the red lines on the chart? There is no law on the subject except a bare mention. I will state what it is. When considering the last Flood Control Act we realized that after a while, under its terms, some dams might be completed and made ready to operate. We knew that there would be created some extra power which would have to be disposed of. So, in one part of the last Flood Control Act, Congress incorporated section 5. I exhibit to the Senate section 5 which has been cut from the hearings and pasted on a post card. From an inspection of the card it may be seen how small the section is. It covers only two-thirds of one side of the post card. We are asked to approve an appropriation of approximately $200,000,000. In my opinion, when the project once gets under way, the cost will be at least half a billion dollars.

Mr. President, the section to which I have referred provides that when the dams are completed and there is extra power to be disposed of, the War Department must turn the power over to the Secretary of the Interior.

The section further provides that the Secretary of the Interior may then resell the power wholesale—not retail. The language specifically uses the word "wholesale." The Secretary of the Interior may sell the power wholesale. In my State there are 11 what might be termed major electric-energy producing companies. They are all integrated. In my section of the country the dams which are generating power have, as an outlet for their power, 11 large companies that are ready to buy and are buying the power. Every kilowatt of power which is being generated today at Denison and at Norfork is being sold. When a big flood occurs, all of the flumes are opened and the power machinery at the end of those flumes begins to turn and a great amount of electricity is generated. The power is distributed among the company's customers, and the steam plant is shut down.

Mr. President, the question may be asked, Where is there authority in law for the appropriation of money with which to build the system as outlined on the map? There are two words in the section to which I have referred. They are, "Related facilities." The same words are used in the language which we have been discussing. The power may be sold at wholesale, and the Secretary may then use such money as the Congress may give him to construct related facilities.

What does the term "related facilities" mean? I read from the evidence before the committee. The chief counsel for the Southwestern Power Administration is of the opinion that the words "related facilities" give to the Secretary the authority to build lines, to buy lines, to buy stand-by plants, to build stand-by plants, or do anything. Here is what the chief counsel says:

> It is a very inclusive term embracing anything which aids or makes easier the performance of a duty.

That is the interpretation which the chief counsel for the Southwestern Power Administration places upon the term "related facilities." If that term is all that is required on which to base appropriations which may aggregate a half billion dollars for the purpose of building lines, steam plants, roads, buying transformers, and doing other things, we have made a terrible mistake during the past few years, and we are making a mistake now in writing long bills. If, by the use of only two words, we can lay the foundation for the proposed new electrical empire, what is the purpose of trying to achieve the same result by writing a long bill? If legislation can be made that simple, we have made many mistakes. We have approximately 11 appropriation bills which must be disposed of. If we can legislate properly by the use of so few words, we can pass those bills very quickly. If we can build the proposed electric empire with only two words, we can appropriate all the necessary money for the Department of the Interior by merely saying, "Be it enacted, for the Department of the Interior, 1947." That is all that would be necessary. The term "related facilities" covers everything. It will cover, at least, everything that the Department of the Interior requires. We can appropriate for the War Department very simply. All we need to do is merely say, "Be it enacted, appropriate for the War Department, 1947." In the last few days we had before us a draft extension bill. All the Congress needed to have done was to pass a simple law reading, "Be it enacted, draft extended." A few days ago we also had before us the OPA extension bill. Why did we not merely say, "Be it enacted, OPA bill extended?"

Mr. President, I exhibit to the Senate the post card to which I referred a few moments ago. The space which it covers is very small.

In order to make the situation as ridiculous as I can, I exhibit to the Senate all the law which I can find which it is claimed is a basis for the proposed authority. Senators have heard about angels dancing on the point of a pin. I cannot put the law on the point of a pin, but I have put it on the head of a pin. I have put the pin on the head of a pencil and have cut out the two words "related facilities" and pasted them on. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have a page take this law and this magnifying glass around to the Members of the Senate so that they may see the basic law on which they are asked to appropriate $200,000,000 to blanket my State, the State of Arkansas, and other States as well, with competing power lines.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REVERCOMB in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I notice on page 100 of the appropriation bill for the Department of the Interior the heading in quite large type "Southwestern Power Administration." I note also that from time to time we have had before the Senate a bill to create the Missouri Valley Authority. The bill went into a great deal of detail with respect to the functions of the Authority, the persons who would administer it, and so forth. I ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether or not there is any statute on the books of the United States which creates, by name, an organization known as the Southwestern Power Administration.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator asked that question. I shall give very briefly the history.

The first Executive order was to the Federal Power Administration, and for the purpose of this activity the Administration was authorized to appoint a man to act, and he is called the Administrator. So the first one of these Executive orders directed that the Federal power authority, or the Director, take charge of the power at the different dams in my section of the country. Then some other orders were issued by the President providing how the power should be managed.

In 1943, when Congress passed the Flood Control Act, which was approved on December 22, 1944, in one section the law directed the War Department to turn over to the Secretary of the Interior all the power that was developed at flood-control dams. So when the Congress acted and directed that the power should be turned over to the Secretary of the Interior, the President modified his existing order and directed that all the power from all the other dams should be turned over to the Secretary of the Interior also.

Then the Secretary of the Interior, having the power conferred by the Congress and by Executive order, in turn created the Southwestern Power Administration. That was done by an Executive order drawn by the Secretary of the Interior, approved by the President. So the Secretary of the Interior, by his own order, under the authority conferred on him under section 5 of the Flood Control Act, created the Southwestern Power Administration and gave it jurisdiction over the Norfolk Dam, the Denison Dam, and at that time the Pensacola Dam, which is a State dam. It is still under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, but I hope it will be turned back to the State in the next few days.

Mr. President, that is a chronological statement of how the Southwestern Power Administration came into existence. It was not created by the Congress; it was created by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator for the information.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I wish to make it clear that under the program which is now being followed in selling this power to the existing 11 companies—they were all integrated during the war and are all connected—all the power generated from the Denison Dam and the Norfork Dam goes into the system of these 11 companies. They are buying it all.

It is true that in our section of the country hydroelectric energy cannot be created as cheaply as can steam energy. That is to be readily understood. In our section we do not have dependable water, we do not have water in sufficient quantity to store it in a great body, and then keep a dynamo or generator running throughout the entire year. We might do it in some years, even for 2 or 3 years, and then have a drought which would cause the dam to be practically dry for 2 or 3 years, as I have noticed during my residence in the southwestern section. So, in order to get the most out of the dams, it was decided to sell all the power to the existing 11 companies. They take it all.

If the time comes when there is no power from both these dams, the steam companies will fire up their plants and begin to serve that section of the United States. There is no shortage of power there. During the war, when in the different States there were great numbers of camps, and air fields, and factories of one kind or another, there was ample power to serve each of them. At the beginning of the war it occurred to me we might not have enough power, and I suggested to the Administration that one or two additional hydroelectric plants be built in order to be sure to have plenty of power to carry our end of the war.

Congress appropriated the money to build the project at Fort Gibson and the project at Markham Ferry, but before any contract was let, it was discovered the Government did not need the power, so the authorities said they would not build the dams during the war because it would take men, cement, steel, machinery, and lumber that were not available. So because the power was not needed during the war—and that was only 2 or 3 years ago—the plants were not built at that time. They have since been started. There is no shortage of power there. There is no shortage of lines over which to transmit all the power we have and need to all the cities and towns and REA's in the section. There are about 15 or more REA establishments in Arkansas which are all being served now. There are about 23 REA's in my State of Oklahoma, which are all being served now. They are getting power from the integrated system of the 11 companies.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am glad to yield to my colleague.

Mr. MOORE. The provision being discussed contemplates, of course, does it not, the building of steam plants on the part of the Government itself to supplement the power of hydroelectric plants?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It does.

Mr. MOORE. Does not that mean that it contemplates that all the private utilities in the six Southwestern States will be supplanted by Government-owned electric power?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If the Senator will examine the map on the wall, it will be obvious to him that whoever planned the map had in mind the building of more hydrcelectric plants, then the building of additional steam stand-by plants, then the building of lines so that they could begin to serve the cities which are already there, and serve the municipalities and the REA's. The proposed system will be in competition with the 11 systems already in our section of the country.

Mr. MOORE. No system, whether it is Government or private, could possibly serve that section of the country without supplemental steam power.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is axiomatic; everybody who knows a thing about power is aware that a hydroelectric plant in most places is of no value without a steam stand-by plant. Twenty years or more ago, when we started to build the Muscle Shoals plant on the Tennessee River—I was not a Member of the Senate at that time—we immediately started to build the Gorgas steam plant, so that when the dam was completed a steam plant would also be available, so that if the Tennessee River fell somewhat, the boilers in the Gorgas steam plant could be fired and electrical energy could be generated by steam.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma has overlooked the possibility that this appropriation is to generate political power. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator from Nevada spoke of that a while ago. I made the statement yesterday that there now is a very definite movement on foot to nationalize electrical energy, commencing at Maine, going down to Key West, Fla., along the Atlantic coast, and going clear across the Nation, and those behind it have gotten pretty well along with the program. For example, in the Tennessee Valley a large area is already nationalized. There are no private plants to speak of. There may be a small municipal plant or other small plant in the Tennessee Valley area that is still privately owned, but in the main the plants in the Tennessee Valley have been taken over, and electrical energy is nationalized in that area.

If they take 6 States in our section of the country—there being some 48 States, and 6 being only a small percentage of the whole—and nationalize electricity there, and if they go out into the Northwest, to the Bonneville, the Grand Coulee, and some other plants which will probably be built, and nationalize electricity, I have no complaint, if that is desired. Then, if in California they want to nationalize electricity through the Shasta and the Keswick plants, and the others, I have no objection, if that is desired. But when that is done, what do we have? We have the nationalization program well on its way, and every Congress will be importuned for money to extend the system.

If by "related facilities" is meant what it is said to mean, when the various systems are built, each of them will take over plants in Kansas, and reach over and take over the plants in Missouri, and take over the electric-light plant in Kansas City, Mo., and Kansas City, Kans.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. REED. I express my complete agreement with the argument the Senator is making. I expect to follow him and make a few brief remarks, but the Senator from Oklahoma is correctly stating the situation. So far as I am able to speak for Kansas, one of the six States affected, we do not want any part of the southwestern power project.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I appreciate the statement of the Senator.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. Would the Senator be kind enough to tell us whether, if these transmission lines and related facilities should be constructed and installed, there is any provision of law which imposes upon any committee, or commission, or board created by Congress, the management of such facilities, or is that left entirely to the Secretary of the Interior, under the law as it now stands?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am not on the inside, but I have a suspicion that quite a controversy is going on now between the Federal Power Commission, created by Congress to handle this class of work, and the Southwestern Power Administration, which is sticking out its hands trying to get control of all these facilities.

Mr. DONNELL. Section 5 of the Flood Control Act of 1944 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, from funds to be appropriated by Congress, to construct or acquire, by purchase or other agreement, certain transmission lines and related facilities, it being limited by the expression—> only such transmission lines and related facilities as may be necessary in order to make the power and energy generated at said projects available in wholesale quantities for sale on fair and reasonable terms and conditions to facilities owned by the Federal Government, public bodies, cooperatives, and privately owned companies.

The question I desire to ask the Senator from Oklahoma is, Who, under the present law, is authorized to administer all this investment and to operate the business that would be created by the acquisition and control of these various transmission lines and related facilities? Is it left to any board or commission in which the respective States and their inhabitants have any interest or representation, or is it left to the Federal Power Commission, or is it left to the Secretary of the Interior, or is there doubt under the law as to who would be the manager and controller of that investment?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, it is my opinion that the public generally believes that the Federal Power Commission has control over all the power matters that are interstate in character, but that is not true. They have only one thing to do with this power, and that is to approve the rate that may be submitted to them. Under the law the Southwestern Power Administration must submit its rate at any given place to the Federal Power Commission and have it approved by the Commission. So far as I know, that is the only duty the Federal Power Commission has with respect to electric rates and electric matters in the United States.

Mr. DONNELL. I wish to ask a further question. Is it the Senator's position that as the law now stands, if this investment be made and these various properties are acquired and constructed, the actual management will be vested in the Secretary of the Interior, without any supervision by any board or commission in which the respective areas shall have representation?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Save the approval of the rate schedule. The Southwestern Power Administration will have full control over the particular area in question.

Mr. DONNELL. And the Southwestern Power Administration is simply a name that is applied to a branch of the Department of the Interior, which branch has been set up under an Executive order, as the Secretary has indicated? Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. REED. I want to say a word with respect to what the Senator from Oklahoma has said as to the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission. I happen to be one of those having had something to do with the creation of the Federal Power Commission in the first instance some 25 years ago. It came into being because some electric power with an interstate character was beyond the regulation of the State authority, and the Federal Power Commission was created to deal with such interstate power transmitted across State lines beyond the power or authority of State commissions to control. I think, as I recall the law, that the Federal Power Commission is charged with some responsibility as to hydro-power sites which are on navigable streams or on the public domain.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Including national parks, military reservations, and forest reserves; the Senator is correct about that.

Mr. REED. Yes. But so far as the Federal Power Commission is concerned, it has no general powers, except as to the regulation of rates and the determination of reasonable rates, and the regulations that go with such a public duty. As I understand the present situation, the entire administration of the power in this instance would be under the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator from Kansas is correct, from my viewpoint.

Mr. President, I desire to put into the RECORD a comparison between the size of the area embraced in the Southwestern Power Administration's territory and the so-called TVA. In order to make that as clear as I can I desire to read from a statement.

If the duplicating, competing, transmission grid proposed by the SPA—that is the Southwestern Power Administration—were to be built, only SPA customers would receive the power benefits from the dams to be built, at a cost to all taxpayers, and piecemeal, of a billion dollars. That is, in the whole territory. A billion dollars have already been expended there, and if SPA should take over the territory and not buy what is there, and build their own plants, it would cost another billion dollars and more.

The private companies in the six southwestern States operate 15,000 miles of transmission lines of 66,000 volts and above per line. SPA proposes to build 15,000 miles of transmission lines in the same area. In other words, 15,000 miles of lines are proposed to be built in their territory, and there are only 6,500 miles built in the TVA territory. These lines will not reach additional customers; they will not reach any who do not now have service available.

The TVA territory covers 83,000 square miles. The SPA territory covers 300,000 square miles.

If this administration is created, and if the opening wedge is driven by appropriating the amount proposed in this bill, the camel will have his nose under the tent. Next year the officials will come back and want a few more million dollars, and they will get them. The year after that they will come back and ask for several more million dollars, and they will get them. When they get through a billion dollars may have been expended in that section of the country.

As I said, the TVA territory covers only 83,000 square miles, whereas the SPA area covers 300,000 square miles. TVA has 6,500 miles of transmission lines, whereas it is proposed in the SPA area to build 15,000 miles of transmission lines—two and a half times as much as in the TVA territory. I think the RECORD should show that because I think Senators should understand just what the issue is on which they are going to vote.

Mr. President, there is much talk about cheap power. Some individuals come to my section of the country and say, "You must appropriate the money to build these lines so that you can have cheap power." What is cheap power? In areas which do not have available plentiful supplies of coal and gas it costs 5 or 6 or 7 mills to generate 1 kilowatt of power. In our section of the country, in Oklahoma and Arkansas, where coal and gas are available practically everywhere power can be provided by steam for approximately 3½ or 4 mills a kilowatt. Hydroelectric power cannot compete with the steam plants in my section of the country. No one would put a dollar into a hydroelectric plant in Arkansas or Oklahoma if there were no other incidental values to it. These dams are being built to control floods, and only when there is incidental power is power being harnessed and sold. It would cost 6 or 7 or 8 mills per kilowatt to develop hydroelectric power. Yet the REA's are buying power in my State at from 5 to 6 or 7 mills per kilowatt.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. It has been pretty well established now that combination dams for flood control and power purposes are not very practicable.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The hydroelectric dams are worthless without steam stand-by plants because there can only be sold what is called firm power. Let us consider Denison Lake Dam as it is, with 35,000 kilowatts capacity. The operators of that dam cannot contract to deliver to Durant or to Sherman or to Denison, Tex., so much power a day for the next 10-year period. There might come a drought lasting 4 or 5 years. The Texoma Lake bed might be dry, as I have seen it, with dust flying up the channel of the stream. No one would dare to make such a contract. In some sections, as in the Columbia River area, where there is a dependable source of water coming from the snow-covered mountains, and the Shasta Dam area, the situation is different. But even in that section they want money to build steam stand-by plants to firm up the power which is going to be generated both at the Keswick Dam and the Shasta Dam. So a hydroelectric plant is of no benefit whatever unless it has stand-by steam plants, and under the present authority of law not a dollar can be appropriated to build or buy steam plants. No one contends it can except the general counsel for the SPA, and if he can get by Congress, of course, the law does not amount to anything. If he can get the Congress to appropriate money without authority of law, of course, the SPA would use the money to buy or build stand-by steam plants.

Let us consider the matter of taxes, Mr. President. The Senator from Idaho made some mention of taxes. In my State of Oklahoma, represented by my colleague [Mr. MOORE] and myself, we have two large utility companies, the Public Service Co., at Tulsa, and the Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co., operating out of Oklahoma City. In the main, they cover the State. They pay into the Federal Treasury, into the State treasury of Oklahoma and into the county and city treasuries almost $10,000,000 a year. If they are driven out of business, if they cannot survive, if they have to go into bankruptcy, then the Federal Government, the State of Oklahoma, and the several counties and the several cities and the several school districts will lose their respective shares of those taxes.

I have here a statement as to the entire area. I did not prepare this statement, and I have not verified it. It was prepared by the manager of one of the large companies, and I do not think he could afford to prepare a statement as to figures, and put it in my hand, which was not correct or as nearly correct as he could make it. I find from the statement that private utilities in the SPA area last year paid $58,000,000 in taxes. (See Senate hearings on p. 676.) If the private utilities are not driven to the wall and are permitted to continue in business, they will pay $78,035,250 in taxes to the Federal, State, and local governments in 1950. That is based upon the increase in the taxes of those companies in the past few years. In 1965, which is only 20 years hence, the total taxes, if the rates increase as they have increased over the past few years, will be $144,903,000.

Mr. President, if this prairie-fire movement for the nationalization of electrical energy sweeps the Nation, the Federal Government will compete with existing companies worth $18,000,000,000. If the Congress goes into the business of competing with them, they will have to go bankrupt, because they cannot compete with the Government, whose agencies pay no taxes and no interest and can make rates as low as necessary to freeze out any company with which they come in competition. At present $18,000,000,000 is invested in electrical utilities. If we are going into the power business, I hope that these appropriations will be postponed until next year. Let the proper committee of the Senate and the proper committee of the House consider this question, make an investigation, and hold hearings, having the most competent electrical experts in the world come before them and testify. Then let the legislative committee bring in a bill declaring the policy. If that policy should be to nationalize electricity in the United States, my voice would be silenced, and as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I would reluctantly vote for appropriations to build competing lines or to buy lines now in existence.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Section 5 of the Flood Control Act of 1944 begins with this sentence:

Electric power and energy generated at reservoir projects under the control of the War Department and in the opinion of the Secretary of War not required in the operation of such projects shall be delivered to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall transmit and dispose of such power and energy in such manner as to encourage the most widespread use thereof, at the lowest possible rates to consumers consistent with sound business principles, the rate schedules to become effective upon confirmation and approval by the Federal Power Commission.

Does the Senator understand that as the matter stands today, the only reservoir projects, within the meaning of that sentence, which are in existence are those at the Denison Dam and the Norfork Dam?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Those are the only ones we have. Others are being built, but they will not be ready for 2, 3, or 4 years.

Mr. DONNELL. The only two we now have are at Denison and Norfork.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. DONNELL. That leads me to this further inquiry: In the same section of the 1944 Flood Control Act is this language:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, from funds to be appropriated by the Congress, to construct or acquire, by purchase or other agreement, only such transmission lines and related facilities as may be necessary in order to make the power and energy generated at said projects available in wholesale quantities for sale on fair and reasonable terms and conditions to facilities owned by the Federal Government, public bodies, cooperatives, and privately owned companies.

I ask the Senator what his understanding of the fact is, as to whether or not there is evidence showing that the acquisition of the transmission lines and related facilities sought to be acquired by the contemplated appropriation is, to quote the language of this section—necessary in order to make the power and energy generated—

At the Denison and the Norfork Dams—available in wholesale quantities for sale on fair and reasonable terms and conditions to facilities owned by the Federal Government, public bodies, cooperatives, and privately owned companies.

What is the evidence before the Senator as to whether or not it is necessary that the transmission lines and related facilities involved in this discussion today should be acquired—in order to make the power and energy generated * * * available in wholesale quantities for sale on fair and reasonable terms and conditions to facilities owned by the Federal Government, public bodies, cooperatives, and privately owned companies?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The answer is very simple. The intent of that section was to provide an outlet for such power as could be created at those dams. That is the purpose of that section.

Referring to the map on the wall, the Denison Dam is located only a few miles north of Denison, Tex., and Denison, Tex., is located only a few miles north of Sherman, Tex. In order to make the power from the Denison Dam available to Texas, the Government built a transmission line from the dam down to Sherman. That line is now in place. It was built by the Government. It is owned by the Government. Over that line power from the Denison Dam is being furnished to the interrelated companies in the State of Texas. There is a line running north from Denison up into Oklahoma, but most of the towns in that section have their own municipal plants. There are no large institutions in that area, and there is no particular demand in my State for power from the Denison Dam. But there is a line in existence, and if anyone wishes power from the Denison Dam, it may be obtained from an existing line. So it is not necessary to appropriate a single cent to purchase or condemn anything to dispose of all the power from the Denison Dam.

Take the Norfork Dam——

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point, while we are still at Denison?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Is it the Senator's opinion, from the information in his possession, that insofar as the power and energy generated at the Denison Dam are concerned, the acquisition of further transmission lines and related facilities is unnecessary?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. We do not need to spend a single mill to dispose of all the power that is being generated at the Denison Dam, or that can be generated in the next year.

Mr. DONNELL. As I understand the Senator's view, using the language of the statute, it is not necessary that any further transmission lines and related facilities be acquired by the Government in order to make the power and energy generated at the Denison Dam available in wholesale quantities for sale on fair and reasonable terms and conditions to facilities owned by the Federal Government, public bodies, cooperatives, and privately owned companies. Is my understanding correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. My answer is that it is not necessary to appropriate a single cent to enable the Government to dispose of all the power it can create at the Denison Dam, in Texas and Oklahoma.

The Norfork Dam is in northern Arkansas. There is in existence a line to the Norfork Dam, and all the power that has been generated at Norfork, all the power that is being generated there, and all the power that can be generated there, is being disposed of and will be disposed of under a contract which still has 3 years to run. So the Government does not need to spend a single penny at Norfork to make its power available to Arkansas, Texas, and other surrounding States.

Mr. DONNELL. Summarizing the statements made by the Senator, am I correct in my understanding that it is his judgment and opinion, from the information at hand, that at neither of the two projects now in existence, the Denison Dam and the Norfork Dam, is it necessary to acquire further transmission lines or related facilities in order to make the power and energy generated at those projects available in wholesale quantities for sale on fair and reasonable terms and conditions to facilities owned by the Federal Government, public bodies, cooperatives, and privately owned companies? Do I correctly understand the Senator?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There is no need for the expenditure of a single mill.

Mr. DONNELL. In order to accomplish that result.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is true. I suppose I might be attacked for making that statement. There are REA cooperatives in Arkansas and in my State that are not connected with either of these dams, but they are connected with the existing power systems, and the power from those dams is being fed into the present integrated power system. Eleven companies are already joined together. They pump power into the system, measure it, and are paid for it. The power comes into the system from Denison or Norfork, covering that whole area. No one knows where the power goes. I am safe in saying that no one can disprove the statement that the power from those two dams going into the interrelated system in turn goes into the REA system throughout the State. One cannot distinguish electrical energy once it gets into a system.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. As I understand, what the Senator from Oklahoma has said with respect to the two dams which have been completed and are now in operation, namely, the Denison Dam and the Norfork Dam, will apply to all the dams when they are constructed. The 11 private utility companies have agreed, or are attempting to agree with the Government or with the power authority, to purchase all power produced at those dams for years to come. That plan is in contemplation on the part of the private utilities. It has not yet been consummated, but I believe the offer has been made.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The evidence so shows.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The evidence so shows. As I understand, that contemplates all the dams, the two existing dams and all the dams that will be constructed, as authorized by Congress.

That brings us back to the basic issue with which we are confronted. Objection is made on the part of the Southwestern Power Administration and on the part of those who favor public power over private power, that, of course, the private utilities will buy power to keep down competition, and to maintain a monopoly. The power companies contend that by buying the power they will make distribution of it free of any cost to the Government, and that it will not be necessary for the Government to invest $200,000,000 or more. The private utilities already have the distribution system. If it is not wholly adequate, it can be complemented as the demands require.

The opposing argument is that such a system gives private monopoly the benefit and advantage of cheap power produced by the Government at the taxpayers' expense, and that in the distribution of the power the private utilities make a profit as middlemen in the distribution of power generated at Government cost, and at the expense of the taxpayers.

The further contention is made that private utilities will not pass on to the ultimate consumer of the power any advantage which the private utilities gain by purchasing at wholesale the hydroelectric power produced by the Government.

Those are the arguments made. If I interpret section 5 of the statute correctly, I think a little more than the words "related facilities" is involved. I mention this point simply in passing, because I believe this section is sufficiently broad to authorize, and I believe it does authorize, the making of appropriations for transmission lines. I believe that is a correct statement of what the section does. However, I am not at all satisfied that under this section it was contemplated by the Congress, that steam plants would be built. I think the Senator from Arizona agrees with me that there is serious question whether the words "related facilities" are sufficient enough to authorize the construction of steam plants.

But with reference to transmission lines, let me point out that section 5 provides as follows:

> The electric power and energy generated at reservoir projects under the control of the War Department, and in the opinion of the Secretary of War not required in the operation of such projects, shall be delivered to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall transmit and dispose of such power and energy.

Of course, the power could be disposed of at the bus bar. At that point it could be turned over to private utilities or to cooperatives, or whoever cared to build transmission lines to the site of delivery at the bus bar. This governmental agency, the Southwestern Power Authority, could dispose of the electrical energy at wholesale there. If the act used only the word "dispose" at that point, certainly no transmission lines would have been contemplated. But when the act provides "transmit and dispose," it was certainly contemplated that some transmission lines would have to be built. So I think there is authority for the Congress to make whatever appropriations it believes it is necessary to make for the construction of transmission lines which may be required to carry the power from the project and to give the greatest service and benefit to the ultimate consumers. Of course, the act does not use exactly that language, but the language used, is, in my opinion, susceptible of that construction.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me, to permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Does not the Senator agree that two matters are involved? Not only is there involved the matter of getting the power to the ultimate consumers, but the proposition that where the Government or a private power company has an investment in two or more dams, by tying the output of the dams together by means of transmission lines, it is possible to improve the investment. In other words, if there is a dam on one river and, some distance away, a dam on another river, or perhaps at some distance down the same river, when the power is low at one dam it may be high at the other dam. By connecting the two dams with a transmission line it is possible to switch the power back and forth.

Of course, we must bear in mind that there are two kinds of power. One is prime power, which is the power that is generated and is available every minute of every hour of every day throughout the year. The other kind is what we call secondary or dump power. That is power which is not available every day of the year. It may be available for 6 months or 9 months of the year, largely dependent upon how much rain falls in the particular watershed from which comes the water which generates the power. If it is possible to connect the secondary power at one dam with the secondary power at another dam, the result will be to step up some of the secondary power to prime power, and thus greatly increase and improve the benefits from that dam, because we all realize that most consumers, both individuals and businesses, who buy power must have prime power, and a much greater return is obtained for prime power than for secondary or dump power.

If the Senator will permit me to make a further remark, let me say that it seems to me it is not a question of building transmission lines to carry power here or there. We must remember that the amendment provides only approximately $4,500,000 for transmission lines.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask the Senator to wait just a moment. Let me say that, as the bill now stands, the amount provided is $7,500,000.

Mr. HILL. Yes; but now I am speaking of transmission lines. I understand that the measure carries approximately $3,000,000 for feeder lines; but we have been speaking about transmission lines, and the bill provides approximately $4,500,000 for them. Those lines tie together the output of three dams.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There are only two dams.

Mr. HILL. I shall explain what I mean. There are two dams, the Norfork Dam and the Denison Dam, which the Government of the United States now owns. There is another dam, and it belongs to the State of Oklahoma. The Federal Government has either turned it back to the State of Oklahoma, or is about to do so. That dam is known as the Grand River Dam or the Pensacola Dam. That dam belongs to the State of Oklahoma. As I remember, it cost approximately $26,000,000. Of that amount, $14,000,000 was Federal money, money which came from the Federal Government. As I understand the situation, that $14,000,000 has not yet been paid back to the Federal Government.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. But the bonds are in existence and the State is paying interest on the bonds.

Mr. HILL. I appreciate that. However, the situation is that $14,000,000 of Federal funds went into that dam. I understand that my distinguished friend the Senator from Oklahoma considers the whole matter a conference proposition. If I am wrong, I wish to be corrected, of course. The Senator spoke yesterday, but I was not able to hear him then, because I had to attend a conference committee and also a meeting of the Committee on Education and Labor. I understand, however, that the Senator from Oklahoma spoke about the matter as a conference proposition.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. But that money does not cover the dams. It covers merely the transmission lines, because the money for the dams comes from flood-control appropriations, and the dams are built by the Army engineers.

Mr. HILL. But we are not speaking of that program. We are speaking now about the $7,500,000 and about tying together the output of dams which the Federal Government owns or in which the Federal Government has a great financial interest. I wish to say that as I read the hearings, it seems to me they show that by tying together the output of these three dams it will be possible to increase the monetary return from those dams by between 10 and 20 percent.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I cannot allow that statement to stand in the RECORD without being challenged, because now all the power—both dump power and prime power—which it is possible to create at the dams is being sold. So to tie them together would not create more power.

Mr. HILL. Yes; it would. Of course, they are selling the dump power. But when the dump power from two or more dams is combined, a certain amount of it becomes prime power, and a greater monetary return is obtained for prime power than for dump power.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They are doing that now.

Mr. HILL. But they are not doing it as they will be able to do when they combine the output of the three dams.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. But they are doing it now. If there are rains in Colorado, Kansas, and West Texas, the floods come into Oklahoma and Arkansas and reach the dams. When the floods reach the dams, all the gates in the dams are opened, and the dams generate their maximum amount of power and shoot it into the systems, and all of it is firm power.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oklahoma will yield further, let me say that the testimony of Mr. Davis, of the Oklahoma Light & Gas Co., I believe, was that by tying together the three dams it will be possible to increase the return from them approximately 10 percent. The testimony of Mr. Wright, who is the Administrator of the Southwest Power Administration, was that in his opinion it would increase the return, not 10 percent, but 20 percent.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thank the Senator.

Let us get down to the real issue before us. The $7,500,000 is a definite part of the $200,000,000 program, proposed by the Southwest Power Authority. The $200,000,000 plan has been formulated and submitted, and request was made for $23,000,000 of it to be appropriated now. I do not say that the $7,500,000 item cannot be disassociated from it; I am not prepared to say that. I have not been fully satisfied in my own mind that if we are not to carry out the $200,000,000 program we could dispense with the $7,500,000 item. Possibly we could dispense with part of it. If we make this expenditure as a part of the $200,000,000 program, then the next step we will be asked to take is to authorize the constuction of steam plants to firm up the power. That will come next. For anyone to say that it will be possible to spend $7,500,000 and stop there, is a statement which might be debatable. If the Government is going to obtain the maximum benefit from it, it may need to firm up the power by building steam plants. The next step after that is done is to build transmission lines to go into every community where the people wish to have public power.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield, to permit me to propound an inquiry to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator from Arkansas has referred to the formulation of a plan involving $200,000,000. Was that plan submitted to the Senate Appropriations Committee; and if so, by whom?

Mr. McCLELLAN. It was submitted to the House committee, I am not certain that it was submitted to the Senate committee. I have not read the Senate hearings, but I have read the House hearings. It was submitted by Mr. Douglas Wright, Administrator of the Southwestern Power Administration.

Mr. DONNELL. He is employed under the Department of the Interior, is he not?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes. I am endeavoring to give the whole picture. We are either going to build this gigantic power system, or we are not going to build it, and we should vote, I believe, with that fact in mind. We do not have to tie these dams together now, although it may be good business to tie them together later, assuming that the $200,000,000 program will not be carried out.

I wish to read what Mr. Wright said about this program with respect to the appropriation of $23,000,000. He spoke, as is set forth on page 53 of the hearings before the House Appropriations Committee.

> I think we have not asked for anything as shown on that map in red and previously described, that can be omitted and still secure a complete operating unit. If you omit any part of it the proper function will be seriously hindered. The question is, it seems to me, personally, that if you are going to appropriate any money for construction of transmission lines and related facilities you should either appropriate the amount requested to build the portions of the system that we have laid out, or you should give us no money for construction.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Was there a map furnished to the Appropriations Committee of the House by the Department of the Interior, showing generally the project involved in the $200,000,000 program?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. That is the same map as the one now hanging on the wall?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is a map just like the one now hanging on the wall.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Representative JOHNSON from Oklahoma, in response to the statement that the Congress should either give all the money or nothing at all, said:

> Let me say I am surprised that you take that position.

Then follow arguments back and forth. I read from page 54 of the hearings where Mr. Wright said:

> And this committee is going to know every year, because I am going to leave this map in the files of this committee, and I am going to come and present a similar map to this one every year, so that you will know I am not welshing on this one, and every member of this committee is going to have an exact duplicate of this map so that next year, when I come back here, if you see fit to give me this money, there are going to be green lines showing what is still under construction, and another color to show you what we are proposing to do next year.

In other words, Mr. President, the $23,000,000 requested was to be the beginning of a 20-year program which will require an estimated expenditure of $200,000,000 in order to build a power generating and distributing system.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a further inquiry?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Was the amount of $200,000,000 mentioned in the hearings before the House committee?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The amount is $202,000,000, to be exact.

Mr. DONNELL. Who mentioned that figure, if the Senator recalls?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall not attempt to say who the person was, but the figure as I have stated it is correct.

Mr. DONNELL. The best judgment of the representative of the Department of the Interior is that the entire project will cost about $200,000,000?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes; $200,000,000.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The plan is for a 20-year development program in that area.

There is one question with reference to which I should like to satisfy myself. The request for the $23,000,000 appropriation at this time is made on the basis of initiating a 20-year program. There is no mistake about that, according to my understanding. Is that the understanding of the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is my understanding; although I believe that the 20-year estimate will prove to have been considerably extended. The ones who are requesting the money want it to be provided to them much faster than over a 20-year period.

Mr. McCLELLAN. But the requested $23,000,000 is to start the program which will involve eventually more than $200,000,000.

Assuming that the Congress feels the program is too ambitious, that there is no need for it, and that we would be building up a public power empire to compete with and destroy private utilities in that area, here is my suggestion: Instead of going through the back door to drive the private enterprises out of business, if that is the plan, I feel that instead of building many duplicating lines and utilities we should merely create an authority to take over the power-generating systems just as did the Tennessee Valley Authority, pay a fair price for them, and establish a public power empire to provide the cheapest possible power which can be provided by a governmental agency. That would be the direct and honorable way to do it, if the purpose is to provide the cheapest power which could be produced. I believe that the two interests, namely, the public enterprise and the private enterprise, should operate without one destroying the other. I do not believe in destroying private enterprise. We can spend tax money and compete with and undersell any private enterprise. We all know that. Whether the power which is to be developed can be passed on through the private utilities, I am not prepared to say. I have been inclined to believe that it could be done.

Mr. President, I return to the project. If I can be satisfied that I would not be committing myself to vote for the $200,000,000 program, and if the program were rejected by the Congress the proposed expenditure would produce the necessary power and make the system a better one, I will vote for it. But I want to make it clear that I am now committing myself to a $200,000,000 program without having an opportunity to study it further, and understanding whether the final objective is to build a public power empire for the purpose of driving private enterprise out of business. I want to know more about it before I commit myself that far. However, I do believe that, under the proposal, there is authority for Congress to appropriate money to build transmission lines to whatever point may be determined, and to sell the power wholesale so as to obtain the best advantage.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I may suggest that at the present time lines are in existence to each of the dams and all the power developed is being sold. So it is not necessary to appropriate a single cent to extend more lines.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The line from Pensacola to Lake Catherine in Arkansas is a cooperative line, and approximately $1,600,000 of the proposed appropriation is to be used to buy that line.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That line is now owned by the Government. It is owned by the Defense Plant Corporation.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes; but it is proposed to buy it as a part of the Southwestern Power Administration.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Does the Southwestern Power Administration sell power from each individual dam, or is it sold just as though it were produced by one dam?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Southwestern Power Administration has a contract with the 11 companies which operate in that area. The contract will not expire until in June 1947. Under the contract all power generated is taken by the 11 companies to which I have referred and is redistributed throughout that area.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I understand that. But let us take, for example, the power generated by one dam at Norfork. As I understood the Senator from Alabama, if the power can be marketed through one outlet the power would be more firm than secondary. That might be some advantage from the dollars-and-cents point of view. I was wondering what the Senator would think of that.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think I have covered that, but I shall recapitulate briefly. Every kilowatt of power that can be developed at these 2 dams is being developed, and every kilowatt of power that is being developed is sold to the 11 companies.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I understand that. I do not think the Senator understood my point. Is there not a difference between selling power from three sources through one dam, and selling it at the individual dams?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I do not think there is any difference if they are selling all they can produce. The State of Arkansas takes all the power that can be developed at the Norfork Dam, and my State of Oklahoma and the State of Texas take all the power that can be developed at the Denison Dam. It is my contention that the Government is getting far more through the sale of power by selling it all than it could possibly get by selling merely the firm power. If they ever resort to selling firm power, they cannot make a contract and sell anything. There must be stand-by steam plants, and the private companies have stand-by plants.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Are the private companies now paying the same amount for the secondary power as for the firm power?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They take it all.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Is it at the same rate?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I understand it is at the same rate. They have this kind of an agreement; all the power is sold to these companies. Then, in case the dams run low and they want power, they buy it back from the existing companies to serve their customers. For instance, when the Grand River Dam became low, they had no power, and they had to call upon the private companies to sell them power, to be shot down over the lines to their customers.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Olahoma. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. With reference to the question which was asked as to the price paid by the power companies to the Southwest Power Administration for power, on page 674 of the hearings on the Interior Department appropriation bill appears this statement by the representative of the power companies:

> We pay for that power 5 mills per kilowatt-hour for all the firm power.
>
> We pay some 1½ to 2½ mills for the dump power, depending on the time of the year and the time of day at which it is bought.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is all covered by contract.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Before the Senator from Arkansas gets too far away, I want to break in on the Senator from Oklahoma with reference to the question of rates. Under our system of administration of power rates, what is a reasonable rate is determined either by the State commission or by the Federal Power Commission, depending on whether the power is intrastate or interstate.

Taking a broad picture, such as suggested to my mind, at least, by the senior Senator from Arkansas, if the private power companies took power from these dams, or from any source, so long as it was intrastate, the State commission would have power to determine what was a reasonable rate and what the conditions of transmission and delivery of power should be. If it were interstate, beyond the reach of a State commission, the determination of a reasonable rate would be made by the Federal Power Commission.

The power companies, either intrastate or interstate, are always subject to the powers of the State and the Federal authorities to regulate their rates.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me suggest that in my State the two main companies are tied into lines that furnish power in Arkansas, Kansas, Missouri, and Texas. So the power generated in my State is interstate power, and, being interstate power, the rates are covered entirely by the schedules filed with the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. REED. That would be the wholesale rate for delivery to the local distributing companies.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I was greatly impressed by the point made by the senior Senator from Arkansas to the effect that if it be true that the Federal Government is going to embark upon a $200,000,000 project, and if it be advantageous from the standpoint of the price of power to the consumer for it so to do, the advisable and honorable course, as the Senator put it, in substance, is for an authority to be created to acquire by purchase, which I take it means also by condemnation, the property of existing companies.

My inquiry of the Senator from Arkansas, or the Senator from Oklahoma, is whether or not that point was made in the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, and, if so, did the Department of the Interior make any answer to the proposition that was so clearly put forward by the Senator from Arkansas along that line?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have read most of the hearings before the House committee, but I have not read the Senate committee hearings, and cannot answer whether the question was directly put or not. But I would say to the Senator that it is my understanding that, of course, the Southwestern Power Administration, and possibly the Secretary of the Interior or the Interior Department, will contend it has no such intention. I do not think anyone is going to admit that the objective is to put the private power companies out of business.

Mr. DONNELL. But they do assert, I understand, that they intend to work out a plan involving an expenditure of approximately $200,000,000.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Very definitely, and they are going to come back year after year and show how much has been completed, and ask for so much more. That is what this presents to me.

Can we spend that much money, practically duplicating all the distribution systems now in existence? Can we do that and support it and back it up without actually placing in financial jeopardy the systems now in existence in those areas?

If there could be some line of demarcation and we could say that public power will be served in one area and a private enterprise can operate in another, without this conflict of competition, and so on, then the two might exist together. But if we put the private and the public together, and make the rates to the public so low that private utilities cannot compete, it will not be long before all power will be public. Public power authorities will be expanding, building more steam plants, making expenditures necessary to provide the capacity so as to meet the demand. That means that the Federal Government will be in the public power business. We might just as well admit, because that is a fact.

Mr. DONNELL. So far as the Senator is advised, has the Department of the Interior suggested any means by which the investment of a huge sum, such as $200,000,000, and the consequent operation of these facilities by the Government, could be so segregated in the operation as to permit the private enterprises still to exist?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I do not understand it has. Its contention is that of course we should provide competition for the private utilities, that that would bring the power rates down, and no doubt it will; and they can be brought down to such a point that the private utilities cannot survive. It could be done. If we are to continue to build, and build a power empire, we should support it and carry it through and give the people the cheapest power, not just try. The Senator knows we are going to spend money to undersell the private utilities, and give the people cheaper power, and that is why we are doing it, and if so we should say so and go about it in a direct way, as we did in the case of the TVA. TVA put the private utilities out of business or bought them. There is a public power enterprise in the Tennessee Valley, and if we want to do that in the southwest region we should go in the front door and say that is what we are doing, and do it and get it over with.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. I am sure the Senator from Arkansas knows that the rates, which may be reduced by competition if the Government builds plants, are already provided for by State regulatory bodies where they are intrastate, and where they are interstate they are provided for by Federal power. It is not necessary, then, to build a competing line to control rates.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The private utilities do have in a sense a monopoly, of course, but they are also regulated. Their rates are fixed, and when they make too much money they are required by regulatory bodies to make adjustments and make refunds to their customers.

I have no interest in any private utility, I own no stock in a private utility. I believe in the building of dams. I have supported all of them. I want to see the water resources of this Nation developed to their maximum usefulness for humanity.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Would not the Senator rather spend this money in building dams and getting the power developed than building power lines before the dams are even started?

Mr. McCLELLAN. That would be my preference, and the Senator knows I am doing everything I can to get the dams built on the streams of my State. I am most enthusiastic about developing these dams in order to get power. This is where the issue comes. As I said a few moments ago, when we get the power developed, if we let the private utilities have it at wholesale, we are charged with letting a monopoly have the benefit of what the Government has spent the taxpayers' money for, so they can make a profit from it. As I said, I had thought that we could sell to them where they had distribution facilities, but require them to pass the benefit on to the consumer. Year before last, when we had the 1944 flood-control bill up for consideration, having that in mind, I offered an amendment to this section, section 5, which was voted down. Mr. Wright in his testimony referred to it in the hearings before the House committee, and I shall take only a moment to read it. Senators will recall that we had up an amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] to section 5 of the Flood Control Act, which would have required this power to be wholesaled at the bus bar and it would have prevented the building of any transmission line anywhere. That amendment was defeated. Then I offered the following amendment:

It shall be stipulated in connection with any sale that any and all savings realized by the purchaser—

That was the private utilities—

shall be passed on under Federal regulations where no State regulation exists, to the consuming public.

What I was trying to do was to require that the saving be passed on to the ultimate consumer; that any benefit which arose from the sale of this electricity by reason of the Government having built the dam to generate the electricity should be passed on to the ultimate consumer. In other words, if it cost the private utility 5 mills a kilowatt to produce the electricity by steam or by any other means, and the Government could produce it and sell it to that power company for 3 mills per kilowatt, then the 2 mills saved would be passed on to the ultimate consumer. In other words, whatever saving resulted from the cheap power produced at the dam, instead of giving the private utility that profit I wanted it passed on to those who actually consumed the power.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I thank the Senator from Arkansas for his contribution to the debate. I yield now to the Senator from Kansas, who has been on his feet for some time. But let me say that I have only a few more sentences to add to my statement and I shall have concluded.

Mr. REED. I do not want to try the patience of the Senator from Oklahoma too much. But he has made such a magnificent presentation of the case that I wanted to supplement it with this suggestion: Let no member of this body labor under any illusions as to what we are going to do. If we make this $23,000,000 appropriation we are going ahead with a $200,000,000 program.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. What is the $23,000,000 the Senator referred to? I thought the amount involved here was $7,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me make a statement which will clarify that point. The administration asked for $23,000,000. The Bureau of the Budget approved $23,000,000. They went to the House and asked for $23,000,000. The House committee cut that down to a little over $3,000,000, but on the floor, and at the instance of the Speaker, it was raised to $7,500,000. So the bill as it comes from the House carries seven and a half million dollars. But, as I understand, the chairman of our subcommittee wants to put in the bill $23,000,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Oh, no.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is the point that keeps coming up. I should like to have that made clear.

Mr. HAYDEN. I want to make it clear. Does the Senator from Oklahoma know of a single Senator who is a member of the Senate Committee on Appropriations who advocated building any steam plants?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; I know of none.

Mr. HAYDEN. There was no such proposal. The argument was very firmly made throughout all the hearings by the committee that there was at the present time, in the opinion of the committee, no authority of law for building steam plants to firm up this power, and it was the judgment of the committee that if the power was to be firmed up by steam plants it should be done by appropriate legislation approved by the Congress. The issue here is, Shall three dams be connected together by a transmission line?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is exactly the point on which there is a difference of opinion here.

Mr. HAYDEN. No; there is no difference.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The senior Senator from Arkansas made the point, as I understood him, that if he thought that was all this item was meant to do, that he might be in favor of it.

Mr. HAYDEN. At the appropriate time I shall read to the Senate the words of the Speaker of the House in asking for $7,500,000. What I have just said is in substance what the Speaker said.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Does the Senator feel that if we appropriate $7,500,000 we shall then be committed to appropriate the rest of the money asked for?

Mr. HAYDEN. No. So far as the Appropriations Committee is concerned, not a member of it, to my knowledge, or to the knowledge of the Senator from Oklahoma, says that it would be a commitment to build steam plants or to go any further than to connect these three dams together with a transmission line. That is all there is to it. Furthermore, if that program is to be carried out, it shall be done by legislation reported by an appropriate committee and not on an appropriation bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Answering the argument made by the Senator from Arkansas, I will say that there is no excuse in the world to appropriate a single penny to connect the three dams, because they are now selling through existing lines all the power they can generate, and there will be no more dams completed—certainly not for a year, probably not for 2 or 3 years. So we will have all that time to work out a system, through legislation; and then if it is desired to connect these dams and go into the business of providing electric power, such an opportunity will be afforded. There is no excuse now to connect these dams together. They are selling all the power that is being generated, and the Government is getting more money for it than if it relied on firmed power.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The Senator controverts what I said earlier about tying these dams together.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me answer that. Senators will see on the map the city of Norfork. Yonder is Denison. The line that connects those two dams is over 500 miles long, and the testimony is that on a 300-mile line the line loss is 10 percent, and on a 500-mile line, while I do not know how much the loss would be, perhaps it would be 30 or 40 percent. There is no sense in doing such a thing. No businessman would do such a thing at the present time.

Mr. HILL. The testimony of Mr. R. K. Lane, who is president of the Public Service Co. of Oklahoma, a private power company, was that if these dams are tied in there would be at least a 10-percent increase resulting. As I said earlier, Mr. Wright, who is the Administrator of the Southwestern Power Administration, put the percentage increase as high as 20 percent. Mr. Lane quotes him as saying 25 percent, but in his own direct testimony he said 20 percent. So there we have both the private power company president and the head of the Southwestern Power Administration agreeing that by tying these dams in, a great improvement will be made.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On the theory that they have no other connection that might be true. If there were only these two power dams and if electricity were to be distributed from these power dams, that might be true. But that is not true. All the power that is being developed is being sold. They are making more money than they could make if they tied them together. They are selling 100 percent of the electricity. That cannot be improved upon.

Mr. HILL. As I explained before, they may be selling electricity, but there is a vast difference between whether they are selling it as secondary electricity or whether they are selling it as prime electricity because there is so much more paid for prime electricity—at least three times as much, as the Senator from Arkansas suggests, as is paid for secondary electricity.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. All these suggestions and interruptions and questions and answers convince me that we do not have any power experts on the floor of the United States Senate. That being true, it is evident to me at least that this matter should not be acted on now. Let us strike all this money out of the bill because it is not necessary. Let the matter go over until the next Congress convenes. Then let a bill be prepared dealing with the Southwestern Power Administration, let it be brought to Congress and referred to the proper committees, and let hearings be held on it. Get the best experts that can be had in the world, bring them before the committees, and then let the committees submit reports, to which I would give credence and respect. That is my position in this matter. At the present time there is no need for this expenditure. We might make a mistake in expending this money.

Mr. President, the people of my section of the country are now getting cheap rates. They cannot get cheaper rates, I do not care what is done. A billion dollars can be spent in Oklahoma and Arkansas and the people there will not get cheaper rates. I am a subscriber to an REA cooperative. I am paying 10 mills a kilowatt for the first few kilowatts. If I were a large consumer the cost would be less per kilowatt. If the Government were to make this electricity and give it to my cooperative, that cooperative still could not sell it to me for very much less than I now pay, because there are administrative expenses which must be met. We have storms and sleet and the lines are broken down. They have to be repaired. It takes money to do that.

Mr. President, in conclusion let me show how cheaply the people are getting their power in Arkansas and Oklahoma. In Arkansas there are, I think, about 30 electric cooperatives. They buy power from the Arkansas Power & Light Co. The Arkansas Power & Light Co. in turn buys a large part of it from Norfork. Arkansas takes all the power that is produced at Norfork, which is transmitted to the Arkansas Power & Light Co. Then in turn that company sells to the 29 or 30 REA's in Arkansas. Last year the total bill to all the REA's in Arkansas amounted to $103,543. That is the total amount that all of the REA's paid to the power company in Arkansas for all the power they consumed last year. That is at the rate of 5.7 mills per kilowatt. That is how cheaply the REA's in Arkansas are getting their power. They get it for less than 6 mills per kilowatt.

Let us compare that with the TVA. If the Arkansas REA's were getting their power from TVA they would have to pay $119,543 for the same amount of power. The rate would have been 6.6 mills. So in Arkansas under this system the REA's are getting their power for a mill less than it costs in the Tennessee Valley, according to this computation.

Mr. President, it can be seen that the REA's in Arkansas are getting cheaper power than they would from the TVA. If the Government were to produce the power and give it to them, they still would not get the power for nothing. The REA's must pay interest to the Government on its investment. They must have administrators, linemen, supervisors, and employees to read the meters. If a destructive storm occurs, they must rebuild. That costs money. They are now getting as cheap electricity as they can ever hope to get. In some sections of the country power cannot be produced for the rate at which it is being sold in Arkansas. In my State the rate is a little higher. It is between 6 and 7 mills to the REA's. That is a little higher than the rate in Arkansas. But even in my State the private companies are charging the REA's only about $450 a year over-all more than the SPA rate which has been filed with the Federal Power Commission. So if we spend $200,000,000, or $23,000,000, and the REA's in my State have to pay the rate filed with the Federal Power Commission, the 23 cooperatives can save about $450 a year.

Let me recapitulate. There is no excuse today to appropriate a single dollar. All the power that can be generated is being sold, and can be sold for the next 3 years. In the future, as we build more dams, the Congress will be here and we can develop our policy. There is no policy now. The only policy is found in one section of the Flood Control Act.

Mr. President, I shall vote against the appropriation of any money at this time, in the hope that by this time next year the proper committee will investigate this matter and report a bill declaring a policy. If the policy should be to go into the power business on a grand scale, or any scale, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I shall go along with the deliberate opinion of the Congress, with this reservation: If the Congress decides to go into the public power business, serving power to all the people of the United States, instead of building competing lines in our section at a cost of $200,000,000 I shall favor the appropriation of money to take over existing lines. We can get them for half what they would cost to build now. Some of them have been there quite a while. Old things are cheaper than new things. So if we wish to go into the power business, why not take over the existing system and operate it. I shall vote against any appropriation for the purpose contemplated by this provision. It is not necessary. No one would be benefited by appropriating any money.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MOORE. I do not wish to try to add to what my colleague has contributed in his discussion of this question. I think he has covered it thoroughly. Certainly his analysis has made it perfectly plain—especially that portion of it which has to do with the testimony of Senators on the fine points which are raised. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] seems to hold that if we could have this appropriation with which to build transmission lines we could firm up, as he calls it, sufficient power to make the investment profitable.

My colleague has shown very definitely that we have a 100-percent market for the power which is being developed at the dams to which reference has been made. We do not need to spend a cent.

From the discussion here today, yesterday, and the day before with reference to power, it is perfectly apparent to me that the question before the people today is whether private enterprise in the production and distribution of power is to remain in existence, or whether we are going over completely to public power. That is the question presented today by the Senator from Nevada [Mr.

McCARRAN] in connection with the California project. I believe that the two projects are very similar. From the discussion of the Southwestern Power Administration the only difference I can see between the two projects is that there is no law which authorizes the expenditure of money for the Southwestern project.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question with respect to rates?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I happened to be reading the record of the House debate. Mr. RANKIN, a Representative from the State of Mississippi, who I think everyone knows is a long-time expert on rates, stated, on page 5135 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for May 16:

> In 1944 the overcharges for electricity in the State of Arkansas were $11,086,113, according to the TVA rates. According to the Bonneville rates, the overcharges were $10,920,000, and $12,997,798, according to the Ontario rates.

He evidently means that our rates are substantially higher than those of the TVA. How does the Senator reconcile that with his statement that our rates are cheaper than the TVA rates? I wonder what the explanation is.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I thought I made it clear that I did not compile these figures. They are not the result of my research. I further stated that I did not believe that the responsible head of a power company would compile figures and place them before the committee unless they were accurate. If they are not accurate, it is the fault of the official who presented this set of figures to the Appropriations Committee. This chart was prepared by the Arkansas Power & Light Co. It is entitled "Comparison of Billing of Present Rate With Rates Charged by TVA, and Proposed Rates of the Southwest Power Authority for the 12-Month Period Ended March 1946."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. I think Mr. RANKIN was speaking of the over-all rate paid by the public generally in one State and in another. What the Senator from Oklahoma is discussing is a statement of the wholesale cost of power to a rural electrical cooperative in Arkansas.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I did not understand. Are those the figures for REA rates?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I think another element enters into the question. I do not doubt that the figures which both Senators have cited are correct. The TVA has sold power to the REA's for a great many more purposes than those for which private companies in Arkansas and Oklahoma have sold power to the REA's. In the contracts with REA cooperatives in Arkansas and Oklahoma there is a very restrictive clause which limits the use of power sold to REA's strictly to farm purposes, so to speak, or domestic purposes, whereas we realize that the TVA, which takes the place of private power companies, sells power to farm cooperatives not only for home and farm purposes, but also for operating cotton gins, rice pumps, mills, and alfalfa dehydrating plants. So different factors enter into the rates of the TVA from those which enter into the rates of private power companies in Arkansas and Oklahoma. I think that is where the difference lies.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. In Arkansas an REA cooperative cannot sell power to a gin.

Mr. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Or to a lumber mill.

Mr. HILL. As the Senator knows, in that connection Mr. Ellis and a number of other witnesses representing REA cooperatives appeared before the subcommittee urging this very appropriation, because they said they could not obtain power for these various uses.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, it is now half past 4. I continue to hope that we may obtain a vote on the two remaining amendments to the bill. The pending amendment relates to the Central Valley project in California, and appears on page 53 of the bill. I have offered a substitute for the committee amendment.

The amendment which the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] has been discussing appears on page 100 of the bill. If there are no more speeches to be made, I should like to suggest the absence of a quorum and see if we cannot have a yea and nay vote on these two questions and dispose of them tonight.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I wish to be sure that I understand the situation. What the Senator is asking is a vote upon his amendment, which is in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the pending question before the Senate. As soon as that is disposed of, I think we should vote upon the remaining amendment, on page 100.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], my colleague, is absent from the Senate on public business. He requests that he be excused until July 2.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, consent of the Senate is granted.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 6335) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word in connection with these amendments. I have heard a great deal in the Senate and elsewhere about economy. I have heard a great deal in the Senate about protecting private enterprise. I have listened in the Appropriations Committee to the same type of discussion. Now we have these two amendments or two issues at stake. One of them has been outlined to us by the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], and the other has been outlined to us by the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. Both issues are very plain. Senators who really are in favor of economy, who really believe in private enterprise, and who are not in favor of the complete socialization of the electric industry, have only one choice in respect to their vote on this issue. Senators who do not believe in private enterprise, who do not believe in economy, and who are in favor of the gradual socialization of industrial enterprises in the United States will vote for the amendments. That is the issue.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Green	Murdock
Andrews	Gurney	Murray
Austin	Hart	O'Daniel
Ball	Hatch	O'Mahoney
Barkley	Hawkes	Overton
Bridges	Hayden	Pepper
Brooks	Hickenlooper	Reed
Buck	Hill	Revercomb
Burch	Hoey	Robertson
Butler	Huffman	Russell
Byrd	Johnson, Colo.	Saltonstall
Capper	Kilgore	Stewart
Carville	Knowland	Swift
Chavez	La Follette	Taft
Cordon	Lucas	Taylor
Donnell	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Downey	McClellan	Tobey
Eastland	McKellar	Tunnell
Ellender	McMahon	Wagner
Ferguson	Magnuson	Walsh
Fulbright	Mead	White
George	Millikin	Wiley
Gossett	Moore	Willis

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BRIDGES. Is it correct that on the first amendment, which is the Hayden amendment, a vote of "nay" will be a vote against the Hayden amendment and for sustaining private enterprise and for economy?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, let me say that, so far as the Hayden amendment is concerned, it is in opposition to private monopoly.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I should like to make one statement. In the Senate Appropriations Committee, both the subcommittee and the full committee made a careful study of this matter. I hope the Senate will sustain its Appropriations Committee. If it does so, the Senate will vote against approval of the Hayden amendment.

Mr. CORDON and Mr. KNOWLAND addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon, who first addressed the Chair, is recognized.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I desire to make a short statement before the vote is taken. I understand that the first vote will be on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], which amendment authorizes the building of certain transmission lines from the power plants in California as far south as Sacramento.

Mr. President, I recognize the force of the arguments which have been made here, and particularly those going to the proposition that the time has now come for the Congress to reexamine the whole problem of the production, transmission, and sale of electric power by the United States Government, and in the light of that examination to make definite determination as to what policy should be followed. I think that should be done, and done without delay.

However, so far as the Central Valley question is concerned, my view is that were it not for the fact that, so far as I can determine, a decision has been made by the people of California with reference to what they want in the premises, I should oppose the amendment of the Senator from Arizona. But it has been asserted here that both Members of this body from the State of California favor the Senator's amendment, that the Legislature of California has passed upon the whole program, including the portion now under consideration, and has approved it, and that the Governor of California has signified his wholehearted approval, not only of that part of the program, but even of additional funds for a more ambitious program. Recently the Governor of California received the nomination of both major parties in the State of California, as we have been advised by the press, and unquestionably, and to my own personal knowledge, his views with reference to this improvement were well known in California.

So as I view the Central Valley picture, the State of California and the people of California have decided the question insofar as they can decide it. Because I believe wholeheartedly in State sovereignty and the right of the people of a State to determine for themselves what shall be done within their State, and in the light of the fact that they seem to have made that determination with reference to the Central Valley project, I shall vote for the amendment, although in committee—and I wish my position to be perfectly clear in the matter—I voted to cut out the appropriation for the transmission lines. But in the face of the uncontroverted evidence regarding the position which the people of California take and my belief that they have a right to determine the matter for themselves, I shall vote in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Arizona.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the matter inserted by the committee amendment beginning with the word "Shasta", in line 25, page 52, and ending with the amount "$20,836,670", in line 5, page 53, it is proposed to insert the following: "and substations, $4,572,000, including Shasta to Delta switchyards via Oroville and Sacramento, 230 kilovolt, Shasta to Delta switchyards (West Side lines), 230 kilovolt; Keswick to Sacramento, 115 kilovolt; Contra Costa power distribution system, miscellaneous transmission, feeder lines and facilities, and substations; in all, $25,000,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRIDGES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BURCH], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senators from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY and Mr. MYERS], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MITCHELL], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] are detained on public business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] is absent on official business at one of the Government departments.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is absent on official business, attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State. He has a general pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

I also announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is paired on this question with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Maryland would vote "nay," and the Senator from Montana would vote "yea."

I further announce that if present and voting, the Senators from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY and Mr. MYERS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MITCHELL], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] would vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent on official business, attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State. He has a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] are absent on official business. The Senator from Nebraska would vote "nay" if present.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], who would vote "yea" if present, has a pair on this question with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], who would vote "nay."

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] is unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—36

Aiken	Hayden	Murdock
Andrews	Hill	Murray

So Mr. HAYDEN's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. I move that the motion be laid on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, informed the Senate that the House of Representatives having proceeded to consider the bill (S. 524) to provide for one national cemetery in every State and Territory and such other national cemeteries in the States, Territories, and possessions as may be needed for the burial of war veterans, it was Resolved, That the enacting clause of said bill be stricken out.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be absent from the Senate from tonight until Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave is granted.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 6335) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 52, beginning in line 22, to strike out the language beginning with the words "Shasta to Oroville" and ending in line 25 with "$10,840,120."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, a correction must be made in the committee language on page 52, in line 21. I send forward an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 52, at the end of line 21, it is proposed to strike out the word "line" and insert "lines."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. The total amounts for Reclamation Service must also be corrected.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The correction will be made by the clerk.

Mr. HAYDEN. The next committee amendment to be considered is on page 100, after line 14.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 100, after line 14, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Under the heading "Southwestern Power Administration," on page 100, after line 14, it is proposed to strike out:

Construction: For construction of transmission lines, substations, and appurtenant facilities, and administrative expenses connected therewith; purchase (not to exceed ten in the fiscal year 1947), hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger automobiles; and printing and binding; $7,500,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. On this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll, and called Mr. AIKEN's name.

Mr. AIKEN. May we have that question made clear? As I understand it, a vote "nay" will be against the committee amendment, and in favor of the appropriation for the construction as provided for in the amendment. Am I correct?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. AIKEN. Then I vote "nay."

Mr. McCLELLAN. Before we vote on this amendment, I desire to get clarification. I should like to ask the able Senator from Nevada a question.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. May we have order?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Is the proposed appropriation of $7,500,000 for the purpose of building a line from Norfork down to connect with the Ark-La and then from Markham's Ferry on down to connect with Denison?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is correct, except that it is also proposed to take over the Ark-La line between the two points indicated by the Senator. The line belongs now to the Federal Government. It is like taking money out of one pocket and putting it in another. But the money has to be appropriated. Of the 7½ million, about 2½ million are involved in taking over that Ark-La line.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In other words, this line is already owned by the Government. It is largely a matter of transfer?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. From one agency to another?

Mr. HAYDEN. As a bookkeeping transfer of the 7½ million appropriated, it takes about 2½ million to do that.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thought the item was $1,600,000 and some dollars for the purchase of this line.

Mr. HAYDEN. Perhaps the Senator is correct. My recollection was that it was what I stated, but the clerk of the committee tells me the Senator is nearer right than I am.

Mr. McCLELLAN. All I want to get clear in my mind before voting is one thing. There has been some confusion in my mind because $23,000,000 was asked for and then the House committee allowed about $3,000,000, and that has been increased to $7,500,000. I wish to determine, if I can, just what that money is to be spent for. As I understand, it is to be spent for the connection of these projects as indicated by the large green line on the map.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Is there any other purpose?

Mr. HAYDEN. There may be some small feeder lines. The statement after this was:

	Budget estimates	Bill as passed by House
4. Markham Ferry-Lake Catherine line, 194 miles	$1,633,880	$1,352,415
5. Markham Ferry substation, 80,000 kilovolt-amperes	477,560	477,560
6. Lake Catherine substation, 100,000 kilovolt-amperes	573,240	----------
7. Markham Ferry-Tulsa line, 45 miles	378,880	378,880
8. Tulsa substation, 100,000 kilovolt-amperes	630,020	----------

Mr. McCLELLAN. I think it is as represented on this map. That is what I wanted to be clear about.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the roll call had commenced and the Senator from Vermont had voted.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I yielded a few moments ago in order that a quorum might be called and the other amendment might be voted on. It was the understanding that I was to have the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well, then. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator may proceed as long as he wishes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I do not desire to have the floor by unanimous consent. If I am not entitled to it, I do not want it. I was on my feet asking for recognition at all times. If I am not entitled to the floor, I do not want it, and I do not want any special favors to get it.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that after the vote on the other amendment——

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Just a moment. After the vote on the other amendment, the roll call started on the pending amendment. However, the Chair recalls that before the vote was had on the first amendment, the Senator from Arkansas was about to speak, and he did not ask for recognition at that time. The Chair did not know he intended to speak on the pending amendment. The Senator from Arkansas can speak by unanimous consent, if it is not objected to.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I shall not ask unanimous consent.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll call had begun, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] had responded.

Mr. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Arkansas be permitted to speak.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I did not care to consume a great deal of time. I wanted to say for the RECORD that as the able Senator from Arizona well remembers, when I had the floor, he wanted to make a point that a quorum was not present. I desired to make some remarks on the pending amendment, and I yielded so that he might do so, and get a quorum, and have a roll-call vote on the amendment which has just been disposed of. Then I wanted to make some brief remarks before a final vote on the pending amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thank the Chair. I desired to clarify just what these appropriations were for, because the request was for $23,000,000, and those making the request said they had to have all of that amount.

I have always believed that these projects should be connected. I am not an electrical engineer, and I do not know just how much value there is in it, but I thought they should be connected, and I still feel that way about it. I am willing to vote for an appropriation to have that done, but I want to make the record as clear and as positive and unequivocal as I can, and that is why I brought up this issue this afternoon. I am unwilling by this vote to commit myself to this gigantic program without having an opportunity to study and know more about it.

I think possibly this appropriation can be made and these projects tied together, if we stop there, without it being a waste of Federal funds, and it may improve the system. To that extent I do not agree with the Senator from Massachusetts when he says that we are either voting completely on one side of the issue with respect to public power and economy, or are voting against it. I do not agree with that. I do agree with him that if we are going to build this tremendous transmission system and make it absolutely competitive with private enterprise, it can be carried on with the purpose and objective of destroying private enterprise, and that is where I draw the line. I am not ready to go that far. I am unwilling to commit myself to this huge program and plan that has been submitted until I can see further into it. So far as merely making an appropriation to tie the projects together is concerned, I am willing to have that done.

Mr. President, in that connection, I believe there is only one objection to doing it now. I think this is an inopportune time. I do not want to vote against doing something which I think ultimately should be done, but the reason why this is an inopportune time to do it is that there is at present a critical shortage of material that will be used in the building of the lines. That material is today needed by consumers, or would-be consumers, who are seeking power connections so that they can get rural electrification and get service into their homes. We may deprive some of them, may be doing them some injustice, by building this line at this time, or until such time as more materials may be available.

If I vote for this appropriation, I want it known by everyone interested now and in the future that I am merely voting to connect these projects, and not for a program to expand this activity with destructive intent so far as it affects private enterprise.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. I think the best evidence as to what the amendment means is the statement of its author, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Mr. RAYBURN, and I should like to quote very briefly his remarks, if the Senator will permit me. The Speaker said, when he offered the amendment on the floor of the House:

> The Government owns or controls three dams that generate power. I am simply asking this committee to give enough money in addition to the $3,198,000 to tie these three dams together, which you would do, I am sure, if they belonged to you; which I would do, or want to do, if they belonged to me; and which I think the Government ought to be allowed to do.
> There is a question about the Grand River Dam. It appears that that is going back to the State of Oklahoma, but the Government has, as an estimate, something like thirteen or fourteen million dollars in that dam.
>
> Even though the State of Oklahoma is to take over that dam, talking to the Governor of that State this week, he wants it tied in with the Denison Dam and with the Norfork Dam. Whether or not this power is distributed by the Government through an administration is one thing; whether or not they continue to sell it to the power companies is another thing. The great Southwest does not have too much power, even with the power that the power companies themselves can generate and the power that may be generated at these three dams. Therefore, my proposal is not to go out and compete with anybody in building any more transmission lines at this time because some transmission lines are provided in this committee report. I simply want to do the thing I think anyone would do if they controlled these dams, and that is to tie them together so that a greater proportion of the power may be distributed throughout that great area.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHITE. As I understand, the yeas and nays were ordered, the call of the roll was begun, and one Senator at least had responded to his name. I understand that by unanimous consent the Senator from Arkansas was permitted to speak.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. Did the unanimous consent comprehend or apply to any other Senator than the Senator from Arkansas?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. It did not.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think we clearly violated the rule in the case of the Senator from Arkansas, and that a request even by unanimous consent that he be permitted to speak should not have been entertained by the Chair. I think it is so important that when a roll call is started it shall proceed to its termination, that I shall object to any speeches or any other business being transacted by any other Member of the Senate until this roll call is completed.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President——

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate. When I am on my feet and asking for recognition, after I yielded in order to expedite the termination of the discussion, I do not feel that the implication is justified that I am violating any rule of the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. I am not undertaking to take from his feet the Senator from Arkansas. I am merely serving notice that I think the permission granted the Senator was in violation of the rules of the Senate, and that the unanimous consent request should not have been entertained by the Chair. I am merely giving notice that I shall object to any other Senator speaking until the conclusion of the roll call.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, so far as I know——

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in order that the Senator from Maine may be set right respecting this matter I will say that I happen to have played a part in the situation. The Senator from Arkansas was on his feet and was ready to make some remarks when the Senator from Arizona, following the Senator's expression that he wanted a roll call, made the suggestion of the absence of a quorum. I then suggested to the Senator from Arkansas that he defer until the roll was called, and he was on his feet at that time, and it was I who addressed the remarks to him suggesting that he defer his remarks until the roll had been called. He should have been recognized immediately after the roll was called.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think the proper procedure was for the call of the roll to have been concluded, and then if the Senator from Arkansas or any other Senator wanted to speak in explanation of his vote he could be recognized for that purpose. But unless we are going to insist upon this basic rule of the Senate that roll calls ordered and begun shall not be interrupted, we will have this thing happen over and over again, and we will never be sure, when a roll call is started, that after 10 or a dozen names have been called, some Senator will not want to discuss the merits of the matter upon which the vote is being had. I think it is so unsound a practice, I must voice my protest.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in conclusion and then I shall yield the floor. I wish to say that when a Senator is on his feet seeking recognition and the Chair orders a roll call, that is the Chair's error, although it is unintentional, but that sometimes occurs. I have never known it to have occurred before that when only one name was called, and a Senator was on his feet and had called that fact to the attention of the Chair, that the Senator was obliged to receive unanimous consent to proceed. If that is the rule I will of course observe it. So far as I know I did not violate it. I do not seek to do so now. I have tried to cooperate and to expedite consideration of this measure to a vote. I am now willing to yield the floor, but I want to serve warning that other Senators must also observe the rule. When I am interested in some vital measure, then I shall avail myself of the privilege of invoking the rule if any Senator shall undertake to violate it. At this time I do not think I ought to be charged with having violated a rule of the Senate.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Due to the peculiar situation with which we are now confronted, let me ask if it is not a fact that in order to vote against the appropriation it is necessary to vote "yea" on the pending question?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct. A vote "yea" would be a vote to sustain the committee amendment. A vote "nay" would be to reject the committee amendment, and leave the appropriation as it is, as passed by the House.

The clerk will resume the call of the roll.

The legislative clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. BRIDGES (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and will vote. I vote "aye."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BURCH], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senators from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY and Mr. MYERS], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MITCHELL], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] are detained on public business.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is absent on official business, attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State. He has a general pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

I also announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is paired on this question with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Maryland would vote "yea," and the Senator from Montana would vote "nay."

I announce that, if present and voting, the Senators from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY and Mr. MYERS], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MITCHELL], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] would vote "nay."

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent on official business, attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State. He has a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] are absent on official business. The Senator from Nebraska would vote "yea" if present.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], who would vote "nay" if present, has a pair on this question with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], who would vote "yea."

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] is unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 36, as follows:

So the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, when I invoked the point of order, which was of course a very clear point of order, I did not know that the Senator from Arkansas had been on his feet and had been demanding recognition, and as soon as I was advised of the substance of the statement made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] I immediately asked unanimous consent that the Senator from Arkansas might proceed with the discussion of his views on this matter. I merely wanted to make that statement. However, Mr. President, I think it most unfortunate that a roll call be interrupted in order to permit further speeches on any question. But in the circumstances I was glad to make the request for unanimous consent, and had I known the circumstances I perhaps would not have invoked the rule of the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, may I say a word? I think I made it clear—I endeavored to—that I was not trying to cut off the Senator from Arkansas, and that I was content to remain quiet and allow the unanimous-consent request, so as it applied to him, to be respected. I simply voiced my protest against any further violation or departures from the rule.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, to restore the language as it was when it came from the Bureau of the Budget it is necessary to insert the words "and acquisition" after the word "construction" and before the preposition "of", in line 15 on page 100. It was contemplated that the rural electrification line that already belongs to the Government be transferred to this Authority.

I now move to insert, after the word "construction", the words "and acquisition", in line 15 on page 100.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Then there was another Budget provision in these words:

Without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes; including temporary employment of organizations by contract or otherwise without regard to the Classification Act of 1923 as amended.

The idea is that this Authority wants to do just as does the Corps of Engineers, employ engineers by contract to aid in the work. This is a customary provision in construction work. That language was included in the presentation by the Bureau of the Budget. I send that amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 100, line 17, after the word "therewith", it is proposed to insert the following: "Without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes; including temporary employment of organizations by contract or otherwise without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is not the amendment legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no question about it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, returning to page 20 of the bill, under the item "Acquisition of Lands for Indian Tribes," the bill provides an appropriation of $950,000, but also includes the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of the sum herein appropriated shall be used for the acquisition of land within the States of Arizona, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, and Wyoming outside of the boundaries of existing reservations.

I should like to offer an amendment including the State of Washington.

Mr. HAYDEN. The bill is open to amendment. The Senator may offer his amendment.

Mr. MAGNUSON. On page 20, line 25, after the name "Oregon" I offer an amendment, to insert the name "Washington."

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The name "Oregon" has been stricken from the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator's amendment would come after the name "New Mexico."

Mr. MAGNUSON. My amendment is, after the name "New Mexico" in line 25, on page 20, to insert the name "Washington."

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in order that the RECORD may be clear, the name "Oregon" was stricken, but it was inserted, together with "Nevada" in another amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is correct.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a letter explaining my position.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPUBLIC, WASH., June 10, 1946.

Senator HUGH B. MITCHELL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MITCHELL: I have sent you a telegram today, joined in by the chairman of the public lands committee of the County Commissioners Association of the State and the president of the Ferry County Livestock Association. You will undoubtedly receive one from the chairman of the board of county commissioners.

The claim of the Indian department that they only repurchase allotments is absolutely false, and the records in the county assessor's office and the county auditor's office in this county show that 75 percent of all property allotted for use of the Colville Tribe in Ferry County, Wash., during the last 4 years has been deeded land acquired on the reservation by people other than Indians at the time while the same was open for purchase and homesteads, and serious damage has been done to the tax structure. As they take this off of the tax rolls, and their purchases have been in all cases from persons other than Indians who have legally acquired this land, and have been paying taxes on it under the Federal Constitution, being clause 17 of section 8, article I, the Federal Government of the United States is only allowed to purchase an area of 10 miles square for capital purposes and land for arsenals and matters pertaining to defense. We feel that the Constitution is still binding upon us and that we should be entitled to protection, and by reason of the various bureaus disregarding the object set out in the Federal Constitution, and not having obtained the consent of the States to these purchases, we feel that they are not entitled to make the same.

We further feel that it is only a question of a short time until the Colville Indians will follow in the footsteps of the Klamath Indians and liquidate their reservation. The sentiment is growing very fast. In fact, I have been asked by a number of Indians to draft a bill for them, and therefore I think now is the time for the Government to stop the use of the money belonging to the Indians to purchase additional land instead of distributing same to the Indians who are entitled to this money as members of the tribe. Not only is an injustice being done to the local tax structure of the various counties, but to the Indians themselves by giving the Bureau the right to hold money belonging to the Indians for purchasing lands. For it is only a question of time, if the tribe is liquidated, for the Government to have to pay back to the Indians their money which is being used, and they will have to do this out of Government funds, so the whole thing is an artificial economy and should be stopped.

Very truly yours,

OSEE W. NOBLE.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, in connection with this particular bill we have just witnessed a very sorry spectacle. The bill is the worst money grab the Senate has enacted for a long time. The House passed a bill cutting down the Budget estimates, and making appropriations of $179,426,846. We have restored probably $155,000,000 or more. We have deliberately taken a slap at private enterprise and at economy. We have moved toward the socialization of the electrical industry all along the line. I should like to see a yea-and-nay vote on the bill. Let us put Senators on record. All we have had is lip service to economy, lip service to private enterprise, and lip service against socialization of business and industry.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRIDGES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], who would vote as I intend to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], who would vote as I have voted, and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senators from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY and Mr. MYERS], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MITCHELL], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] are detained on public business.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is absent on official business, attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State. He has a general pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

I announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senators from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY and Mr. MYERS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MITCHELL], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] would vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent on official business, attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State. He has a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] are absent on official business. The Senator from Nebraska would vote "nay" if present.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] would vote "yea" if present.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] are necessarily detained.

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 19, as follows:

So the bill (H. R. 6335) was passed.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Interior Department appropriation bill may be printed with the Senate amendments numbered.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I point out to the Senate that the 19 "nay" votes on this bill represent more votes against an appropriation bill than there have been against any appropriation bill during my service of 10 years in the Senate. That vote represents a protest registered against a money-grabbing type of bill which is a slap at economy and free enterprise.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. Why does not the Senator say it is also communistic?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let us get on to something else.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

The motion was agreed to; and the Acting President pro tempore appointed Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. GREEN, Mr. GURNEY, Mr. BALL, and Mr. CORDON conferees on the part of the Senate.

TITLE TO LANDS BENEATH TIDEWATERS AND NAVIGABLE WATERS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I realize that because of the condition of the calendar of the Senate the motion which I should like to make at this time would not have the approval of the leadership.

There is pending on the calendar what to my mind is a very important measure. I refer to House Joint Resolution 225, generally known as the submerged land bill. There is a call from all over the country for the consideration of this measure by the Senate. Telegrams are coming to me daily and people are calling on me frequently, asking me to bring the joint resolution, which I had the privilege of reporting from the Committee on the Judiciary, before the Senate for consideration. I realize that the importance of appropriation bills now pending is exceedingly high. Therefore, I shall not at this time try to bring up the joint resolution; but I wish the Senate to know that as soon as the appropriation bills are disposed of, I shall make an attempt to bring the House joint resolution before the Senate for consideration.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], who is away on official business, be excused from attending the Senate during his absence. I neglected to make this request heretofore, and therefore make it now to apply retroactively.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request is granted.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, some time ago the President of the United State appointed an Evaluation Commission to attend the atomic bomb tests in the Pacific. Those tests will be held during the first part of July. As a member of the President's Evaluation Commission, I find it necessary to leave Washington not later than the coming Saturday. That is the latest possible time that I and other members of the Commission will be able to leave, in order to be present at the tests. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that I may be excused from attendance on the sessions of the Senate after tomorrow, until the mission to which we have been appointed has been completed.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, consent of the Senate is granted.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico has just requested leave of absence beginning on Saturday, because of appointment on the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the atomic bomb experiment in the Pacific. I, too, am a member of that Commission, and I desire to make the same request which he has made, namely, that after the session tomorrow I may be excused from attendance on the sessions of the Senate until my mission with that body has been completed.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, consent of the Senate is granted.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the following bills of the Senate:

S. 2141. An act to amend the act entitled "An act for the creation of an American Battle Monuments Commission to erect suitable memorials commemorating the services of the American Soldier in Europe, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1923, as amended, in order to extend the Commission's authority to all areas in which our armed forces have operated during World War II, and for other purposes"; and

S. 2200. An act to amend the act approved July 3, 1943, entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of claims for damage to or loss or destruction of property or personal injury or death caused by military personnel or civilian employees, or otherwise incident to activities, of the War Department or of the Army."

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5990) making appropriations for the Government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. COFFEE, Mr. GARY, Mr. FLOOD, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama, Mr. STEFAN, Mr. HORAN, and Mr. CANFIELD were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Acting President pro tempore:

H. R. 2315. An act for the relief of Adele Nahas;

H. R. 3185. An act for the relief of George Lassila, administrator of the estate of Senia Lassila;

H. R. 3454. An act for the relief of William Clyde McKinney;

H. R. 4160. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto;

H. R. 4419. An act for the relief of Mrs. James Plumb;

H. R. 4983. An act to provide for adjustment in connection with the Crow Irrigation project, Crow Indian Reservation, Mont.;

H. R. 4997. An act for the relief of Ernest I. Wade and Alma Wade;

H. R. 5071. An act for the relief of Mrs. Dora Foster;

H. R. 5444. An act to revive and reenact and amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the county of Gallatin, State of Illinois, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near the city of Shawneetown, Gallatin County, Ill., to a point opposite thereto in the county of Union, State of Kentucky," approved July 18, 1939;

H. R. 5605. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6195. An act to amend section 1 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 751), entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands of the Crow Tribe, for the distribution of tribal funds, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of May 26, 1926 (44 Stat. 658);

H. R. 6265. An act to create a Department of Corrections in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 6393. An act to amend the act entitled "An act for the creation of an American Battle Monuments Commission to erect suitable memorials commemorating the services of the American soldier in Europe, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1923, as amended, in order to extend the Commission's authority to all areas in which our armed forces have operated during World War II, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6454. An act to amend the act approved July 3, 1943, entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of claims for damage to or loss or destruction of property or personal injury or death caused by military personnel or civilian employees, or otherwise incident to activities of the War Department or of the Army";

H. R. 6572. An act to provide military assistance to the Republic of the Philippines in establishing and maintaining national security and to form a basis for participation by that Government in such defensive military operations as the future may require;

H. R. 6601. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6699. An act to decrease the amount of obligations, issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, which may be outstanding at any one time; and

H. J. Res. 307. Joint resolution to authorize the use of naval vessels to determine the effect of atomic weapons upon such vessels.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6496, being the Navy Department appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6496) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Louisiana whether he desires to have the Senate continue with the consideration of the bill this afternoon.

Mr. OVERTON. I do not think there will be an opportunity to complete consideration of the bill today, unless we hold a late night session. There is one controversial item, and probably it will require an hour's debate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, could we consider the noncontroversial items today?

Mr. OVERTON. Such a course would be agreeable to me. It will not take long to consider the noncontroversial items.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am quite sure that the consideration of those items would not take long.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would expedite matters somewhat to do that, and then let the controversial item go over until tomorrow.

Mr. OVERTON. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I may say that in view of the necessity to pass all the appropriation bills and to dispose of other matters before the 30th of June, it may be necessary for the Senate to have an evening session tomorrow. I hope Senators will keep that in mind, if it becomes necessary to hold an evening session then. An evening session will not be urged unless one becomes necessary, let me say.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the naval appropriations bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the clerk will proceed to state the amendments of the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Naval Establishment—Title I—Office of the Secretary—Miscellaneous expenses," on page 3, line 2, after "(5 U. S. C. 118a)", to insert "special cost of living allowances for employees abroad"; and in line 25, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$13,205,000" and insert "$14,483,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingencies of the Navy", on page 4, line 11, after the figures "$100,000," to insert a comma and "of which $15,000 shall be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Naval Personnel—Training, education, and welfare, Navy," on page 7, line 17, after the figures "$8,136,000", to strike out the colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this Act shall be available for or on account of any expense incident to giving special educational courses or postgraduate instruction to officers with view to qualifying them or better qualifying them for the performance of duties required to be performed by or in pursuance of law by officers of the Supply Corps, the Corps of Civil Engineers, and officers assigned to engineering duty only, except present students and except such officers who are commissioned in such corps or have been assigned to engineering duty only."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Ships—Maintenance of Bureau of Ships," on page 11, line 20, after the word "craft", to insert "charter and hire of vessels for auxiliary purposes where considered necessary by the Secretary of the Navy"; and on page 12, line 15, after the word "Bureau", to strike out "$443,750,000" and insert "$446,750,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Ordnance—Ordnance and ordnance stores, Navy," on page 13, in line 3, after the word "developing", to insert "and for research incidental thereto,"; and in line 15, after the word "at", to strike out "four ordnance stations" and insert "Dahlgren, Va.; Indianhead, Md.; Hawthorne, Nev.; Inyokern, Calif.; and Solomons, Md."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, in line 18, after the amendment just above stated, to strike out "$246,390,000" and insert "$247,990,000, of which $350,000 shall be available for placing the equipment at the Naval Torpedo Station, Newport, R. I., in condition for operation"; and in line 21, after the amendment just above stated, to strike out the colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the manufacture, assembly, repair, or overhaul of torpedoes at the Naval Ordnance Plant, Forest Park, Ill."

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, that whole amendment, beginning with the comma after "$247,990,000", in line 18, should be passed over, because it is the controversial amendment in the bill which I understand is to go over until tomorrow. Is that correct?

Mr. OVERTON. I did not know it was in controversy. But if it is, it will go over. I did not know there was opposition to it.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Louisiana if the amendment just read includes the movement of the torpedo ordnance plants from the Newport, R. I., and the Keyport, Wash., stations.

Mr. OVERTON. It is the amendment on page 13, in line 18.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Senator from Rhode Island and I wish to say something on that item, and I wonder whether it should go over.

Mr. OVERTON. Yes; it should go over.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was under the heading "Bureau of Supplies and Accounts—Pay and subsistence of naval personnel," on page 18, line 6, after the word "advisable", to strike out "$500,000,000 from the naval stock fund" and insert "not to exceed $500,000,000 from the naval stock fund: Provided, That the cash working capital of the naval stock fund shall not be reduced below $100,000,000 as the result of such transfer."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 22, after line 17, to insert:

NAVAL PROCUREMENT FUND

For the purpose of settlement of war contracts under the Contract Settlement Act of 1944, and during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, advances by check or warrant and reimbursements to the Naval Procurement Fund from naval appropriations may be made on the basis of the estimated cost of a project without further accounting distribution of expenditures to the individual appropriations involved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Yards and Docks—Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks," on page 24, line 10, after the word "at", to strike out "navy yards" and insert "naval shipyards."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public works, Bureau of Yards and Docks," on page 25, line 17, after the word "personnel", to insert "in the Bureau of Yards and Docks)"; in line 18, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$83,000,000" and insert "$35,966,300"; in the same line, after the word "That", to insert "for obligations other than architectural or engineering contracts"; in line 20, after the word "than", to strike out "5" and insert "10"; and in line 22, after "Statutes", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for hospital construction: Provided further, That wherever there are architectural and engineering services in any State in which a project is located qualified to do the work, such services shall be utilized."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 8, after the word "personnel", to insert "in the Bureau of Yards and Docks)"; and in line 9, after the figures $60,052,000", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That all of the foregoing amount may be expended without regard to the provisions of section 3709, Revised Statutes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 15, to insert:

In all, $96,018,300, to remain available until expended, and the money herein specifically appropriated for public works and public utilities shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law and shall constitute one fund: Provided, That this fund shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred under the provisions of section 3 of the act approved April 25, 1939 (53 Stat. 591).

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "General provisions," in section 104, page 39, line 19, after the word "work", to insert "unless representatives of the employees are given the opportunity to check any such time studies as may affect the amount of work asked of them and to protest under the established grievance procedure any work requirements believed unreasonable"; and on page 40, line 10, after the word "Government", to strike out "navy yards" and insert "naval shipyards."

Mr. OVERTON. I understand this to be a controversial item. Perhaps it should be passed over.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 2, to strike out section 109, as follows:

SEC. 109. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 109. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I think there will be some discussion of this amendment. Will the Senator from Louisiana ask that it be passed over?

Mr. OVERTON. It may be controversial, but I did not understand that it would be. The same provision has been inserted in the agricultural appropriations bill.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I understand that, Mr. President. I did not know, however that it had been incorporated in the Navy bill. It is the first time that such a provision has been included in the Navy appropriations bill. It is practically the same matter as that which we discussed in connection with labor bills which have been before the Senate. I know that there are three or four Senators who would like to have an opportunity to discuss the amendment.

Mr. OVERTON. The same provision was agreed to a few minutes ago in the Department of the Interior appropriations bill. I believe that it has been included in all appropriations bills which have been heretofore considered by the Senate.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I have had no opportunity to read it. I should like to have an opportunity to read and study it. I may have no objection to it whatever.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over.

The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, in section 115, page 47, line 18, after the word "employ", to insert "at the seat of government and elsewhere."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 23, to strike out section 119, as follows:

SEC. 119. None of the funds appropriated for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, shall be available for any expense whatsoever attendant upon the maintenance of any property, material, or equipment after a formal declaration has been issued by the Navy Department declaring any such property, material, or equipment surplus to the needs of the Navy Department and vesting title of any such property in any surplus disposal agency of the Government: Provided, That this limitation shall not be held to apply if any governmental surplus disposal agency shall reimburse the particular appropriation account of the Navy Department from which any such expense would, save for the foregoing limitation, normally be paid, for the expense involved in the maintenance of any such property, material, or equipment after title thereto has been transferred to any such governmental surplus disposal agency by declaration of surplus.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 119. None of the funds appropriated in this act for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, other than funds for which reimbursement is made hereunder, shall be available for any expenses (including the pay, allowances, and subsistence of naval and Marine Corps personnel) for care, upkeep, repair, handling, and assistance in the sale of any property, material, or equipment subsequent to the date of a declaration of surplus covering such property to a disposal agency, or, if procedures are prescribed whereby declarations of surplus are made at approximately the time of disposal or removal, subsequent to the date of notice by the owning agency to the disposal agency that property has been determined to be surplus and is subject to such procedures. With respect to all such expenses, disposal agencies shall provide reimbursement to the Navy Department, for credit to the appropriations from which such expenses would be normally paid: Provided, That advance payments based on the estimated expenses of the Navy Department may be made by any disposal agency: Provided further, That in lieu of ascertaining the direct expenses and the applicable portion of the indirect expenses, the Navy Department and the disposal agencies may agree on any basis for determining such expenses as will equitably accomplish the purpose of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 15, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 120. The Secretary of the Navy may delegate to the commandants of the naval districts, for administration within their respective districts, his authority (1) to employ persons in the departmental service of the Navy Department, wherever located, and (2) to authorize payment of the expenses of the transfer of household goods of employees, and of the costs of transportation of their immediate families on change from one official duty station to another.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II—War Shipping Administration," in section 202, page 56, line 12, after the word "liquidation" to strike out "by December 31, 1946" and insert "as hereinafter provided", and in line 17, after the numerals "1946" to strike out "and continuing only during the period ending December 31, 1946."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, may I ask the distinguished Senator from Louisiana a question? There were several bills pending in the Naval Affairs Committee on problems of education with respect to the Navy. By a hasty examination I cannot ascertain how they are handled in this bill. Can the Senator enlighten me?

Mr. OVERTON. There is a provision in the bill authorizing the Bureau of Ordnance to establish schools in isolated places where projects are under way, so that the children of parents who are working on the projects will be able to obtain proper schooling.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I have in mind, Mr. President, the question of a new naval college on the west coast, the naval academy at Newport, and the graduate school at Annapolis.

Mr. OVERTON. Nothing is contained in the bill relative to those institutions.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment, in line 17, on page 56, after the word "effective", to strike out the words "July 1, 1946" and insert in lieu thereof "October 1, 1946." I can offer that amendment now or offer it later.

Mr. OVERTON. If the Senator will withhold his amendment until we complete consideration of the committee amendments, he may offer it then.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 9, after the word "fund", to strike out the comma and "as of the close of business on December 31, 1946", and in line 11, after the word "Treasury", to insert "not later than the close of business on March 1, 1947."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments. Does the Senator from Connecticut now wish to offer his amendment?

Mr. HART. I will offer it later, Mr. President.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, consideration of the bill will not be completed today, so if the Senator wishes to offer his amendment tomorrow, he may do so then. However, there is a disposition to dispose today of all noncontroversial amendments to the bill.

Mr. HART. I do not know whether there will be much controversy about the amendment which I wish to offer.

Mr. OVERTON. Personally, I am willing to accept it. Will the Senator state the amendment?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator state his amendment?

Mr. HART. Mr. President, on page 56, in line 17, after the word "effective", I move to strike out "July 1," and insert "October 1,". The effect of the amendment would be to delay by 3 months the date on which the functions of the War Shipping Administration would be transferred. The amendment is in the interest of smoother administration. The Maritime Commission is undergoing the process of reorganization under a new chairman. The change which I have suggested was recommended through the President some months ago by the Maritime Commission then in office. However, no preparations were instituted by the administration which was then in power, and it has now been found that it will be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to make the necessary change in the short time which remains. The amendment would involve no change in funds whatever. It would merely continue for an additional 3 months the situation which now exists, and would permit the Maritime Commission to get ready for the change.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment. I should like to have the clerk read into the record a letter addressed to me by Mr. John W. Snyder, Director of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF WAR MOBILIZATION AND RECONVERSION,
Washington, D. C., June 20, 1946.

Hon. JOHN H. OVERTON,
Chairman, Navy Department Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR OVERTON: Section 202 of the bill, H. R. 6496, making appropriations for the Navy Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, now pending on the Senate calendar, provides for the transfer of all the functions, powers, and duties of the War Shipping Administration to the Maritime Commission on June 30, 1946, and the termination of the existence of the War Shipping Administration on July 1, 1946.

I recommend that the date of September 30, 1946, be substituted for the date July 1 1946, in order to provide reasonable opportunity to properly meet many problems which face the War Shipping Administration and the Maritime Commission, to afford the time necessary for perfecting an organization which would permit the Maritime Commission to absorb and liquidate the functions of the War Shipping Administration, and in the interest of good administration and orderly liquidation of merged activities.

My recommendation does not make any increase in the funds or appropriations for the Maritime Commission or the War Shipping Administration, nor does it make any change in the requirement of section 202 that unobligated balances of the War Shipping Administration revolving fund be covered into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury not later than the close of business on March 1, 1947.

This recommendation is made after consultation with the chairman of the Maritime Commission, the War Shipping Administrator, and representatives of the Bureau of the Budget, all of whom concur therein.

Sincerely,

JOHN W. SNYDER,
Director.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, in view of the statements which are contained in the letter just read by the clerk, I modify my amendment so as to read "September 30," instead of "October 1."

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut on page 56, in line 17, after the word "effective", to strike out "July 1," and insert "September 30."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, on page 57, in line 3, "July 1" appears twice. It should also be changed in accordance with the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will make the change.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question. The Senator from Louisiana is familiar with the situation which exists in connection with Alaskan shipping. The committee amendment on page 57, in line 11, which has been agreed to, would allow the Maritime Commission, if it so desired, to continue operating the Alaskan trade until March 1, 1947.

Mr. OVERTON. It is my understanding that they can do that. They are in liquidation until March 1, 1947, and they can operate the ships.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Up to that point.

Mr. OVERTON. To Alaskan ports; yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I merely wish to say for the RECORD, so that this amendment will be understood, that the situation in the Alaskan trade, as I have reiterated to the Senate on many occasions, is still deplorable, mainly because of the fact that the surplus ships are not adaptable to the Alaskan trade. The Alaskan fleet is old, and there now exists before the Maritime Commission a rate case in which the operators contend that without further increases in rates, which are now excessive to Alaska, they cannot operate the ships. This rate case will take some time, hearings must be held in Alaska and other places, and in the meantime the operators do not want the ships back. Until the matter is settled, and without completely tying up the whole Alaskan trade, on which all Alaskans rely for food, medicine, and all other supplies, it is deemed desirable for the War Shipping Administration in this case to continue operating that particular shipping to Alaska until March 1, 1947.

We suggested to the committee, and it was also suggested by the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of the House unanimously, that the date be put over until June 30, 1947, so that we would be sure we were through and had the matter settled one way or the other, but the Senate committee decided on March 1, 1947, and I am sure that if on March 1 we are not through with this matter, and the War Shipping Administration makes a recommendation, we may come back to the committee and ask for a further extension.

Mr. OVERTON. The main purpose of specifying the March date, in place of the date contained in the bill, December 31, is in order that the War Shipping Administration may continue the Alaskan trade. If during January and February it is found that there is some difficulty, I think Congress will take cognizance of that fact, and will undertake to relieve the situation. I hope so.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That concludes the amendments of the committee.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, there is one amendment I wish to offer on page 23, line 16, after the word "Secretary," to insert the words "purchase of uniforms for guards at the Naval Hospital Medical Center, Bethesda, Md."

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 23, line 16, after the word "Secretary," it is proposed to insert the words "purchase of uniforms for guards at the Naval Hospital Medical Center, Bethesda, Md."

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to provide uniforms for the guards at the Naval Hospital at Bethesda. They are provided for all other guards, and by some oversight the guards at the naval hospital were overlooked.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over until tomorrow for the consideration of other amendments.

RESOLUTIONS RELATING TO ITALY, ADOPTED AT THE FIFTEENTH BIENNIAL CONVENTION, AMALGAMATED CLOTHING WORKERS OF AMERICA

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD copy of a resolution relating to Italy adopted at the fifteenth biennial convention of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. Among other things, the resolution urges the Government of the United States to grant long-term loans or credits to Italy in order that it may secure the raw materials and other basic economic necessities which it requires for the rehabilitation of its industry and agriculture and to give employment to its people.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1. The Big Four are now meeting in Paris to frame a peace treaty for the Italian Nation;

2. With the assistance of the Allied armies, the Italian people overthrew their Fascist oppressors and, since the 1943 armistice, have given great aid and assistance in the successful conclusion of hostilities against the Fascist and Nazis and have thereby earned the right to treatment as an ally and not as an enemy;

3. The Italian people require assistance in rebuilding their destroyed economy in order to put an end to their present privation and suffering and place the Nation on a stable political and economic basis;

4. Many agencies, including the Free Italy American Labor Council, have collected funds, clothing, and food to relieve the hunger and destitution of the Italian people;

Resolved, That the fifteenth biennial convention of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America:

1. Urges the Government of the United States to use its good offices in the pending discussions of the Italian peace treaty to the end that the Italian Nation be treated without vengeance in accordance with the principles of the Atlantic Charter, and that it be admitted into the family of free nations;

2. Urges the Government of the United States to grant long-term loans or credits to Italy in order that it may secure the raw materials and other basic economic necessities which it requires for the rehabilitation of its industry and agriculture and to give employment to its people; and

3. Urges full support to the work of agencies and trade-unions which are furnishing relief to the Italian people and asks the membership of the Amalgamated to continue their excellent work in this cause.

ANNIVERSARY OF NATIONAL FOOD AND DRUGS LAW

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a telegram addressed to me and a letter addressed to the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], both from Mr. Charles Wesley Dunn, chairman of the section on food, drug, and cosmetic law of the New York State Bar Association. The communications refer to the fortieth anniversary of the original Federal Food and Drugs Act of 1906.

There is also included a final program draft of May 27 with reference to a meeting to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of the original Federal Food and Drugs Act of 1906, to be held in New York City on June 25, 1946.

This was sent to the Senator from North Carolina, who happens to be absent for a time recovering from a recent illness, and at his instance, and also at the instance of the Honorable CLARENCE F. LEA, chairman of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I am asking to have these matters inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 18, 1946.

Hon. JAMES M. MEAD,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

You have received from Senator BAILEY'S office and Chairman LEA of House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. Will communicate with you about important joint statement for incorporation in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on fortieth anniversary of original national food and drug law, which will be commemorated at historic meeting in New York City on June 25 next. This meeting is held under auspices of bar association committee of which I am chairman, and will include notable public session sponsored by leading national consumer organizations headed by General Federation of Women's Clubs and National League of Women Voters. I submitted this statement with approval of Federal Commissioner of Food and Drugs, and we shall deeply appreciate your joining Mr. LEA in placing this statement in RECORD early this week in order that it may be duly read at June 25 meeting following presentation of commemoration letter by President Truman. My letter to Senator BAILEY fully explains why this joint action is appropriate congressional action and important public service.

CHARLES WESLEY DUNN.

NEW YORK STATE BAR ASSOCIATION,
SECTION ON FOOD, DRUG, AND COSMETIC LAW,
New York, June 11, 1946.

Hon. JOSIAH W. BAILEY,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BAILEY: June 30 next is the fortieth anniversary of the original Federal Food and Drugs Act of 1906; and there will be an important meeting in New York City to commemorate this anniversary, on June 25. That meeting will be held under the auspices of this section, representing the American Bar; and I enclose the distinguished program for it, which explains its great historic significance. You will note that the speakers include the Federal Security Administrator, the Federal Commissioner of Foods and Drugs, the Solicitor General of the United States (representing the Attorney General), the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the senior judge of the United States District Court here; and that leading public organizations will sponsor the third climactic session, headed by the General Federation of Women's Clubs and the National League of Women Voters. Furthermore, outstanding executives in the food, drug, and cosmetic industries will take an important part in this meeting. In short, it will be a truly national meeting of a most distinguished character; and commemoration letters will be read from President Truman and members of his Cabinet and other high officials.

It is appropriate that Congress should take notice of this historic anniversary and the meeting to commemorate it. Therefore I attach a draft statement thereon, which I respectfully suggest that you place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as Chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce. For that committee was the Senate sponsor of the succeeding Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act of 1938; and I may add that it was the Senate Committee on Manufactures which led in the enactment of the oringinal 1906 act. I submit this statement to you with the approval of the Food and Drug Administration; but I note that it was drafted by me. You can rely on its statements.

I am writing a parallel letter to Representative CLARENCE F. LEA, Chairman of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. For that committee sponsored the House passage of both the original 1906 act and the succeeding 1938 act. We shall be deeply grateful to you for this valuable public service; and we sincerely hope that you can and will place this statement in the RECORD, at an early date.

Will you kindly wire me at my expense whether and when this has been done, in order that I may refer to this important fact at that historic meeting, over which I shall preside in large part.

I remain, with esteem and best wishes,
Cordially and faithfully yours,
CHARLES WESLEY DUNN,
Chairman.

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ORIGINAL FEDERAL FOOD AND DRUGS ACT OF 1906

June 30 next is the fortieth anniversary of the original Federal Food and Drugs Act of 1906. This anniversary of that great act is an historic milestone in the legislative, social, and economic progress of our country. Therefore, it invites appropriate recognition by the Congress; and it will be duly commemorated at a national meeting in New York City, on June 25, with a distinguished program.

The historic significance of this anniversary may be explained as follows: The Federal Food and Drugs Act of 1906 was our first national food and drug law, in a basic sense; and it was a fundamental law of the land. For it had profound social and economic consequences in protecting the public health and improving the food and drug order; and it led to the succeeding Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act of 1933, which is acclaimed as the strongest national law on its subject now in existence. That act broadly prohibits the adulteration and misbranding of these products; and it is supplemented by a prohibition of their false advertisement in the Federal Trade Commission Act. Therefore and in short: The original 1906 act instituted our national food, drug, and cosmetic law, which ordains that its products shall be safe and fit for use, true and valuable in composition, and marketed on the basis of an informing label and freedom from any misrepresentation whatsoever. A statement having the force that such products include the primary articles essential to the life and health of man.

In so directing attention to this historic anniversary, it should be added: The Federal Food and Drugs Act of 1906 was enacted on the recommendation of President Theodore Roosevelt; and as a result of the long crusade by Dr. Harvey W. Wiley for a national pure food and drug law, which extended over a period of 20 years and more. Consequently he is justly called the founder of that great act. Dr. Wiley became Chief Chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture in 1883; he was first Chief of its Division of Chemistry; and then Chief of its Bureau of Chemistry. Under his direction the Department made a long series of investigations into food and drug adulteration, which disclosed the great need for a national law to prevent it. Thereupon he instituted an aggressive, unceasing, and far-reaching educational campaign for such a law; it was powerfully supported by national consumer, agricultural, industrial and trade organizations; and its enactment was ably sponsored by leaders in Congress, who included Senators Paddock, Faulkner, Mason, Hansbrough, McCumber, and Heyburn and Representatives Hatch, Brosius, Hepburn, and Mann. The public support for this law thus developed was so strong that Congress finally passed the Heyburn bill for the 1906 act, by overwhelming majorities in each branch. Then Dr. Wiley administered this act, as Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry and under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, until he resigned in 1912. The Bureau of Chemistry was eventually succeeded by the Food and Drug Administration in the administration of this act; and the latter was subsequently transferred to the Federal Security Agency. Thus it is clear that Dr. Wiley devoted the major part of his life to securing and administering the original 1906 act; and in doing so he was a great pioneer in pure food and drug legislation in this country.

The Food and Drug Administration well administered the Federal Food and Drugs Act of 1906 and has well administered the succeeding Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act of 1938. The food industry of this country recently paid a striking tribute to the Administration, when the leading association in that industry presented an award of distinction to it. For its administration of that law was then characterized as "a model of Federal law administration, for efficiency, fairness, and due regard for the welfare of all concerned"; and the Administration was congratulated "on its long record of notable public service in the field of food."

MEETING TO COMMEMORATE FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ORIGINAL FEDERAL FOOD AND DRUGS ACT OF 1906, TO BE HELD IN NEW YORK CITY ON JUNE 25, 1946

The Federal Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, as amended, was a fundamental law of great historic importance. For it was our first national food and drug law, in a basic sense; it had a profound social and economic significance, for protection of the public health and improvement in the food and drug order; and it was strongly revised in the modern Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act of June 25, 1938, as amended. That act broadly prohibits the adulteration and misbranding of these products; and it is supplemented by a prohibition of their false advertisement in the Federal Trade Commission Act. Therefore and in short: The 1906 act instituted our existing national food, drug, and cosmetic law, which ordains that its products shall be safe and fit for use, true and valuable in composition, and sold on the basis of an informing label and freedom from any misrepresentation whatsoever—a statement having the force that such products include the primary articles essential to the life and health of man.

This meeting to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of the original 1906 act is manifestly indicated, because that event is a historic landmark in the social and economic progress of our country. It is also designed to discuss the basic significance of the national food, drug, and cosmetic law, which the aforesaid act instituted; and to make an appropriate public tribute to this law. And it will undoubtedly be the most important meeting yet held on such law. Consequently the proceedings of this meeting will be published in a special commemoration book, as well as in the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Law Quarterly, for general dissemination and permanent record. Moreover, they will be broadcast by radio, to the available extent.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of the Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. OVERTON, from the Committee on Commerce:

Sundry employees for appointment in the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

By Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance:

John R. Steelman, of Alabama, to be Director of War Mobilization and Reconversion for a term of 2 years, vice John W. Snyder, resigned; and

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

THE ARMY—GEN. MARK CLARK

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, the Thirty-sixth Division Association of Texas has charged before the House Military Affairs Committee and the Senate Committee on Military Affairs that Gen. Mark Clark is not competent to hold the position of commander of troops which he now holds, and they protest his promotion.

Their opinion is that of military men who state that in the Rapido River fiasco General Clark violated the fundamental ABC's of military tactics. Some other military men in high position agree, and some disagree with the opinion of the men of the Thirty-sixth Division Association.
